"FORBIDDEN FRUIT"

TO those aspects of modern life of which he is admittedly the greatest master, Cecil B. DeMille has again turned for material, and the result is a drama of love and marriage that excels, in strength of story, in acting, in wealth of production, and in living, breathing humanness, both "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?"

What's in Store for Motion Picture Exhibitors the Next Twelve Months?

Great Things

PARAMOUNT PICTURES will outdazzle even their own shining past.

And figure what that past has been in the past year alone!

Think of the Cosmopolitan Production "Humoresque" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Something to Think About"; of Thomas Meighan's "The Prince Chap," a William DeMille production, and "Civilian Clothes," a Hugh Ford production.

Think of William S. Hart in "The Testing Block" and "The Cradle of Courage" and "Sand"!

These are all PARAMOUNT PICTURES.

So is George Fitzmaurice's production "On With the Dance." And Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" and Wallace Reid in "What's Your Hurry?"

Who brought the immortal "Huckleberry Finn" to the screen? PARAMOUNT—it was a William D. Taylor production.

Think of Maurice Tourneur's "Treasure Island." That's a PARAMOUNT PICTURE.

Think of George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," released a year ago and still drawing crowded houses! PARAMOUNT again.

Depend on it, a PARAMOUNT PICTURE is always the best of its kind.

And you would know why if you realized the colossal resources behind PARAMOUNT.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES are supreme the world over.

In South America a great motion picture popularity contest was recently conducted. PARAMOUNT won with twice as many votes as the next competitor.

The largest motion picture studio in Great Britain is a PARAMOUNT studio. PARAMOUNT PICTURES are shown all over the British Isles, and all over the British Empire.

The demand for PARAMOUNT PICTURES in Asia is so great that a studio has been erected in Bombay, and an Indian Paramount Company formed.

In the whole history of entertainment there has been no success like PARAMOUNT.

The gladiators' contests in ancient Rome, the great bull fights of Spain, the out-door carnivals of Italy, all labored under the disadvantage that they could be seen by only a few thousand people at one time.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES are seen by millions throughout the world, simultaneously.

And all this vast extension of organization behind PARAMOUNT is based on one thing—the greatness of the pictures themselves, their sheer magnificence and luxury, their human touch, the rich red blood that pulses through them!

Consult the list here for PARAMOUNT PICTURES coming in 1921.

"THE LOVE LIGHT"

Written and Directed by Frances Marion
Photographed by Charles Rosher and Henry Cronjager

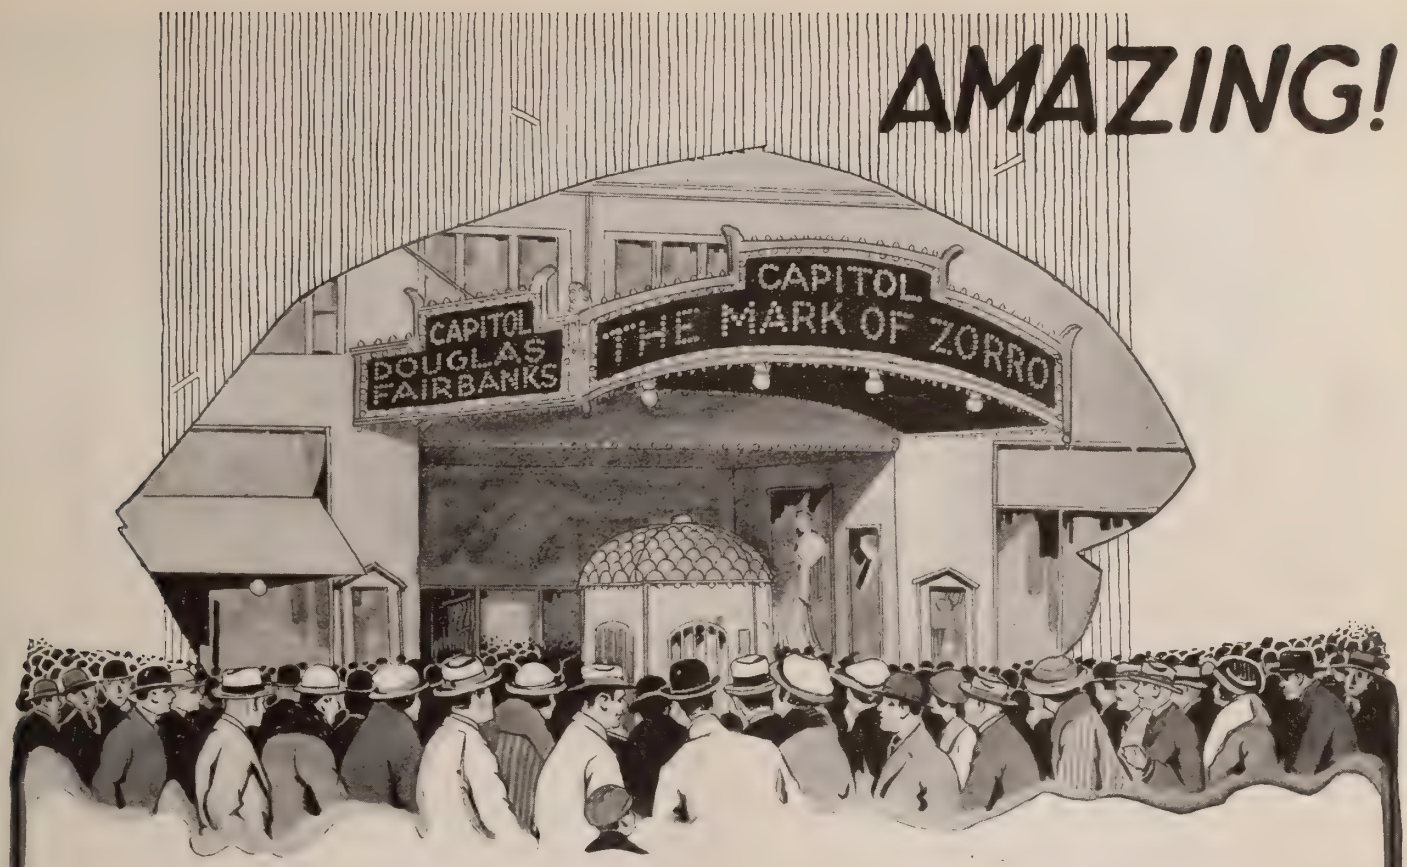
The untold millions who love Mary Pickford for all the sweetness and happiness that she has brought into their lives will hail "The Love Light" as a great picture—perhaps the greatest of all the wonderful Mary Pickford productions.

Miss Pickford has never screened so beautifully, nor has her exquisite talent ever been offered greater scope.

The story, now rich in humor and now tense in its hold on the heart, could stand alone as a splendid offering, but with the beauty and art of Mary Pickford it should prove an overwhelming box-office triumph.

NOTE



This is not the usual "blind" advertisement written without the opportunity of an actual view of the picture The man who wrote this advertisement went to California for the specific purpose of pre-viewing "The Love Light" and this is a sincere expression of his opinion

"The Mark of Zorro"

From the "All Story Weekly" Novel "The Curse of Capistrano" by Johnston Mc Culley
Directed by Fred Niblo.

The World's Record

We thought we realized the incomparable popularity and box-office value of Douglas Fairbanks; we felt that his new production "The Mark of Zorro" was indeed a great picture but we were unprepared for the amazing demonstrations that are taking place wherever the picture is being shown.

For example, in one week's showing, the Capitol Theatre, New York, established a world's record with "The Mark of Zorro" by playing to 94,501 admissions and a box-office total of $48,103.43.

Attention Mr. G. A. Hager, Mgr.

Gentlemen:

On October 27-28th we used your subject THE DEVIL'S PASS KEY for a two days run. We did a very excellent business on this subject and want to say that it surely pleased our patrons immensely. Frankly, this is one of the best subjects we have used in our house for an age. From the standpoint of art, photography, excellent settings and a story that is really worth while, I consider it immense. Surely you cannot say too much about this subject, and I want to recommend it very highly to all exhibitors. It is one of the very few big pictures we have had during the past season.

Very truly yours,

"THE LURE OF CROONING WATER"

From the Novel by Marion Hill
Featuring Ivy Duke and Guy Newall

It's a story of the stage, of midnight suppers and nerve racking life, and of green fields and the charm of the country; of an actress who under the spell of rural surroundings falls in love with a married man, only to repel him when her persistence breaks down his reserve.

Unconsciously the Woman has fallen in love with an Ideal----with a Man who not only utterly disregards her but who seemingly is insensible of proved feminine charms, one whose indifference she interprets as devotion to honor, home and fidelity

The infatuation lasts only so long as he is cold to her, so long as he is not like other men she has known. When he yields he becomes in her eyes common clay, the halo that surrounds him "fades into thin air", and her faulty outlook is instantly righted

So she sends him back to the Greater Woman, his fellow toiler, the Mother: "He is your man, I haven't harmed him"

Exploitation Hitherto Unapproached

THE exhibitor who attempts to get business with unknown players is in the same position as the merchant who undertakes to sell unadvertised goods.

He must either spend so much money in local advertising that his profits are wiped out—or else see his competitor monopolize the trade with advertised goods.

The druggist doesn't advertise Coca-Cola. He doesn't have to. That is done for him by the Coco-Cola Company.

The unapproached exploitation of the Independent Films Association has created a market for its product in the same way—and the exhibitor booking through its member independent exchanges secures ADVERTISED GOODS for which a demand has already been created.

Secure bookings through the exchanges having membership in the Independent Films Association—they handle only brand-new ADVERTISED productions.

PARKING FANNY
(A Parable)

There was once an exhibitor who had a goat named Fanny.

The exhibitor used to park his Fanny around the film exchanges run by the hired men of the New York Film Czars.

New York heard Fanny was growing plump—so the order went out to the hired men, "Cut down on Fanny' feed—keep more for ourselves."

The exhibitor noticed how lean Fanny was getting, so he looked about and found plenty of fodder around the independent exchanges. Furthermore, he was told he could park his Fanny there as often as he pleased.

When the Czars saw this, they wired their hired men, "Get the exhibitor's goat."

But it was too late. The exhibitor now parks his Fanny around the Independent Exchanges—and she is gaining weight rapidly.

The Meaning of a Symbol

POSSIBLY you have noticed the modest signature-initial affixed on that attractive advertisement of a recent release—or below a graphic scene-cut—or on the cover of a press book that couldn't be laid aside!

Although unpretentious in size, it possesses TREMENDOUS import to the Moving Picture Industry!

The symbol "M. A." means PUSH, PROMOTION, PREDOMINANT PUBLICITY and PROFITS PLUS!

It has become the sign of ULTRA-EXPLOITATION and the stamp signifying of PROFITS for Producer, Exchange Man and Exhibitor alike.

When you see the symbol "M. A." you know that the MASTER ADVERTISERS have been called into play.

When they interpret the producer's ideas and join their own to his advertising campaign, there can be only one answer—RESULTS PLUS!

One result—they set the sky afire with "SKYFIRE," Neal Hart's super-successful feature! They were chosen to exploit it because the producers and exhibitors had confidence in them inspired by their previous, result-getting work.

Get a copy of the "SKYFIRE" press book or any other bearing the "M. A." symbol and see how the exciting episodes, heart-throbs and climaxes of the features are connected by the MASTER ADVERTISERS with ideas that put the pictures over BIG!

The MASTER ADVERTISERS are eager to strip for action on other campaigns!

Their backing boosts bank accounts!

Gentlemen: Attertion: Mr. Zierler

I have just finished seeing Dolores Cassinelli in the "Hidden Light" for the third time, and I like it better and am more impressed with it every time I see it.

At our last exhibition we showed this feature to some of the most prominent exhibitors in the city, and they were so impressed with it that they asked us to be sure and let them know when we are going to show it again, as they would like to see it once more, and when you get "hard boiled" exhibitors to ask that - you've got some picture.

We have a winner in this picture and you can rest assured that we are not going to hide the "Hidden Light" under a bushel basket.

This is an Age of Specialization—

Hereafter Special Pictures will Specialize on Production Only

Believing that this is the day of specialists and that all things have grown out of concentrated effort along one specific line, the Special Pictures Corporation has determined to center its energies on the production of the best in the short reel field.

Hereafter the distribution of the Special Pictures Corporation product will be handled by the Federated Film Exchanges of America listed on the page opposite.

This move was made in the belief that there are too many exchange systems in the business resulting in lost motion, duplication of effort and added costs to the exhibitor. If by consolidation and elimination we can preserve and make bigger an organization that is on the right track of fair dealing with the theatre owner, we believe we have made a good move.

Under this belief we chose the Federated Film Exchanges for the distribution of our product because of the fact that each exchange is an independently owned exchange affiliated with the national organization and that its head is the owner and not a branch manager working merely for a salary.

Federated will handle our entire output, the Comiclassics, the Chester Conklin Comedies, Ford Sterling Comedies, Louise Fazenda Fun Tests, the Milburne Moranti Comedies, the Clayplay Comedies in Mud, the Sunset-Burrud Scenics and the Comedyart Productions.

Assuring you of bigger, better short reel features for 1921 and believing we have made a move of mutual benefit to ourselves and the exhibitor of the entire country, we remain,

ACT — Youngers' Last Stand

"A tangled mass of riotous color, clouds of dust, clanking spurs, roughly clad, weather-beaten men with hard, firm-set faces, mounted upon pitching, lunging horses. Danger. Thrills. The greatest exhibition and nearest authentic, realistic production of the Old West I have seen in a generation."

WALTER CORCORAN.

ACT — Silver Pac Train Episode an Quantrell's Cam

"Men and women boo and spurred, eyes and g flashing — hair-raising uations, blanketed Indi of the Pueblos, dare-de stunts by native Mexic of the plains. Setting: snow-capped mounta of the Sangre de Chri range. Only one wo could adequately expr my thoughts as I sto there spellbound witn ing a sight, the equal which, I never expect see again—marvelous."

Warning to Exhibitors

Taking advantage of the National advertising campaign the Mesco Pictures Corporation is putting back of the production, "Jesse James Under the Black Flag," competitors are now showing and attempting to sell State Rights to an antiquated picture called "The James Boys In Missouri", "The Life of Jesse James" or by a similar name. The picture they are showing was made about ten years ago with the direction and characterization in vogue at that time. It was withdrawn from the market for years, and is now being revived apparently for no reason except to gather big profits from the publicity our production has gained.

JESSE JAMES, Jr., Says: "Unauthorized persons are now showing moving pictures supposed to portray the life of my father, Jesse James. The only true history ever written of my father's life, entitled, 'Jesse James Under the Black Flag', is in the hands of the Mesco Pictures Corporation of Kansas City, Missouri, and is now being reenacted for production. This story portrays facts that have never before been revealed. It has been rewritten for pictures and is being directed by FRANKLIN B. COATES for Mesco Pictures Corporation. It is an authentic, gigantic, thrilling, spectacular production.

"I feel sure the fair-minded exhibitor will not mistake an old, worn-out picture for the super-production we are engaged upon. Look for the sign of the genuine:

Mesco Pictures CORPORATION

State Right buyers can arrange now for the only picture authorized by me of my father's life—'Jesse James Under the Black Flag', by communicating with Mesco Pictures Corporation, 207 Sheidley Building, Kansas City, Mo."

Respectfully,

Jesse James Jr

MACK SENNETT

Presents HIS 6-PART COMEDY-DRAMA

"A SMALL TOWN IDOL"

Mack Sennett has never made anything so stupendous as this before and neither has anyone else /.

MACK SENNETT'S

"A Small Town Idol"

[A Plot Glorified With Girls]

It takes a youth, removes him, innocent, but in disgrace, from his small town home; it sets him adrift in a great city, gives him a job in a motion picture studio and a leading woman to adore; it releases the tongue of slander at home and breaks the heart of his trusting country girl; it restores him as a mighty screen hero of a Western melodrama and composes all his difficulties in a romance of tender beauty. All this is garlanded with a thousand girls of typical Sennett beauty perfections. Such, in faint, inadequate synopsis, is this latest six-reel achievement from the hands of the maker of "Mickey."

MACK SENNETT

The Comedy King has come by his title by virtue of the default of competitors. There is only one Mack Sennett. Beginning with the first rays of light projected through Biograph film and continuing in the van of picture making, Mack Sennett is a figure unique. It isn't accurate to say that "he grew up with the business;" the business grew up with him, and now in the full stature of a matured perfection, he appears for the first time as a producer distributing through his own releasing agency — Associated Producers. Signalizing this epochal event is a production, "A SMALL TOWN IDOL," that is the last word—the ultimate expression—of a genius for devising drama in pictures, riotious comedy in motion and realized visions of extravagant beauty.

Motion Picture News

One feels inclined to place a gold seal opposite Allan Dwan's name in his first production for Associated Producers. "The Forbidden Thing," which he adapted and directed from Mary Mears' vivid and vital story of a "faith that would not die," will certainly be classified among the top-notchers. He has constructed the feature in narrative form and has placed remarkable emphasis upon its rugged simplicity. The tale is peopled with figures who are actually life-like—whose joys and sorrows are touched upon with genuine feeling. It is dramatic to the core—but not the drama of the theatre, but of life.

Moving Picture World

"The Forbidden Thing," an Allan Dwan production, while sentimental and dramatic, is quite out of the ordinary in plot and should touch the right spot in the public's heart. There is something about it that makes you like it in spite of the rather drawn-out story. The lives of the principal characters are tangled into an almost unravelable skein, and that, of course, makes you eager to see "how it is going to come out."

Exhibitors' Trade Review

"The Forbidden Thing," Allan Dwan's initial contribution to the Associated Producers, Inc., program, is a life drama, conceived and executed on the highest plane and with excellent artistry. Sat in humble surroundings, and wrought out by very human characters, it is a picture play that will attract and hold wide attention because of the lesson it teaches. It is a story of a love that lives—a faith that nothing can blast, and because the good and the bad in men and women work at cross-purposes, the tragic element enters but never dominates. . . . Mr. Dwan displays a fine sense of proportion in assigning the best available players for his roles. For instance, what is there that operates against this cast being referred as as "an all-star cast?"

Exhibitors' Herald

For whatever success "The Forbidden Thing" achieves, the credit is largely due to Allan Dwan. He has done so well with a story that has been told before that the repetition will doubtless be found generally enjoyable.

Wid's

. . . Dwan has turned out an unusually fine production, with excellent photography, mastery of detail, and while the killing off of the wife may be unnecessary, the average audience will probably not find this materially objectionable. The entire cast is excellent and well fitted.

Letter from Tom Moore, Garden Theatre, Washington, D. C.

"The Forbidden Thing" has lived up to its remarkable Sunday opening, when, in the face of the rainy weather, it did within $15.25 of the year's record. An unusual opening does not always guarantee an unusual week, but "The Forbidden Thing" has done such a steady business that we are holding it over for a second week. While exhibitors can get specials of such quality, they need not fear control of their programs by any interests at any time.

Cleveland News Leader

"The Luck of the Irish," with Anna Q. Nilsson and James Kirkwood, produced by Allan Dwan, reminds one of the great love stories of the past.

Moving Picture World

"In the Heart of a Fool" is unlike the thrilling adventure stories with which Mr. Dwan's name has been associated in the past. Into the story are woven three separate romances culminating in a striking dramatic climax. Mr. Dwan's artistic perception is evidenced in lavishly mounted interior settings. The cast assembled by Dwan is strong.

Wire from A. H. Blank, Rialto Theatre, Omaha.

"In the Heart of a Fool" opened a week's engagement at the Rialto Sunday and has broken all house records so far. Monday crowd got beyond control. Swept down the aisles and filled every available inch of space, both upstairs and down, and conservative estimate places number of people in the theatre at one time at forty-one hundred. The Rialto has only twenty-six hundred seats. My heartiest congratulations.

Indianapolis Star

Allan Dwan, whose production of the McGrath story, "A Splendid Hazard," had its premiere at the Circle theatre this week, is a producer who would probably not boast that he "makes stars," which is of absolutely no consequence to any one except to the prospective stars, but he could with reason boast that he makes the best possible use of those talents for acting which the screen has so far developed. The photography is excellent and the settings characteristic of this intelligent and skillful producer.

Wire from S. Barrett McCormick, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.

Allan Dwan production of "Splendid Hazard" at premiere presentation Circle theatre this week accepted by press reviewers and audience as one of the high lights of screen art. Dwan's masterful direction of the fascinating story which combines all elements of audience appeal assures its financial success. Walthall's work proclaimed greatest of his career. Congratulations to Dwan and Mayflower.

Wire from P. G. Theophelis, Managing Director, Lorain Opera House, Cleveland.

"Luck of the Irish" opened at Loraine opera house today and the opera house could not begin to hold the crowd that came in droves to see your wonderful picture. It was capacity afternoon and night. Largest business we have ever done excepting "Mickey." Everybody more than pleased and applause was frequent. We want more pictures like this.

St. Louis Globe Democrat

"Soldiers of Fortune," Allan Dwan's picturization of Richard Harding Davis' famous novel, opened at the King's theatre for a week's run. "Soldiers of Fortune" is a picture with an appeal for everyone. It is romance and adventure. Allan Dwan's direction is of the first magnitude, while the playing of Anna Q. Nilsson and Norman Kerry is another feature.

MARSHALL NEILAN PRODUCTIONS—

The Realization of An Ideal
The Fulfillment of A Promise

The formation of Marshall Neilan Productions, over a year ago, was not merely the origination of a new producing company in a crowded field.

It was the birth of a great ideal comprising plans of independent production of screen entertainment following nine years of thought and experience.

Involved in this ideal were certain definite promises of interest to prospective exhibitors of this product and to the trade in general.

In a little over a year's time this organization has established a high percentage of consistent successes that any studio might well be proud of.

"The River's End," "Go and Get It," "Don't Ever Marry," "Dinty," and "Bob Hampton of Placer." Each one an artistic achievement and a tremendous box-office attraction.

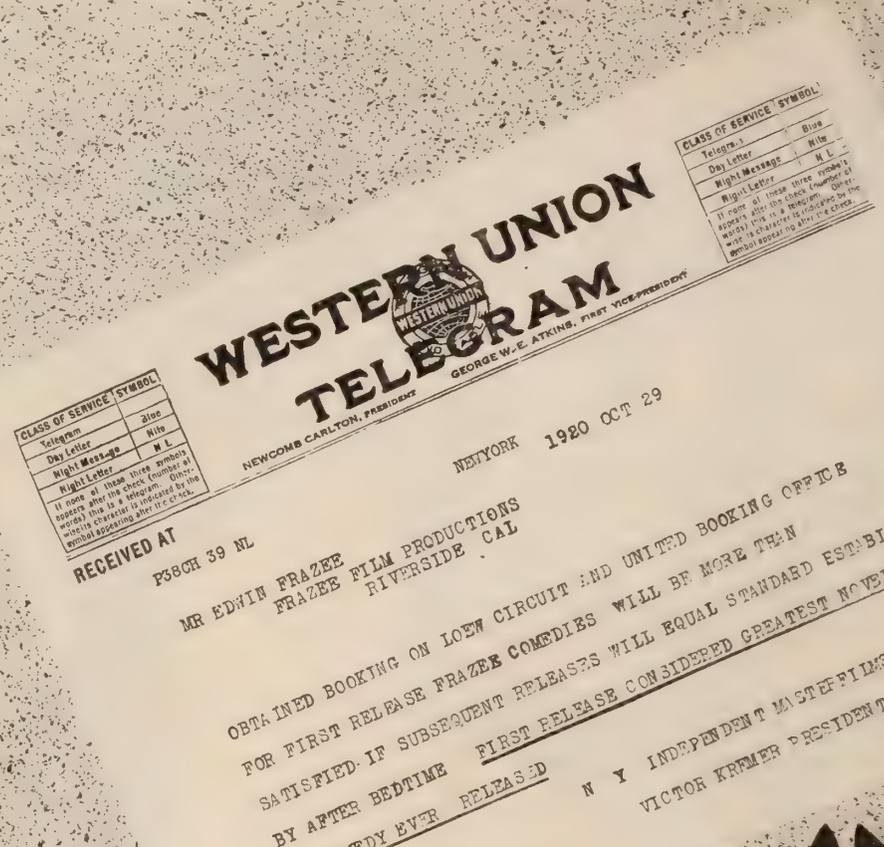
These pictures make fact of the contention that Marshall Neilan is a—if not THE director of the most consistent financial and artistic successes released during the past year.

In the ten years gone by, the artistry of Neilan and his ability to present this artistry in a way that appeals to the public has become more and more popular with cinema audiences throughout the entire world.

Today his name on the front of a theatre guarantees exceptional entertainment. Record attendances whenever his pictures are shown, regardless of their nature, prove that the motion picture followers fully realize this.

Among the prominent artists, technical experts and executives assisting Mr. Neilan in achieving this enviable position are Marjorie Daw, Wesley Barry, Marion Fairfax, Colleen Moore, James Kirkwood, Pat O'Malley, Howard Hawks, J. R. Grainger, Pete Smith, L. L. Baxter, Tom Held, Jacques Bizeul, David Kesson, Ben Carré, D. J. Grey, Lucita Squier and William Linahan.

Each one a master in his or her own field, this staff embodies but one of the Neilan policies; that of obtaining the best brains in the industry and allowing these brains full scope.



The good will enjoyed by Marshall Neilan at the hands of exhibitors, press and public, the achievements of his first year's efforts as an independent producer and the genius that has made all this possible can have but one outlook for the coming year, namely: greater accomplishments, further progress in consistent quality and bigger box-office returns.

ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE SUPPLY DEALERS

Announcing a New Organization

To the Supply Trade:

This is the age of co-operation in business. The old adage "Competition is the life of trade" has been changed to read "Co-operation is the life of trade."

The biggest advances made in business during recent years have been due to co-operation. The best co-operator is the best operator of a business.

Team-work pays! You have seen marked improvement in lines of business where former "competitors" have changed to "co-operators."

It was with the thought in mind of general improvement of the motion picture supply business that this association was formed recently.

The managing directors of twenty-four representative supply dealers and jobbers held numerous meetings, where the need for such an association and the probable results of it were thoroughly discussed, and the organization was carefully planned.

With a firm conviction that closer co-operation between supply dealers would improve their businesses and enable them to render better service in the motion picture industry, they formed the Association of Motion Picture Supply Dealers.

The objects of the Association of Motion Picture Supply Dealers are to promote the welfare of its members and to distribute among them the fullest information obtainable in regard to all matters affecting the Motion Picture Supply Business; to aid in bringing about more friendly relations between the motion picture supply dealers; to assist in standardizing and marketing high-grade motion picture supplies; to improve the quality of motion picture supplies and apparatus and the service rendered by the various branches of the motion picture industry.

All those who gave of their time and service during the formative period have joined the Association as Charter Members.

A Constitution and By-Laws have been drafted and adopted. Some of the Committees have been formed, the Association is well under way, and it already promises to be the means of accomplishing big and important work.

It is the desire and aim of the Association to list as its members all the representative dealers and jobbers of motion picture supplies. The Association can reach maximum efficiency only when it has the co-operation of all those engaged in this important and rapidly growing business.

Applications for membership are being considered by The Executive Committee.

An invitation is hereby extended to all those in the supply trade to communicate with the Chairman of the Executive Committee, who will forward a copy of the Constitution and By-laws of the Association, with details of membership requirements and application blank

Your inquiry will receive immediate attention, and you will hasten the work of the Association by sending it promptly.

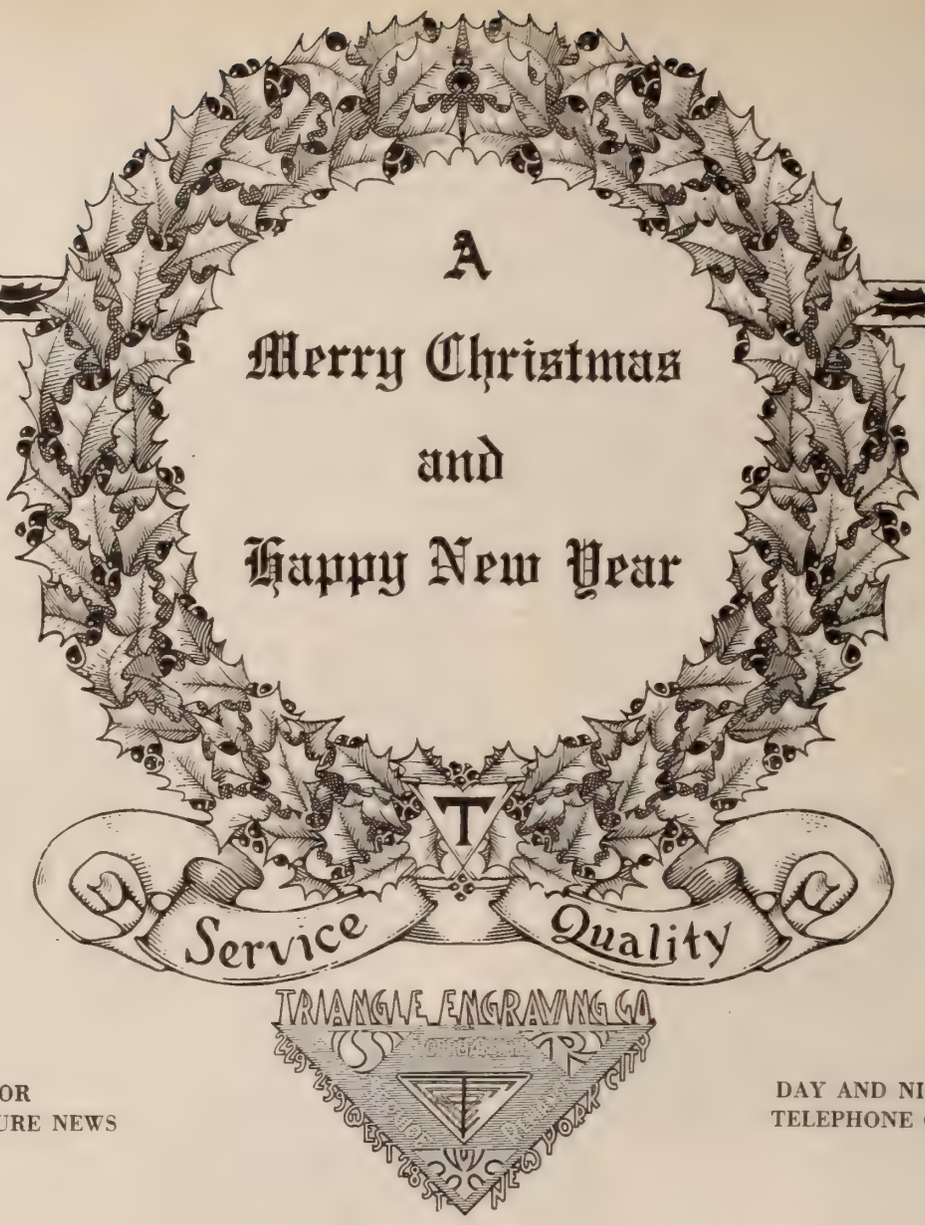
Alt and Howell



Alexander Alt has held aloft one great objective throughout his nine years in pictures. He has reached it today. Together with Helen Howell who has worked faithfully by his side he is turning out a new series of two reel comedies. To make them different is the essence of their problem, and that they have solved it in good measure can best be attested by those who have seen them. This much can be said right here: their comedies embrace such themes as are enjoyed by old and young alike, there is a humanness about them that reaches the heart. a modernness that gives snap and speed, and fun that lingers long after the last scene. You will recognize in them another forward step in the development of better pictures. The first two of these comedies are now ready. Write or wire for full information.

MR. EXHIBITOR:

What's your idea of the picture you are just leaning forward to grab?

It's the picture with the ready-made audience, isn't it? The picture that will bring a line before the box office without forcing a publicity campaign. It's the picture with a name backed by a favorite director and popular stars.

First time you think of it, ask your wife or your mother, if she has read "Lavender and Old Lace." Ask her too, if she's going to see the photoplay of that famous story when it appears locally. Millions of women-- and men too-- have laughed and wept with the white haired sweetheart of Myrtle Reed's wonderful love epic. The book went into forty editions. You'll find it is known and loved in nearly every home in America. - There's your audience!

Renco gave "Lavender and Old Lace" to a director of national reputation, Lloyd Ingraham. His name is enough. Renco also gave this picture a real "all star" cast - Marguerite Snow, Seena Owen, Victor Potel, Louis Bennison, James Corrigan and Lillian Elliott. You know them and the photoplay throngs know them.

"Lavender and Old Lace" means packed houses. It's one of the big pictures of the year.

Poster Value

The wage paid to plumbers and bricklayers is relatively staple, while the money paid to salesmen varies enormously. That is naturally the case, because a salesman is paid in direct proportion to his worth. If the same thing held true of all selling agencies the cost of RITCHEY posters would be infinitely greater than the cost of any other posters. The main effort of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is, however, directed toward the increased use of RITCHEY posters, rather than increased prices for them. Our effort is dual,—it tends to a greater sale of RITCHEY posters for us, but it also tends to a greater sale of admissions for the exhibitor. Incidentally the distributor is also benefited, for the exhibitor more than any one else realizes the importance of great posters to him, and when the distributor can say that RITCHEY posters are to accompany the film he makes a sales argument that is unanswerable, for such an argument is based upon a fact not open to dispute;—

The fact that the RITCHEY poster has the maximum amount of advertising value every time!

Motion Picture News

Vol. XXIII DECEMBER 25, 1920 No. 1

Cheerful?—Yes!

The few words on the front cover of this issue tell practically the entire message we would give the trade at this time.

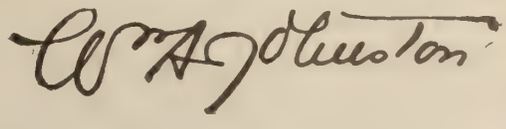
We are indeed fortunate to be concerned with the one industry which will be least affected by the present period of economic stress—and which period, the most conservative authorities estimate, can only be of brief duration in the general business world.

There is some talk within our ranks, but, mostly, it's mere patter. It's the "somebody told me that somebody said" kind of talk. It doesn't come from men of position or authority. It doesn't come from men whose business takes all their time. It does come from a few who perhaps profited easily in easy money time and who got to believe that their sinecures would be permanent.

Any one who will stop long enough to do a little thinking will quit talking and follow the optimistic good sense of Charles M. Schwab who says that all business needs is "less waste and more work."

There are obvious reasons for the railroad situation, for the agricultural and retail produce situation, for the general industrial situation, particularly with those industries whose retail prices soared highest and whose manufacturing end was most affected by war conditions.

These basic causes of disturbance do not apply—at least not in the same deep and broad measures—to the motion picture industry. Whatever we feel of business depression will be largely a reflection of the general one. And it can only be a mild reflection, because we deal in a commodity called amusement, one that people want in good times and bad, and one they will always want—but on a satisfactory basis of appeal and price.



We have nothing to fear from without. It is only our own mistakes made within, that we need worry about. It is our own inner war, not the waste of the world war whose consequences we have to fear.

The automobile industry, whose course we parallel so closely, had its worst year in good times. It wasn't that people stopped buying cars; it was because the industry got honey-combed through the waste and weakness of its own economic mistakes.

What we need to guard against is:

(a) the belief that this is an easy-money, get-rich-quick business in which luck plus incompetency can win out.
(b) The belief that the picture-going public has less intelligence than the makers of the pictures.
(c) The constant tendency to take the short cut to commercial success instead of the long straight course of economic clarity and safety.
(d) A reliance upon vanity, egotism, jealousy, instead of business sense and experience.

These false timbers only will shake this industry. We have nothing else to fear. The good house this year will pack them in; the good picture will get the money; the concern founded upon sound principles of economy will prosper.
This year—and next—and next.

Zukor's Nineteen Twenty a Busy One

In More Ways Than One He Had His Hands Full—Juggling Millions Like Flash-Backs in a Sennett Comedy

YOU surely have to admit that Adolph Zukor had a pretty tough year. One-half of his time was spent in dodging the brickbats and cabbages of those who declared he was trying to gobble up the whole blamed picture universe; the other half was occupied in putting over move after move which indicated that in finances and mental ability he could gobble off a gosh hanged big chunk if he were to try.

"1921 Outlook Startles"

Memory is fleeting in the picture business and it hardly seems possible at this writing to travel back to the moment when Adolph Zukor was the target for all and sundry. But the trip might be worth while, if for no other reason than to note how little anyone seems to be worrying about the octopus as Nineteen Twenty-One dawns.

A fairly hot argument can be worked up by asking any film man whether he thinks there are panic times ahead and what effect they will have on the picture business. A small town exhibitor will scorch around the collar if you ask him his opinion on the current year's rentals. You can even get some discussion going on those dryest of picked bones—censorship and taxation.

But—mention the "Trust," revile the "Octopus." And you get a blank stare. Somebody takes pity on you and changes the conversational subject.

In which, mayhap, there is a lesson for those of us inclined to become over-excited concerning the "problem" of the moment, to forget that it is a great big business; that the only certainty is that it is, and will be, and always be a great big business. "'Spite Hell and Taxes."

Yes, Adolph Zukor and Famous Players-Lasky have had a busy year. We have a record before us crowded with single spaced typewriting to record doings and events. But in our own private counsels we like to think that the biggest achievement of Nineteen Twenty is the one that will not bear fruit until Nineteen Twenty-One—the all star stock company policy.

What this will mean to the motion picture can only be determined by those artistes who are called upon to contribute to its fulfillment. What it can mean is unlimited; what it will mean is forecast in no small degree by the unselfish enthusiasm with which they welcomed Jesse Lasky's announcement.

No wonder Adolph Zukor looked forward, on his recent arrival in Los Angeles, to pictures that would run a full year on Broadway.

It's an eventful and complex history, that Nineteen Twenty Famous Players calendar. Though the right hand knows not always what the left is doing in such cases, we find blended in the mixture theatre building activities, interests in productions for the speaking stage, foreign expansion on a mammoth scale, and appointments, appointments, appointments. Seems to us, looking over the record that at 485 Fifth Avenue they must count that day lost that doesn't find someone appointed to something or other, someone signing contracts to do this or that, someone sailing for London to assume charge of more or less. And the week must be a seven day waste that doesn't see someone returning from London to tell us all about it.

We can well imagine Mr. Zukor sitting at his desk some morning and pressing the buzzer. "Send the Third Assistant General Manager in," he says. "There ain't none," responds the boy. "He was promoted to Supervising Director of Analytical Exhibitor Aid yesterday." "Send the man in charge over at Long Island," tries Mr. Zukor. "Do you mean the Managing Editor, the Chief of Production, the Special Representative of the Production Department, or just the Studio General Manager? counters the boy. "Anyhow, anyone you want sailed for London yesterday."

A year that has seen "Humoresque," "Don't Change Your Wife," "On With the Dance," "Male and Female" and "Something to Think About" has been a production year well spent. A year that has seen the signing of contracts, to write original screen stories by Sir Gilbert Parker, Henry Arthur Jones, Edward Knoblock, Avery Hopwood, Sir James Barrie, E. Phillips Oppenheim, and Elinor Glyn is a year big in its possibilities for Nineteen Twenty-One.

Nineteen Twenty, it must also be recorded, has also seen the initial production steps on the first of the all star—or "super-star," according to the publicity department—pictures. This is to be "The Affairs of Anatole," a vehicle that, in the hands of Cecil DeMille, should offer an unusual opportunity to give the new policy a flying start.

All through the Famous Players-Lasky record we find "millions" and more and more mention of millions. We forget, as bad are we at mathematics, just how many millions—maybe it's billions for all we know—that the English organization is custodian for; we find a three million dollar figure to represent the Famous Players in India; the news columns tell of a Canadian branch spending millions on theatres from coast to coast; Los Angeles and other big cities in the United States are seeing the rush of million dollar palaces; million dollar office buildings, millions, millions, millions. Every corner on the globe has its Famous Players million. And, let us say it with bated breath, every million has been placed so that it is pregnant in amazing possibilities.

Is There a Franchise Everywhere?

We'll Say It Looks That Way as Nineteen Twenty Draws to a Close—Apostle of the Independent—Exhibitor or Producer

WE all have our own peculiar "impressionistic" pictures of men and organizations. To the writer, for example, the mention of Teddy Roosevelt always created a vibrant picture of a bull elephant charging headlong through shrubbery and undergrowth. A madly careening animal, achieving his object at all times; right at times, wrong at others, but by brute force and strength of personality always smashing forward to the target.

It takes a real character and ability of the unusual order to create these mental wash drawings. The colorless on the highway of life leave no touch on memory's tablets.

J. D. Williams is one of the film men who always registers a definite, concrete picture with us. He is The Eternal Optimist; the personification of Faith, belief in his objects and ideals, hewing straight to the line, unswerving; and, it has seemed to us, making that FAITH get him there even when other means fail.

We first met "J. D." some seven years or so ago; we met him at the birth of First National; we passed a word or two with him the other day. And the "J. D." we discussed Australian conditions with almost a decade ago is the same "J. D." who was selling us the independent producer this week.

That's saying a great big bound volume of wisdom!

We might as well say right here that J. D. Williams typifies First National—and the type of First National men we have met in Harry Scwalbe, Robert Liebers, Col. Robert Levy and others of their calibre. The names are interchangeable and interlocked in our minds.

Nineteen Twenty has seen the fullest development of those things to which The Eternal Optimist has given his Faith. The reaching out of the franchise system until its hand touches even that of the smallest exhibitor, and its pathway resembles the intertwinings of a railroad map, are but the culminating stages in a dream that we can well imagine having seen its inception long before Nineteen Twenty dawned.

And the Faith of The Eternal Optimist must chuckle as it looks upon the present day importance of the independent producer. If J. D. Williams has preached one sermon to us on the industry's debt to the independent producer he has intoned nine hundred and ninety-nine. If he has told us once what the industry owes to Marshall Neilan, he has worn our ears out with it. How often has he told us to keep our eyes on Whitman Bennett! What a cocky personage he has been these last few weeks over that new Schenck contract! And when did he first start impressing on us the necessity of encouraging the ambitious independent? Oh, not more than seven years or so ago. He's kept right at it ever since.

The important part of it all is that First National's support of the independent has not been merely the word of mouth sort that finds its birth and resting book in the press agent's scrap book—it has been the cold, hard, solid talk of real money.

It isn't so long ago—is it, boys?—when a lot of us thought First National was crazy with the heat whenever we heard of a new price they had paid for a picture or guaranteed to a producer. Didn't that first Talmadge contract sound like a riot? And look at the second!

For Nineteen Twenty-One First National aims to "carry on." The words "franchise" and "independent" have been set in seventy-two point and tacked on the wall. And for a holiday gift they are going to give us "Passion"—on the success of which not a few wise sharps are predicting there will follow the lifting of the ban on so-called costume pictures.

And—who knows? Chaplin may come through any day with that next First National production. Would it be mean to call it Chaplin's 1920-21 release? Let's see—"Chaplin?" Who is he?

"J. D.," we figured, through franchise holders, should be in pretty close touch with conditions throughout the country and their possibilities as affecting the motion picture. So we asked him to be real serious in discussing the outlook for our readers. Even that couldn't curb his optimism. Here are his words:

"The present industrial and financial readjustment going on in all lines of business will undoubtedly be felt by the motion picture industry. Such readjustment is necessary and inevitable. It is positively essential that the business of the industry settle down to a solid basis, and that is exactly what is beginning to take place. Legitimate production and exhibiting enterprises will benefit by the elimination of wild-cat schemes and deflation of stock market bubbles. Good business will continue good.

"As for the future: Our executive board, reflecting the sentiment of Associated First National Franchise holders in all territories, are of the opinion that the coming year will see a crystallization of production, with the result that there will be fewer and better pictures. The really big picture—and by big picture is meant big entertainment value, not mere footage—will be more and more popular and profitable than ever. Associated First National views the future with optimism."

"Over the Hill to the Bank" for Fox

Nineteen Twenty Saw " The Showman's " Organization Setting New Records—And More Big Ones Are to Come

THREE men sat around a table at the Astor Hotel, some time along about last Spring. Their faces were long, their voices glum. Crocodile tears streaked their faces. Verily, it was a mourner's bench.

" Poor Bill Fox," said Moaner Number One. " He's spending his bankroll making expensive pictures and not a single star in any of them. Poor Bill Fox."

" Yeah! " chimed in Number Two. " I hear he's spent away over a hundred thousand on a picture called ' While New York Sleeps ' and there ain't a star in the whole cast. Not a single one. Poor Bill Fox."

" That ain't all," adds Number Three. " Fellow told me about a picture he's spent weeks on that's based on an old poem. No story, no star, nawthin'. Just some dusty old poem. ' Over the Hill to the Poorhouse,' I think it's called."

Poor Bill Fox!

The same three men met in the Astor just a day or so ago. Talking millions, as usual; advising all and sundry, as always. Discussing daily the how and why of the business.

" Bill Fox has the right idea," said Number One. " The story! Showmanship! Those are the big things. Rats with the idea of two thousand a week stars and piker vehicles. I said all along—give me the story and the director."

" You bet," chimes in Number Two. " Look at that ' While New York Sleeps,' one of the big hits of the year. A story! A showman's title and theme! A production! Bill Fox musta heard me talkin' cause them's been my sentiments all along."

" Yes," adds Number Three. " See what ' Over the Hill ' is doing. And no stars needed, no fifty thousand dollar story from a Broadway hit. Just a sure-fire theme that any good showman coulda seen would be a knockout from the word ' Go.' We three knew that all along. But Bill Fox has the luck and the money to put it over. Lucky stiff! "

So it goes. We might be willing to tell you that these conversations are mythical; yet, we might add that they are not so imaginary as you would suppose. But, at any rate, they tell our story. Tell it completely, and in quick flashes; that he who runs may read. Nineteen Nineteen, Nineteen Twenty, Nineteen Twenty-One—you'll find William Fox always the showman; doing things that none else dares do, yet the accomplishments that everyone says ' Anybody could do ' after they have been demonstrated. And isn't that the secret and the definition of Showmanship—Simplicity and Direct Appeal?

" Making Broadway Buzz "

William Fox is himself the epitome of ceaseless energy; and his corporations Nineteen Twenty record is the realization of that energy. Fox did not " just release pictures " during Nineteen Twenty. In addition to the achievements discussed by our conversational experts quoted above we find the Fox year beginning with the erection of his monster home-office and studio building in New York City, and we see Nineteen Twenty closing on the completion of a plan of reorganization and expansion at the Fox West Coast studios calling for the expenditure of a million dollars.

Recent days in Nineteen Twenty also saw the first birthday of the Fox News, and we'll grant that the initial anniversary of a youngster who stepped along as fast as the Fox News is worthy a place on the records.

In fact, Fox seems to have been anxious to make Nineteen Twenty a year of " firsts." We find on the records the production of his first serial, " Bride 13 " and evidently a success at the initial attempt, for the close of Nineteen Twenty brings us another Fox serial, " Fantomas," American-made.

Then Fox defied the critics and the carpers by deciding to take Pearl White from the ranks of the serial and present her in photoplays of feature length—assuredly a radical move. But if we are to believe the reports, " The White Moll " answered Fox affirmatively.

Four new stars appeared under the Fox banner during the twelve month period, Eileen Percy, Buck Jones, Louise Lovely and Clyde Cook. The year for the specials started with a success in William Farnum's " If I Were King," so we can look forward with fair optimism to its closing the same way when the holiday season brings " Blind Wives," from the Edward Knoblock play " Milady's Dress."

And they do say that the Fox Foreign Department is cutting quite a swathe this blithesome year of Nineteen Twenty. Its present head, Sydney Abel, was trained for the post abroad.

But it is the Bill Fox, of Broadway, New York, who has startled the natives. The poor Bill Fox, who was going to brave the big Fall season with nothing but starless pictures. Just thing of his nerve! Someone told him just before " Over the Hill " opened, " It's a good picture for movie folk, but don't attempt it on Broadway." Just think of how poor Bill Fox stepped right forward to put his head in the noose.

Yes, just think. And of the results—" While New York Sleeps " the first picture to play simultaneously a two Broadway houses, " Over the Hill " rounding the fifteenth week. Poor, poor, Bill Fox!

Are "Foolish Wives" "Outside the Law"?

Universal's Nineteen Twenty a Year of Big Specials and Healthy Foreign Expansion—1921 Opens Brightly

AN ambitious reporter for the Yokohama Yoke recently sought to interview Carl Laemmle on his return from Europe. The scribe probably scented the approach of a Holiday Number and he knew that off-hand flourishes on general business conditions, the outlook for the future and the reasons for the past—if any—always made good space filling copy.

"Mr. Laemmle," ventured the reporter as we happened on the scene. "Do you believe that the present tense economic situation, will, in its reflex periods, have a reactionary effect upon the motion picture business?"

Mr. Laemmle hesitated. Finally, "Yes," he said. "I think you're right, Eric Von Stroheim is a great director. A master!"

The interviewer tried again, "Reading between the lines of the last Federal Reserve Board report, and taking into account depreciated currency values in their relation to the excess profits tax, do you feel that there is danger for American films in foreign markets?"

A wrinkle on the Laemmle brow. "You have stated it with remarkable clearness," he replies. "'Foolish Wives' will gross over a million dollars. I know it will. I know why it will."

"Will the unemployment crisis have an adverse effect on travel in side-door Pullmans?" counters the Yokohama Yoke.

"'Foolish Wives,'" says Mr. Laemmle, "will show you a Monte Carlo scene that is a knockout. I felt it over in Europe. It is terrific."

The very thought forces him to take the interviewing reins in his own hands. "'Foolish Wives,'" he goes on, "is a picture that will ride rough-shod over economical conditions. Nothing will stand in its way during Nineteen Twenty-One. Every gun in the Universal artillery, exploitation, advertising, presentation and sales will be put behind 'Foolish Wives'—so watch for it."

From all of which you might gather that Carl Laemmle, at this writing, hasn't much time or thought for anything other than "Foolish Wives." You're pretty nearly right. A few moments of each Universal hour must be checked off to "Outside the Law," the big Priscilla Dean-Tod Browning special that will start Nineteen Twenty-One. Then give the balance of the sixty minutes—both waking and sleeping hours—to "Foolish Wives."

We know of few scheduled events for Nineteen Twenty-One to which we are looking forward with greater interest than the presentation and exploitation of "Foolish Wives." Our interest is divided. Naturally, knowing the elaborate scale on which the picture "Universal Without Powers!" is being produced, we are interested to a share in seeing the completed offering. But the major portion of our appetite is whetted for the exploitation. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, bears a well-earned reputation as promotion wizard—an artist in dressing every attraction so that it brings the ultimate cent for producer and exhibitor. So why shouldn't our interest be keen? Isn't it a spectacle for the gods to see genius face to face with the job of its career?

The dawn of Nineteen Twenty-One finds a different Universal Company in one important respect. No longer do we say, "Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, and P. A. Powers." For April 16th of the year Nineteen Twenty saw the resignation of Pat Powers as treasurer and the purchase of his stock interest by Laemmle and Cochrane. Thus does time fly; thus do conditions canter.

"The Virgin of Stamboul," "The Great Air Robbery," "The Devil's Pass Key," "Once to Every Woman" and "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" stand forth as the Universal achievements of the year in a production way. The first mentioned on this list gave us a taste of the exploitation we may expect to witness on "Outside the Law" and "Foolish Wives." So prepare for cymbals.

Glancing over the record we find that no mean part of the Universal year has been expended in the direction of foreign expansion. We find such items as, "Carl Laemmle sails for Europe," "George Kann, export manager, sails for Europe," "J. V. Bryson leaves for Australia," "Sociedad Something-or-Other secures contracts for distribution of Universal product in Argentine, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Uraguay, and Paraguay," "Film Booking Office, Ltd., of London, arranges to distribute Universal production in Great Britain," "Cinematograph Who's This signs to book Universal product in Spain and Portugal," "On completion of establishment of Universal offices in Australia, James Bryson goes to New Zealand," "Philip Paerl to distribute for Universal in Holland," "Universal will produce in Germany for distribution through Europe," and so on, etcetera, otherwise, and as it were.

Truly, the war is over for Universal, and The League of Nations a signed and sealed pact. Kamchatka, Patagonia, and Liberia are still said to be open territories, but a hustling representative from 1600 Broadway is on his way to those points now. However, we wish to deny the rumor that, in addition to his task of arranging Universal distribution, this representative is charged with the job of finding locations for the next Von Stroheim picture. These have already been selected.

The Limit — Praise from the Ranks

Which Only Confirms the Industry's Opinion of Paul Brunet and Pathe's Outlook on Threshold of Nineteen Twenty-One

"Filmland's Clearing House"

WE have a good friend who has been with Pathe since the days when we had to travel to the wilds of Jersey City whenever we wanted to say "Howdy!" to him. That's traveling some—Jersey City; and that's traveling back some when you allow memory to roam to the time when the home office address was "1 Congress Street, Jersey City."

"Backward, turn backward, oh, time . . . ." Remember when Pathe withdrew from General Film and we used to gather in corners and mourn: "Poor Pathe. Nice company; nice fellows. Poor Pathe! 'Stoo bad. Just think, quitting General Film! Mocking Gibraltar! Out into the cold, cold world."

Well, to get away from the laugh that history has recorded, and back to our subject, this friend of ours has been with Pathe since the beginnings, seen adminstrations come and administrations go, brainy men take up the reins and brainy men lay them down. He is a taciturn individual. His confidences are rare. But the other day in a burst of loyal enthusiasm he broke forth:

"Say, this man Brunet is the greatest executive Pathe has ever had. He is one of the real constructive builders of the industry. He knows business, finance and pictures. He is broad of vision and a square shooter. He is big calibre."

Quite a recommendation. No man, you know, is a hero to his valet. Not every film executive is a "magnate" to his hirelings. Few are the "bosses" who win loyalty; fewer those who appreciate it. But Paul Brunet apparently registers clear focus on all counts.

So we are happy to record that at the head of the roster of Pathe events during Nineteen Twenty we find: "The election of Paul Brunet as President." And to present the die-cut, straight-forward views he holds on Nineteen Twenty conditions and the Nineteen Twenty-One outlook. On two points he is emphatic. First, that exhibitors and the industry need not fear the reaction of general business conditions; second, negative cost must be reduced.

Negative cost! At last a film man has dared to mention it.

"We are now facing and have been confronted with, for several months, a period of transition which has had its influence upon industries of all description," declares Mr. Brunet. "Fortunately the motion picture industry has been the last to feel the economic strain consequent upon the ending of the war and the beginning of the return to normal conditions. While it has been the last to be affected, it is also true that the motion picture business will be the least affected of any industry.

"Exhibitors in some sections have been more or less hard hit, but basing my opinion upon nation-wide reports there is no necessity for a feeling of panic and it is almost a certainty that with the turn into the new year conditions generally will be better.

"The United States is basically too sound to allow conditions to become serious, while the big business men of the country are handling affairs with remarkable judgment and foresight.

"Good pictures will continue to fill theatres—poor pictures to keep them empty. We are now dealing with a highly discriminating public and unless we maintain a discriminating standard of release we cannot expect the prosperity that awaits all who cater favorably to public taste.

"One big point with regard to the future rises above all others. The negative cost must be reduced. While this reduction is in order, the high standard of production must be maintained. This can be accomplished by producers through a keener regard for the value of the dollar.

"Waste must be eliminated, and eliminated immediately, if producers are to be enabled to continue to compete against the continuance of the present economic conditions. But, through it all, the exhibitor will profit."

Remember the item we checked off as first on the list of Pathe "high-spots" during Nineteen Twenty. Then add this one: "The appointment of Elmer R. Pearson as Director of Exchanges." And to the two blend this summing thought: "The growth of the Features Sales Department, which in the year did more than twice as much business as during Nineteen Nineteen. Increase in serial sales, a jump of virtually one hundred per cent."

Those are the ultimates in a Pathe year crowded with activity. Mention must be made of the sweep to premier honors by Harold Lloyd; the closing of contracts whereby Pathe became the distributing agency for the product of Associated Exhibitors and the Stoll Film Corporation, together with the renewal of the American and Hodkinson contracts, and Paul Brunet's signing of Rudyard Kipling to write a number of stories for Pathe which will be produced by Robert Brunton.

Pathe, we must also add, more than held its prestige as a distributor of short subjects during Nineteen Twenty, with such releases as the Rolin comedies and other short specials.

And who can close the book without lifting a glass in silent toast to the anniversary of the year—the tenth birthday of the Pathe News?—honoring a pioneer meaning much to the motion picture industry.

They Didn't Have the Look of "Film"

Robertson-Cole Seemed "Too Good to Be True"—
Trying Business Ethics on the Picture Scramble

DECEMBER 15th saw the first birthday of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation; December 31st finds the organization's own twelve story office building ready for occupancy; December's thirty-one days are covered with new tales of the prowess of "Kismet"; any wonder that January 1st brings a real Happy New Year?

We'll say there shouldn't be. If any organization with which we ever had anything to do ever spent twelve months moving as swiftly, as consistently forward, as Robertson-Cole has in Nineteen Twenty, we're frank enough to say we'd wear a new coat out patting ourselves on the back.

Look at the record books. New stars, big productions, widespread physical expansion, jotted down on every page. And, truth to tell, though the dawn of Nineteen Twenty saw plenty of handwriting on the wall, it wasn't many months before that time that a large portion of motion picture opinion was wondering whether Robertson-Cole was going or coming. Was it? Honest?

Yes, the sidewalk film man couldn't see Robertson-Cole. It didn't seem to act as a picture organization should. For one thing, it was able to be thrown for losses at the start of the game and recover with redoubled strength. Another point, you never read lengthy interviews with the head of the organization in the trade papers. All in all, it didn't seem to be a "regular" picture company. Seemed something like a good merchandising organization.

That was a handicap.

To the man on the street.

But, as we survey conditions this waning year of Nineteen Twenty, apparently not to exhibitors.

Let's check off events as they crowd the Nineteen Twenty Robertson-Cole calendar. Starting with January we find Mae Marsh signed; then the release of "The Beloved Cheater," and here's Carpentier under contract as February starts. Otis Skinner's name went on the dotted line in February. Dustin Farnum's followed as March opened. "The Bottom of the World" and "The Fortune Teller" are among the pictures on the boards about this time. Sessue Hayakawa thought enough of the outlook on March 28th to sign for four super-specials. March also saw the decision to erect a home office building. April's contracts brought Al Christie's "So Long Letty" and Pauline Frederick's signature. First steps on the erection of new studio buildings in Los Angeles are taken in July; September brings "The Stealers" and plans for more Cabanne specials, and

"'S' Stands for Sincerity"

"Kismet" is with us now in all its glory. And these are only the highlights. Wonder what the man on the street thinks now?

They are looking forward to Nineteen Twenty-One with clean and straight vision over at Robertson-Cole. A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager, sizes up the situation this way:

"We can see nothing but continued prosperity for those strong links in the industry's great chain which have been carefully and painstakingly made. If there is to be failure it will be on the part of the weaker links, and, in this business, as in all others, the weaker links are those which have turned their backs on fair dealing in honest goods.

"A good product always sells readily. The merchant with superior goods; the artist with a finer composition; the professional man with greater ability; the motion picture company with a better product, are all sought out by a public which is ever seeking more complete satisfaction, and which always has the money with which to pay for it.

"Bad years are only incidents in the life of an institution of permanence. Firms which refuse to wonder what the future holds, which work on steadily toward an ideal through good times and uncertain ones, are those which succeed. In the present day of readjustment no uncertainty, no clouds, no insurmountable obstacles appear for the organization which moves forward with courage, true to the principles of honest business conduct, and with faith in the industry it serves. We know the public will be amused. We know it will select the most entertaining pictures which the market affords for its amusement. In these two principles we find an answer for all problems.

"The past, present and future of the motion picture industry, we therefore feel, is irrevocably tied to the question of a better product. The great rapidity with which the motion picture map has changed since those few years ago when the first pictures were made is a tribute to the few who have kept their eyes ever ahead, and a justification of the principle that to stand still is to perish.

"Which brings us to the statement that we consider the whole question of success in the picture business to rest on the fidelity and sincerity with which the producer, distributor and exhibitor work together in giving the public the best product which the present can supply. It is no longer a child-like public which we serve, but one which watches the changes and improvements in pictures, and the art of picture making, as carefully as we ourselves, and often with even keener eyes."

"In Again; Out Again — Goldwyn"

Here's the Phenomenal—A Film Producer Who Has Been Praised by Prominent Authors—Looks Business; Acts Art

SOME several weeks ago, when Samuel Goldwyn decided to head the "Resignations" column in the Nineteen Twenty almanac, we registered a few personal impressions in the course of "Personalities"; scarce a fortnight later, when Samuel changed his mind, he was "Snapshotted" by W. A. J. To that extent is difficulty added to the task of once more checking up events and discoursing thereon.

But there can be no thought that too much attention is being given to "Goldwyn, of the Goldwyn Corporation." Activity has surely been that gentleman's keynote during Nineteen Twenty; and, while considerable ten point type has been used to comment on that activity, there is importance in it that warrants placing the facts down on the permanent twelve point record.

Mr. Goldwyn's chief diversion during Nineteen Twenty has been the pursuit of the wary prominent author to his uttermost lair. Trailed with grim persistence, tempted with honey, one by one the proudest animals of wild and woolly Authorland have succumbed. And, once captured, they have found themselves treated to the fatted calf; rendered human by a freedom from restraint and a kindly understanding they had not expected to find in the dreaded confines of Screentown.

That's an achievement. Its performance shows Samuel Goldwyn belying his appearance and the general impression of him. He conveys the picture of a hard-headed mathematical business man. But such a character, having realized the importance of the author, would begin and end his efforts with the offering of higher prices for stories.

Goldwyn showed vision. He displayed an appreciation of the quirks and turns in the mind of creative genius. Some one has said that he seems to approach most problems with the finesse of a bull in a china closet; we know that he didn't approach his literary lights that way. Instead, we can imagine him opening the door wide and saying, "Walk in, gentlemen. Look around a little; stick around a lot; if you want anything ring the bell; tell the servants what to do. I'm chief butler myself."

It was such vision that gave us Eminent Authors, that brought such personages as Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart and Gertrude Atherton within studio portals; that induced Booth Tarkington to write original two reel comedies and features; that captured Maurice Maeterlinck and sent him cross-country to go to a studio school; that resulted in the recently published letter from Rex Beach that goes on the records as a vibrant high-note of fealty and loyalty. That's a copy in our scrap-book.

"He Opened the Door"

But Nineteen Twenty for Goldwyn did not use up all its days on the author. We have just had a man check over the year's files of The News and here's the memorandum he has given us:

"Founding of Goldwyn, Ltd., in England, with branches throughout the United Kingdom.

"Securing of controlling interest in Bray Pictures Corporation. Securing of controlling interest in the Capitol theatre.

"Production of 'Earthbound,' one of the year's big pictures. Enters Nineteen Twenty-One with such productions as 'Madame X,' 'The Penalty,' 'The Branding Iron,' 'North Wind's Malice,' 'Godless Men,' 'Honest Hutch,' etc. The development of Will Rogers as a popular star.

"Increase of the Goldwyn Board of Directors by the addition of R. R. M. Carpenter, George W. Davison, Eugene Dupont, H. F. Dupont, E. V. R. Thayer, Albert Wittenberg, Messmore Kendall, T. W. Haberman, Henry Ittleson, and other important financial men."

Activity, to say the least. Strong in its hint to watch the Nineteen Twenty-One development of such pregnant possibilities. And as an intimation of the course those events will take we may quote from Samuel Goldwyn's own view of the coming year:

"Nineteen Twenty-One will be an epoch year in motion pictures," he thinks, "because it will mark the culmination of the fusion between author, story and director. The process of welding together all elements which go to the making of a successful photoplay is a process which has been going on since the beginning of the industry, but chaos has passed and we can now see an orderly development.

"We have reached the stage where we can actually see more than a day ahead!

"The original screen story will triumph during Nineteen Twenty-One. To me, the success of Eminent Authors absolutely forecasts this. And the author and director will find a common ground as they have not before in the fact of the direct creative contributions of each to the screen.

"It was necessary that this should come about for today, we are catering as an entertainment to the best influences in American life, and to do that successfully we must give them of the best.

"At the same time genuine stars will increase their hold on the public and naturalism, as exemplified by Will Rogers, for instance, will come more and more into its own. Nineteen Twenty-One will, therefore, prove a valuable link between the old and new."

Said Dick to Marcus—"Let's Team"

And So the Deed Was Done—Coming of "The Four Horsemen" Promises Metro a Big Nineteen Twenty-One Send-Off

WE hesitate to say that the big event of Nineteen Twenty for Metro occurred the day that Richard A. Rowland sat down at a table in the Claridge grill with Marcus Loew. It may be the other way around. Mayhap the big day of Marcus Loew's year was that on which he started to "talk turkey" with Rowland.

At any rate it must have been a session worthwhile eavesdropping on. Richard A. Rowland, as W. A. J. said in "Snapshots" last week, is "the frankest man in the industry." He's even that way in business. Which, we imagine, disarms the man with whom he is dealing far more effectively than supposedly shrewd finesse. Marcus Loew is able to do business with a smile and an occasional flash of humor.

The opening guns must have been fired something like this:

"How's business, Dick?" asks Loew.

"Rotten, thank you. We can make pictures; we can sell them; but it is costing gosh blamed big money to make them, and if the other fellows don't stop buying and building theatres it's going to be tough sledding selling them. How is it with you?"

"Oh, so-so. But if I only had three hundred and sixty four more theatres it would be twice as so-so. Would go get the money to build the theatres if I were sure of the source of supply."

"Speaking to me?" counters Dick.

"Maybe."

"Pay the price," speaks up Rowland.

"Settled!" from Marcus. "Let's split the lunch check and go see Mr. Morgan."

So are nations born and empires doomed. It's hard to figure just what percentage of reality there is in the above conversation because you can never count on Dick Rowland. He's always original—and humorous in a frank, refreshing way. There's only one point on which we know him to run true to form without fail.

Every fourteen days in Broadway film history brings new rumors of a merger. Out in the sticks exhibitors are saved the painful tortures of these spasms. But on Times Square they come as regular as the seven year itch and are taken as seriously. Which is saying something.

Well, the cardinal rule of the merger-rumor creator is "Always mention Metro first." The facts don't matter; rumors have only slight acquaintance with the facts, but the axiom of the craft is "Mention Metro First." So off to the Longacre Building trot the newsgatherers.

"Mr. Rowland," speaks up the reporter, "what have you to say about the merging of Metro with Goldwyn, Paramount, Selznick, World Film, Hallmark, Triangle, Mutual and the General Film receiver?"

"Haven't heard a word about it," says Dick. "But everybody knows my price. Sure it's a steep one. But if they'll pay it I'm willing. Send them around."

We can well believe the mimeograph which states that Rowland believes this to be the best Christmas that Metro has ever had. Metro has been right up front in the production of big specials this year, under the supervision of Maxwell Karger; it has moved with the fastest in signing for the works of prominent authors and is building a real creative story department under the eyes of Bayard Veiller; Nazimova is still Nazimova.

Nineteen Twenty-One opens up brightly with "Polly with a Past." Looming up in gigantic proportions behind it is "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." And on the horizon is the only Nazimova in "Aphrodite," the "show" sensation of the last year.

Good reason to be cheerful. One portion of the plum pudding takes on unusual interest for us at this moment because the hard-boiled reviewer of the staff has just strolled in as we write these words and declared, "In Ina Claire as she is seen in 'Polly with a past,' Constance Talmadge has a worthy rival."

Yes, and he's so hard-boiled he makes reinforced concrete look like jelly.

Naturally you would expect Dick Rowland to be cheerful as he surveys the outlook. He puts it in these words:

"It is well known that Metro as an organization is a confirmed optimist. It has always clung to its faith in the brightness of the future and even in darkest times has refrained from joining any chorus of pessimism. This faith, we believe, has carried us through the period of the war and is carrying us now, through the era of reconstruction, with vision unimpaired, with hopes high and with an unshakeable confidence that 1921 will be a year of unprecedented prosperity for everybody in our industry.

"The year that is passing has seen the beginning of the fruition of some of our most important plans. We have successfully launched our campaign for bigger and better pictures, and the quality of our output has convinced exhibitors and public alike that when we announced this innovation there was sincerity in our promise.

"While we are experiencing an economic readjustment that all thinking men had anticipated, the people are meeting it with the spirit of cheerfulness and hope in the future that demonstrates to the world those qualities which have made us as a nation great."

"Frank to the Nth Degree"

Nineteen Twenty's Infant Prodigy

The Realart Youngster Gave a Lusty Yell, Upset the Cradle and Woke Up the Whole House—Watch Nineteen Twenty-One

JOHN WHOOZIS invented the cafeteria; Luke Floozy gave us the automat; Horace Hallroom discovered the "pay-as-you-enter" trolley car—but it remained for Jack Woody and Realart to give us the "play and pay afterward" picture plan. Which achievement, despite the levity of our opening words, deserves its place in the motion picture history.

Can you imagine the shade of the original General Film exchange manager stamping into a small town exhibitor's theatre to dictate the day's terms and being met with this: "Get out of my box office. I'm playing on the 'honor system' today. Realart has given me a big special and after the day's business is done I'm to pay them what I think it is worth. Fold up your blackjack and take the back door out."

You can't quite picture the old line manager's face at about this moment, can you? Nevertheless, you have seen Realart announce a "play and pay" policy; you have seen Realart put it over; and if some one tells you that the "play and pay" was just cooked up for some Mayflower specials and won't be heard of again—whisper this thought to him:

"Watch that 'play and pay' experiment and see if it doesn't turn up in Nineteen Twenty One as the germ and inspiration of some radically new distribution plans—real innovations."

You might, if your hat is a trifle large, cut that italic paragraph out and paste it in the hatband now; it will help the fit—and make it easier for us when the orchestra strikes up "I Told You So."

Realart only rates as an infant during Nineteen Twenty; but Realart seems to us to have registered with a pretty lusty voice during those twelve months. For one thing they gave us several new stars, and our personal thanks go down for having the pleasure of seeing Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley in well-merited headline positions.

It's a fairly healthy infant that can look forward to Nineteen Twenty-One with plans for a total of thirty-six productions. In addition to the stars on the roster, these are to include the marketing of the two William D. Taylor specials, and if the Box Office Reports from exhibitors mean anything Realart has turned a trick in its development of this producer.

We can't extend ourselves to the extent of a page on Realart without taking advantage of the opportunity to register an impression of admiration we have always held towards a corporation that could so successfully and continually link its name with "regular fellows." Realart started the ball rolling when Arthur Kane's name was on a desk in the Fifth Avenue offices. It didn't slip a bit when Jack Woody stepped into the foreground.

Booking on "The Honor System"

And way in the background there is one of the quiet working, efficient, "business men" of the game—Morris Kohn. Modest, retiring—you don't see much of him and you hear less—but every man who knows him is a booster and we've never met a "knocker."

Realart itself ranks high in its Nineteen Twenty record the successful establishment of the star franchise system providing exhibitors with theatre rights to the entire list of thirty-six pictures without having to buy territorial rights or assume obligations respecting the marketing of the productions.

"Sixty-four of the most prominent theatre circuits in the country are holders of franchises," Jack Woody will tell you with a smile. And if you'll press him for his opinion regarding the Realart prospects for Nineteen Twenty-One he'll add:

"Realart is better sold right now on this season's product than it was last February on its 1919-20 output. Does that answer your question regarding my opinion of the present conditions in the industry?

"And Realart will be better sold next September on its 1921-1922 season than it now is on its present season. Does that answer your question regarding my opinion of the outlook?

"I'm talking in terms of motion pictures, not of steel or calico, or butter and eggs. The motion picture business next year will be what we make it, and Realart, I can guarantee, will make it the banner year of its career.

"We have but one ambition: To produce pictures which average materially better than those of our most progressive competitors and to supply them to the exhibitor at prices which will permit us both to make an honest profit.

"That's the big thing which Realart will carry out in 1921."

You can't tag the "Amen" on to a page about Realart without a word about the contributions to trade paper advertising history made by this organization during Nineteen Twenty. The "boys around New York" who watch these things with critical and occasionally hypocritical eyes early in the year exhausted their stock of "Ah's" at the class of the insert advertising by Realart. And as a trade's advertising reflects its standing in no small degree—to that extent is there necessity for a "double star" honor mark after Realart's name on the industry's Nineteen Twenty calendar.

Quarter Century Old and Going Strong

"Dead Men Tell No Tales," But Albert E. Smith and Vitagraph Prove a Pioneer Can Still Sit in the Front Row

"The Collaborating Wizard"

WE'VE met it on every page of our own book. We've seen it at every turn and twist on Broadway. We've crept up dark alleys and devious lanes only to come face to face with the dread message. We've sought the peaceful calm of green fields—and they have echoed the words. We've travelled resounding cross-country rails and their rhythmic jangle has thrummed the phrase. We've begged for rest on green ocean waters, and the crashing waves have chanted:

"Dead Men Tell No Tales!"

We've thought of descending the dank darkness of a mine shaft; we've been tempted to ride the skies in an aeroplane; wondered on the possibilities of Sahara's desert wastes; trembled on the edge of the long, hard haul into Labrador's ice; we've puzzled, and we've swore, but, what's the use? We'll wager that anywhere we went we'd learn that:

"Dead Men Tell No Tales!"

The other week or so there was a murder mystery in Philadelphia. Two suspects were run down, captured, and jailed. The girl wanted to send a message to her confederate urging him to maintain silence under the greatest pressure. She scanned the pages of a magazine. (Wonder if it was The News?) Her eyes brighten and she stops. Her lip stick comes into play. Five words are underscored. They speak a whole story:

"Dead Men Tell No Tales!"

There's been no way of escaping it. We don't want to say that "Dead Men Tell No Tales" sums up the Vitagraph Nineteen Twenty calendar, but we will say that the slogan and the campaign it evoked showed Vitagraph ending the year in a blaze of glory. We say this, even knowing that there is a rumor that somewhere in the marsh land of Louisiana there is a three year old pickanniny, backward since birth, who has failed to read at least a dozen times during the past month "Dead Men Tell No Tales." You can't have everything. The "pick" is every bit as much alone in his ignorance as he is blissful.

Vitagraph planted itself solidly on the "big special" map during Nineteen Twenty, both in pictures and in the manner of exploiting them. We're here to add the fact that on the best of information we can state that the sales books look just as cheerful as surface appearances would indicate. Christmas, Nineteen Twenty, should have every reason for being a merry, merry one for Vitagraph.

Let's look at Nineteen Twenty-One. We find at the top of the list, "Black Beauty," just completed and ready for release. A well known story? A special? Exploitation possibilities? Lordy, man, we'll say so. There's also, "The Heart of Maryland," from David Belasco's play. We've seen this on the screen once. And always regretted the waste of a wonderful vehicle. Tickled now to see that it is going to be made again—and made right. Being filmed at Natchez, Mississippi, by Tom Terriss—traveling afar for the right settings.

And we find in preparation, "The Son of Wallingford," the famous character in an entirely original creation for the screen by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

We'll say that Vitagraph seems all set for the Nineteen Twenty-One scramble. If the exploitation pace set by the past year's accomplishments is any criterion of what the new specials will receive—then prepare for smoke.

"Dead Men Tell No Tales" wasn't the only Vitagraph that went over the top during Nineteen Twenty. Memory tells us of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," and "Trumpet Island," two of the year's big winners. We find Alice Joyce and Earle Williams in vehicles holding their positions firm; a new star in Alice Calhoun, and consistent product for Antonio Moreno and Corinne Griffith. And some of the best of the comedy bets.

We come to the question of serials. And pause. Because here there is one of the biggest mysteries of the business to us. We have noticed, "'Hidden Dangers,' written by Albert E. Smith and . . . ." We have come across "'The Invisible Hand,' written by Albert E. Smith and . . . ." We have seen "'The Veiled Mystery,' written by Albert E. Smith and . . . ." Then there have been "Smashing Barriers," "The Silent Avenger" and "Fighting Fate," all written by Albert E. Smith and . . . ."

How does he do it?

We've wondered, pondered and puzzled. Some bright day we are going to take a week off from the weary grind of listening to the press agents and journey to Flatbush. There we are going to disguise ourselves as an outworn "prop" and loiter in the neighborhood of Albert E. Smith's sanctum. There we are going to discover for a waiting world how Albert E. Smith, between the million odd details that we know engulf the executive directing an organization like Vitagraph, twixt the thousand and one problems of the day that we know he carries home to unravel in sleeping hours, despite the six hundred and ninety-four telephone calls and the three dozen trade paper nuisances who clutter each hour—can still find the moments to turn to his collaborating. We believe he's pulling a double exposure trick on the clock and getting forty-eight hours labor out of the day.

Hiram Abrams—"He Stuck to a Policy"

A Glance at the 1921 Horoscope for United Artists
Sees Cheer Aplenty for the Stars' Own Organization

ANYONE who took one look at Hiram Abrams' face should feel certain that he is that sort of a fellow. Anyone who took a second look at that firm set jaw would know it. Anyone who shook hands with him would feel it.

Yes, Hiram Abrams stands by his guns; he is the " sink or swim " type of chap who nevertheless manages to be swimming all the time.

When the Big Four pulled out of the Distribution Terminal Hiram Abrams laid down a rule which in effect said, " No Through Trains." Transferred from a lame figure of speech to film English his declaration was—" Every United Artists' production will be sold to the exhibitor singly, on its own merits. No stars series, no programs, no duos, trior nor quartettes."

That was the announced policy, and as Nineteen Twenty-One dawns—give him credit—Hiram Abrams and United Artists are still doing business at the old stand and in the old way. He stuck to a policy.

You ought to appreciate what that means in a business where " policy " is still understood to mean a game of chance.

You would appreciate it if you were one of the nine hundred and ninety-nine trade paper editors who at one time or another suddenly received the inspiration, " For this Holiday Edition I'll publish a chronological table showing the news events and announcements of the year."

It's a great idea, brand new, original—the first time you get it. Your enthusiasm lasts for about two days, until you begin to check up the table and find it reading something like this: " January 1st: Mannie Magnate announces Open Market only logical system of booking; February 15th: Mannie Magnate in revolutionary interview declares Program Booking salvation of exhibitor; April 23rd: Mannie Magnate finds solution of exhibitor evils in Star Series Booking; July 4th: Mannie Magnate, Exhibitor's Only Friend, says book anyway you want to so long as I get the money."

About that time you cuss the quality of the goods since Prohibition came and decide that a series of pictorial layouts of all the company's stars makes as good a Holiday Edition as anything else. Which is why we shoot a bouquet-laden arrow at Hiram Abrams.

Looking forward to Nineteen Twenty-one our horoscope casts very favorable shadows for United Artists. A certain magnate once tried more or less successfully to prove that one plus one equals three; it remained for United Artists to show how three live contributors can make a " Big Four." Nevertheless—the seer finds a Charlie Chaplain release through United Artists fairly early in Nineteen Twenty-One. Yes, " fairly early."

" Maybe a Chaplin Soon "

Startle you? Well, our star-gazer likes that attitude; it encourages him to go on somewhat to this effect: " ' The Kid ' isn't the only Chaplin picture practically ready for the release charts. There are other Chaplins needing but a few weeks in the cutting room before they see the light of day. A word to the wise is sufficient. Some one will get ' The Kid '; some one else will get the other pictures. It's the toss of a coin either way—but there will be new Chaplins aplenty in Nineteen Twenty-One."

We also see " 'Way Down East " as a United Artists' attraction before Nineteen Twenty-One has passed the half-mile mark; much earlier than most people imagin.

We don't seem to mind how we prophesy; we're getting up courage enough to almost feel like a try at the races. Nevertheless, jot our tips down in your note-book, and bear us in mind as you turn the pages of the calendar.

A day or so ago we asked Hiram Abrams to give us his own impressions of the high spots in the motion picture industry during 1920. His reply made it necessary for him to mention the name of some screen productions. And, would you believe it, he didn't confine his quotations to United Artists' releases. There's an index.

" To my mind," he declared, " the biggest development in 1920 has been the production of a far superior type of motion picture; a type that has attracted larger audiences, caused longer runs and made possible the erection of better theatres. Chief among such attractions may be mentioned Miss Pickford's ' Pollyanna,' Mr. Griffith's ' 'Way Down East,' Mr. Fairbanks' ' The Mollycoddle,' and ' The Mark of Zorro,' ' Over the Hill,' ' Humoresque,' and ' Earthbound.'

" Such productions are the best assurance of clear sailing for the picture industry at a time when business seas are expected to be rough. I look for a strengthening of the determination of leading stars and producers to make fewer but better productions, taking time to realize their heretofore undreamed-of-heights of production and utilizing every resource and aid available for the full expression of their own personalities."

Before we close, let us reply to the cynic in the back row who has read the heading on this page and now asks us, " Is Percentage one of Hiram Abrams' policies? "

We're here to say that it was, and is, and will be. And that some four, five and six years from now a stranger wandering slowly down Seventh Avenue is apt to see a long line forming towards the door of Old Doc Abrams, dispensing sugar-coated Percentage Pills.

Only Seven Months from Birthday

Associated Producers Entered the List of "Incorporations" in May—The "Big Six" That Became "Big Eight"

NINETEEN NINETEEN gave us a "Big Four," Nineteen Twenty brought forth a "Big Six," and Nineteen Twenty-One is expected to produce a "Big Five." It remained for Al Lichtman to give us an entirely original idea the other day when we held him up for a few minutes conversation. Says Al:

"Who will be the producer or distributor daring enough to step forth and announce himself as 'The Big One'? A great opportunity awaits the man whose selling slogan will be 'The Great I Am.'"

Associated Producers started out to be a "Big Six." Just about the time the incorporating meeting reached the demitasse stage J. Parker Read, Jr., tossed his productions into the fray. Then it became the "Big Seven." A few moons ago C. Gardner Sullivan began to feel lonely with all his old playmates in a game of their own and he asked for a seat. Thus the "Big Eight." Temporarily, at least. You never can tell. Associated seems to be reversing the old tap-room ditty about "Ten Little Bottles in a Row." Every time you turn around there's another member on the staff.

We'll say that Associated hasn't let many waste moments creep into the first seven months or so of its life.

Nineeen Twenty had proceeded merrily along as far as May 14 before the organization was incorporated. July 1st saw the opening of the home office, and—hip-hip-hooray—July 4th marked the opening of the branch offices.

It was September 12th that the initial production was released and already five pictures with the A. P. crest have reached the screen, and a sixth toes the mark this week.

You've got to expect speed from any organization with which Fred Warren is connected—if you know Fred Warren.

The Warren personality is, to us, one of the refreshing stimulants of the business. We never slight the opportunity that will give us a few minutes conversation with him. Fred is our picturization of a sales executive. He breathes confidence, optimism, and "go get it" spirit.

Three years we have tried to get Fred Warren to say something or other about the glorious yuletide greetings of the season, prepare for the harvest, etc. But we have failed. However, if you want to talk "product" with him there is no such thing as a holiday.

"Conditions?" he'll say. "Never better if you have an efficient organization, sufficient product and top-notch product. You need each item. You can't make money with a waste-motion organization; you can't succeed with an efficient organization marking time for lack of product; and you can't put over inferior product with the best of selling forces."

"Sell the Product"

Then he'd go off into facts, figures, percentage tables and proportion charts. As Sambo might say, "He's the concretest person what we knows."

Fred Warren bears the title of General Manager of Distribution for Associated. Oscar Price, president of the organization, gained our admiration right at the outset of his picture career, and for a very simple reason. And he holds it for the same cause. To wit:

He wouldn't talk then; and you can't get him to talk now.

Bre'er Price had been holding down the post of United Artists for a month or so when an informal gathering of trade paper editors then in existence invited him to be one of the weekly guests.

He accepted the invitation—socially. But not in a business way. We never quite recovered from the shock of meeting a man who had been in the picture business four weeks and didn't know all about it. Just think of a four week veteran who didn't hasten to tell us in loud tones how inefficient we are, how the efficient business school in which he had studied would enable him to set us right, and so on, and so to speak.

It's a good thing for the purposes of the Nineteen Twenty record that we have a few inches left to speak of the people who give Associated Producers its title.

Nineteen Twenty has shown us in a production way what Nineteen Twenty-One is likely to hold for Associated and given a bare hint of the glowing prospects when all the producers in its membership are found on the release chart.

We have had Thomas H. Ince's "Homespun Folks;" J. Parker Read, Jr., represented with "The Leopard Woman" and "Love," Allan Dwan as sponsor for "The Forbidden Thing," Maurice Tourneur's latest production, "The Last of the Mohicans." December 18th brings another Read offering, "A Thonsand to One," and the early months of Nineteen Twenty-One will find Mack Sennett making his debut with "A Small Town Idol." Ince then steps forward again with "Lying Lips." Leaving Marshall Neilan and George Loane Tucker in the Associated surprise bag.

In addition to Oscar Price, whose likeness hides behind this page, the officers of Associated consist of Thomas H. Ince, chairman of the Board of Directors; J. Parker Read, Jr., Secretary; Marshall Neilan is Vice-President and Mack Sennett is Treasurer.

Dark Is the Night—Stormy the Sea

W. W. Hodkinson Speaks Right Out in Meeting When He Sizes Up Nineteen Twenty-one's Prospects—All Is Off

WE are walking along a quiet country road, revelling in the glorious sunshine, cheered by the colorful wonders of nature. The blithely whispering brooks we pass, the birds that chatter gaily, the occasional rabbit that darts across our path in high glee all seem part of a picture of Paradise.

Occasionally we pass another traveller on the highway. Bright is our salutation. "Great day, isn't it?" "Marvelous country around here, eh?" Cheerily each passer-by echoes our sentiments.

Here's another one approaching. Seems preoccupied and serious. We'll take a chance. "Howdy!" we salute. "Grand weather, fine country, what?"

"G'r'r' No!" comes the response. "The rottenest weather you ever saw is waiting just around the turn in the road, a quarter mile this side of where you'll run into marsh, swamp, pests and fever. Atrocious country; beastly weather."

And, gosh, you don't have to wait for the twist of the lane. The sun has gone behind a cloud, the road grows heavy underfoot. Aw, what's the use of going any further on this tedious journey?

That's about the effect some odd hundred words of typewriting have just had on us. W. W. Hodkinson has responded to our invitation to express his views on conditions. And he sees the world through glasses darkly. He says:

"As to the present outlook I cannot say that I consider it encouraging. Producer-exhibitor and producer-distributor concerns are highly geared and overcapitalized, carrying crushing loads. This circumstance has driven them into the buying of theatres, as they hope by the added profits from such ventures to postpone the final day of reckoning. This day of reckoning in my judgment is not far off."

Pelting rain, thunder, zig-zag flashes of destruction. But just a moment! A ray of sun is slipping through the clouds. Mr. Hodkinson sees further than the storm.

He continues: "When the day of reckoning comes, amid the general wreckage there will be a safe refuge as far as the exhibitor is concerned. By the selected mechanism which I have built up for the past three years I have prepared for just such a situation when the exhibitors will be looking around for a steady supply of high quality pictures. The growth of our organization has been steady and along lines of absolute soundness. We have always been building for permanence. Our staffs at headquarters and in the field have been increased in response to an expanding volume of business. The exhibitors in the country have come to understand the permanent underlying values of our organization. They know that we can book for them better than they could themselves, being as close as we are to all sources of production.

"The formation of groups of independent exhibitors gathered together for self-protection is a clear indication of the need of such an organization as ours. We can supply them with the product to insure their absolute independence. On the other hand we have attracted to our organization some of the best directing and literary talent in the country."

Yes, we'll admit it. Coming from any one other than W. W. Hodkinson, those recent paragraphs would be straight advertising, labeled as such. Coming from "W. W." they are The Hodkinson Gospel. Just as all roads lead to Rome, so do all thought pathways in the Hodkinson mind lead to his organization. The world exists as a place for his organization to achieve its destiny; eventually his organization will be the world. "W. W." is the Firm Believer incarnate; you admire him for it, and you are inclined to nod your head in assent as he checks off film events day by day to prove to you that he is right.

No interviewer who has ever listened to a statement from W. W. Hodkinson would ever accuse him of insincerity. He breathes the faith that is within him, and practices it. This week he is starting on a trip around the country. Before leaving he issued a statement which in theme and tone is much similar to the exclusive one quoted above. Hodkinson sees a storm coming, and he has set out on the Paul Revere trip. When they begin to count the wrecks, as "W. W." sees it, he is not going to let any of the shipwrecked mariners complain that they did not know about the Hodkinson Volunteer Life Saving Service, with reinforced cork preservers and non-collapsible rafts. There's an Advance Man ahead of this storm. He started three years or so ahead, he's making the clean-up trip with the thunder following close on his heels.

Nineteen Twenty saw a Hodkinson Month drive which was a well deserved tribute to the man for the things he has done in motion pictures, and to the man for the organization he has builded. Nineteen Twenty saw the acquisition of the product of such independent producers as Irvin V. Willat, Hugo Ballin, J. L. Frothingham, and the Rockett Brothers. Nineteen Twenty saw the enlisting of the active cooperation of Irving Bachellor, one of the country's foremost novelists. Nineteen Twenty-One will see the presentation by one of the Hodkinson producers of pictures directed by T. Hayes Hunter as well as a coming series of Irene Castle productions

Downhill Now with Good Brakes

Earl Hammons Clung to Educational's Ideals on the Up Grade and All Is Rosy Now—A Record Breaking Nineteen Twenty

"Brevity, Soul of Wit"

A QUIET, mild-mannered young man; unobtrusive, yet registering a firm confidence that impresses; a gentleman in the picture business; an all-around regular fellow whom you like. Because he looks—and is—"white."

Some five years or so ago he set himself a goal. It was a long, long ways off. Far in the distance; it seemed almost a hopeless aim. Folks told him so. But he plugged away. Progress was slow at the start—and for a long time after the start. Discouragements were many. Times there were aplenty when it would have been lots easier to quit; or even to change to the paths that, while they did not lead to the goal, tread far more softly underfoot.

The young man believed that every bit as much quality and real art could be put into a short subject as was injected into five-reel productions. There were many who agreed with him on that. But, the young man also said that there would come a day when exhibitors would be willing to give the deserved reward to the man who put brains and ideals into the shorter length. To this the answer was a loud horse-laugh.

"The one or two reel subject is a filler," said the wise ones. "Don't care how much class you put into them—they will always be fillers. Exhibitors haven't the brains to see it otherwise. They'll pay their money for the feature—and then the filler must be thrown in for postage stamp money. Don't buck a losing proposition. If you must make short subjects—make them cheaply; if you want to spend money—do it on five-reel stuff."

But our young man—Earl Hammons—held fast to his aim; and today we find his organization, Educational Film Corporation, out of the woods and into the clear free spaces, grown to a point where even the "wise ones" don't dare to offer advice, hitting on high and still holding fast to the same trail.

That last point is the big one. It hasn't been any accidentally acquired super-special feature that has saved Earl Hammons from admitting that he was wrong; it hasn't been any of the sudden twists of a tricky game that has thrown him within reach of the goal. It has been steady, persistent, dogged, courageous plugging away at the one object. It has been a fight worth watching—and a finish worth cheering.

Educational got off to a good start in Nineteen Twenty with the linking up to the tremendous resources of the Hudson Bay Company. Educational closes the year with its own exchange system covering the country, with an output that finds a ready place on the best screens of the country—and an honored position, too.

June of this year saw the first organization steps in the plans for Educational's own exchange system. It seemed a foolhardy thing to do—even more rash than the first dreams of Earl Hammons—to establish exchanges devoted exclusively to the handling of short subjects. No picture longer than two reels is booked through these offices.

Educational at this time also decided to enter the comedy field and took over the distribution of the two-reel Christie comedies, with a release every two weeks. The Torchy comedies, Mermaid comedies, Chester-Outings and Chester comedies, are found among the additional product contracted for. An option was also taken on the rest of the Christie output.

What happened to the foolhardy exchanges? October 1st saw every exchange in operation—and the booking sheet presented figures far surpassing the quota set for that date. Fall saw the exercising of the option on the balance of the Christie output, the single reelers now being released by Educational.

And how about the dream of short subjects that would be the features? Have we seen short subjects that commanded feature rentals? Have we had short subjects that would call for expenditures equal to features and gross a business worthy of the expense? Well, "The Race of the Age" should answer those questions for all who care to ask them. And time after time our "Exhibitor Service Bureau" pages have presented newspaper clippings and other advertising matter showing the prominence in which exhibitors hold such specialties as Annette Kellermann in "The Art of Diving." "Babe Ruth, How He Knocks His Home Runs," "Modern Centaurs," and "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes."

Hammons also had an idea that exploitation and advertising aid could be put behind his pictures equal to that given longer films. He spent money to go at it right—and here too he landed solidly during Nineteen Twenty.

Many important tie-ups were made during Nineteen Twenty with prominent organizations, including a contract for the distribution of the first of the pictures made under the auspices of the National Geographic Society and the entire product of the New York State Conservation Commission.

We'll say the young man's dream has come true. As for Nineteen Twenty-One? Well, you know how it is about getting the engine running when you're at the top of the hill. Coasting is easy. It's just as simple to take on a prophetic air now concerning Educational and look forward to Nineteen Twenty-one.

New York Exhibs Line-Up for Blue-Law Fight

At a meeting of the Greater New York branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York, held at the Hotel Astor on December 10th, President Sydney S. Cohen appointed fifty-one state senatorial exhibitor representatives and forty-five state congressional exhibitor representatives to carry on an anti-blue-law campaign in the state of New York. The duties of the committee members will be to conduct in their respective districts a vigorous fight against the movement to secure blue-law legislation either at Washington or at Albany.

Mrs. Henry Moskowitz, chairman of the Recreation Committee of the Woman's City Club, addressed the meeting and promised to aid the state league in its fight against all blue-law propaganda. Senator James Walker, of New York, reported on his anti-blue-law activities conducted at Washington in behalf of the Motion Picture Owners of America.

Missouri Exhibitor Convention Postponed

Announcement is made from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri that the state convention of exhibitors, originally planned to be held at the Hotel Statler in St. Louis, Mo., on January 11th and 12th, has been postponed to January 20th and 21st. State censorship and the question of Sunday closings will be two of the prominent subjects to come up for action at the coming convention.

The state organization has been conducting for some time a campaign, including the signing of petitions by picture patrons throughout the state, against a movement under the auspices of the St. Louis Federation of Churches to legalize state censorship.

Marshall Neilan Coming East Within Two Weeks

Marshall Neilan expects to finish production work on "Not a Drum Was Heard" within the next two weeks. Then with the care of his fifth independent production off his shoulders, the well-known producer will start for New York on a brief business trip. The acquisition of new screen material, including negotiations for a spectacular subject said to call for the appearance of thousands of persons in certain scenes, is represented as the main object of Mr. Neilan's trip East. It is also stated that he will make advance arrangements for the productions of Booth Tarkington's "Penrod," with Wesley Barry in the titular role.

Indiana Exhibs to Combat Blue-Law Advocates

Representative exhibitors from each of the thirteen Congressional districts in Indiana met last week at the Hotel Severin in Indianapolis and discussed plans to prevent the passage of blue laws in Indiana when the General Assembly meets early next month. The exhibitors attending the meeting were recently appointed as a committee by President Gustav G. Schmidt, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana, to lead the anti-blue-law fight.

The Indiana state organization of exhibitors is going after legislation to legalize Sunday shows in a most determined manner. An elaborate publicity campaign has been mapped out with a view to bring the question squarely before the trade and the public through the columns of the press and also by mail. Meetings in each of the congressional districts are also to be held in the near future to the same end.

Blackton to Open Studios in London in Spring

J. Stuart Blackton, the well-known motion-picture producer, will leave for England on December 29 to open studios in London for the production of motion-pictures to be distributed throughout the world. Mr. Blackton plans to have his London studios ready for active work in the early spring. Lady Diana Manners and a number of internationally-known stars are reported to be scheduled for stellar parts in Blackton's British productions. Mr. Blackton will continue to make pictures in America from time to time.

Governor Sproul to Meet Church Federation

The removal some time ago of Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, of Philadelphia, from his voting capacity in the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, caused considerable agitation at the time among reform circles who considered Dr. Oberholtzer as the strictest censor Pennsylvania ever had. The removal of Oberholtzer and the appointment of Secretary Richardson to the voting vacancy was protested by some as a piece of politics in the favor of certain motion-picture interests. This brought a vigorous denial from Governor Sproul of Pennsylvania.

The controversy seems to be far from settled, however, and, accordingly, Governor Sproul has consented to hear a committee from the Interchurch Federation of Philadelphia, probably within two weeks.

Recent Incorporations in New York State

Better than a half million dollars is represented in the capitalization of companies incorporating in New York state during last week, for the purpose of entering some phase of the motion picture business. The Celtic Photo Plays of New York filed papers with the secretary of state, with a capital stock of $200,000, and naming as its directors Thomas J. Ford of Brooklyn, Thomas A. Kirby and Thomas Egan of New York.

Other firms include the Cinema Holding Corporation, Mount Vernon, $100,000; Bernard Munves, New York; Benjamin and Paul Pakula, Brooklyn; Eaton Holding Corporation, New York, $50,000; Thomas C. Mulligan, Albert Shulman, New York; Harry Goodman, Brooklyn, and the Arnold Picture Co., $60,000; Arnold A. Kline, Newark, N. J.; Ethel and Morris Forgash, Brooklyn.

Branford Theatre Opened in Newark, N. J.

On Thursday evening, December 16, Newark, N. J., saw the opening of the new Branford theatre on Branford Place at Broad and Market streets. Jacob Fabian arranged an attractive program for the Branford's premiere, and the Newark motion-picture patrons turned out in gala style to attend the opening.

Exchange Managers Elect Officers in Detroit

Because of transfers and changes of local exchange managers in Detroit, Mich., Ralph Quive, of the Realart offices, has been elected president of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, which is affiliated with the Board of Commerce. George W. Sampson, of Pathe, was elected vice-president.

Decision Reversed in Patents Co. Case

In a statement issued by Gustavus A. Rogers, attorney for Joseph H. Sampliner in the case against the Motion Patents Company, Vitagraph Company and others, for damages under the Anti-Trust Law, in which the defendants were successful in the courts below, it is reported that the United States Supreme Court, by a decision handed down on Monday, December 6th, reversed the decision of the lower court, which dismissed the action, and directed that the trial now proceed on the merits, so that the plaintiff can prove his damages.

The case arose out of the dealings between the Lake Shore Film Supply Company, Motion Picture Patents Company, General Film Company and the Licensed Manufacturers, and goes back to the days before the government instituted the proceedings against the so-called "Motion Picture Trust."

New York Reform Body to Have Busy Year

The New York Civic League, with headquarters in Albany and well known to the motion picture industry, from the fight which it has waged year after year in the legislature in the hopes of securing a more strict censorship in this state as well as to close motion picture shows on Sunday, has just come out with an announcement of its legislative program for 1921. The league will again enter the limelight, not exactly in cooperation with the Sabbath Day Alliance, but working along similar lines in a fight to down the law which now enables the various municipalities to settle for themselves the question of Sunday shows.

The head of the league is Rev. O. R. Miller of this city, associated with George West. A meeting of the directors was held a few days ago and the program as now outlined discloses some interesting information, including the fact that the league is out to fight the Walker baseball bill, the Sunday motion picture law, as well as the Walker prize-fight law and the 2.75 beer law.

To Act Against Exhibitors Not Playing Bill Advertised

Charging that certain motion-picture theatre owners in Troy, N. Y., are advertising pictures which are not shown at their houses, Alderman David N. Cheney, of that city, will bring up the matter for discussion before the next meeting of the Common Council. There is a city ordinance in Troy carrying a penalty of $150 in the case of any manager of a motion-picture house advertising pictures which he fails to include in his program. Mr. Cheney declares that two instances of this violation have been brought to his attention within the past week.

Snapshots

By Wm. A. Johnston

S. Barrett McCormick. Left New York this week for Los Angeles to unite the motion picture and the dress suit at the de luxe Ambassador theatre in the de luxe Ambassador Hotel. Also to manage the Kinema and other Lesser-Gore theatres in Los Angeles. At a dinner given him on the eve of departure he says he will aim for the ultra-artistic and subtle; expects to make the Ambassador the "Vanity Fair" of picture theatres. The Ambassador opens in February. We look for new and illuminating material in our Exhibitors' Service Bureau, of which Barrett McCormick has long been a prominent and very helpful associate editor. A young, quiet, clean-cut, modest man. Says very little and does much. His newspaper advertising is watched closely by exhibitors. Has splendid knack of picking at human interest and writing appealing copy. His prologues and stage settings are original and notable.

The Howard Theatre, Atlanta. Another de luxe theatre opened Monday evening, December 13th. Prominent New Yorkers in attendance. Management of Ralph de Bruler, who formerly directed the several theatres of the Macon Photoplay Company. A fine type of exhibitor. Lots of vision. Adherence to high standards. Sees the photoplay theatre the home of the cultured classes and believes music will play a big part.

Passion. Happy to see our predictions on this picture verified. Opened big at the Capitol theatre. Claim made of a new record a single day's receipts. Big jam at box-office Sunday evening. Fine presentation by Rothapfel. Picture should have long New York run. Prominent exhibitors in attendance at Sunday afternoon show: E. V. Richards, New Orleans; A. M. Fabian, Jersey City; Col. W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; M. L. Finkelstein and I. H. Rubin, Minneapolis; Aaron Jones, Chicago.

E. B. (Farmer) Dunn. A pioneer projectionist. Inventor of Speedco arc controller, now widely used. Perfected the longitudinal film in early days. Now to the front with new camera which takes natural color and stereoscopic pictures. Says time is ripe for new mechanical improvement in pictures. Means much to pictures, artistically and commercially.

M. Leon Bracker. Saw his wonderful posters for "Man, Woman and Marriage," the new Holubar picture. New in treatment. Fine execution. Striking. Will excite much public interest. Hope exhibitors will give them proper setting. Decided advance in posters. Had only high interpretation of picture's subject matter and suggestion of the quality, and distinction.

Arthur S. Friend Denies Wall Street Rumors

In view of recent reports circulated in Wall street circles that, current with his resignation as treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Company of New York and New Jersey, effective January 1, his holdings in the film concern would be thrown out on the market, and desirous of obviating any erroneous impression as to his future status as a member of the board of directors, Arthur S. Friend has issued the following statement:

"Any impression that I had resigned as a member of the board of directors is false. Although not generally known at the time of my resignation, it did not include my future standing with the board as a member. I simply resigned my executive position in order to make myself free to develop personal interests. I have never had nor entertained any idea of resigning from the board. I have considerable stock in the corporation which I conceive to be good property, and have no disposition at this time to sell it, and any report that I was going to unload or was at all antagonistic to the corporation or its management is erroneous."

Blue Law Fight of M. P. T. Receives Endorsements

The Motion Picture Theatrical Association is in receipt of many letters from prominent men and women who signify their intention to support the association in its fight against a "Blue Sunday." Among those who pledged their support are Governor Alfred A. Smith of New York, Mrs. Charles Sabin, Mrs. John Francis Yawger, and Judge Wadhams of the Court of General Sessions.

A mass meeting was held on December 16 at the Apollo theatre on Forty-second street, presided over by J. A. Quinn, president of the M. P. T. Association. A number of well known men and women were present to voice their protest against the depriving of the public of wholesome amusement on Sunday.

King Sails for England

George King, president of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, sailed for England Tuesday, December 14, to be gone a month. Mr. King's trip is partly for the purpose of describing in person to the officials of the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., the progress made in the United States by the Stoll Film Corporation of America, the first release of which, "Squandered Lives," will go to exhibitors January 2.

Kelley on Extended Trip

Winifred F. Kelley, general sales manager of Sunrise Picture Corporation, will leave next week on an extended trip around the country in the interests of the Peggy Hyland feature, "The Price of Silence." Mr. Kelley will touch every important film center from Maine to California.

Industry's Aid Promised; "Blue" Laws Discussed

The Committee of the N. A. M. P. I. and the M. P. T. O. Association met in joint session the morning of December 14th at the Hotel Claridge. The meeting was closed to all but the Committee members. A statement of the transactions, which will probably last all week, will be made to the trade and newspapers through a press committee to be appointed by President Brady of the N. A. M. P. I. A spirit of harmony marked the opening session.

The joint committees were addressed by Herbert Hoover and Felix Warburg, who made earnest pleas for help from the screen in behalf of the starving children of Europe. The leading charitable organizations of the country, irrespective of religious denomination, are already united in a drive for $33,000,000, the amount needed to take care this winter of 3,500,000 children in urgent need of food and medicine. The matter of a screen campaign will be placed in the hands of a committee. Mr. Hoover paid a high tribute to the motion picture. "I wish," said he, "to reiterate what I said recently to a group of prominent people. It was this: I credit two agencies with having done the most good for humanity in the past twenty-five years. They are the gas engine and the motion picture. The motion picture is a profound avenue of education and uplift."

Fined for Taking Boy's Word on Age Question

Should an exhibitor pay for the falsehoods of a too-youthful movie fan? This is the question raised by A. V. Bothner, manager of the Majestic theatre, Troy, New York, who was arrested on November 22 and fined $100 for admitting a boy thirteen years of age into his theatre.

According to Mr. Bothner, the boy was asked by the ticket seller if he was sixteen years of age and answered in the affirmative. He was questioned again by Mr. Bothner, who happened to be taking tickets at the time, and gave the same answer. The boy, Mr. Bothner states, looked eighteen years. The manager was then arrested, the Humane Society prosecuting the case, and after a trial by jury, the fine was imposed and paid.

Mr. Bothner warns exhibitors that this is practically a test case. He states that a manager is not a mind reader, and feels that there is no reason why he should have been convicted of this misdemeanor. The boy's mother, in testifying, stated that she had given the money to him to go to the picture house.

Mother of Harry Garson Dies

Mrs. I. H. Garson, mother of Harry Garson, producer of the Clara Kimball Young pictures, died suddenly on Monday, Dec. 13.

Universal Has Option on Film of Prince's Trip

Universal has an option on a remarkable sequence of pictures showing the Prince of Wales on his recent tour of the world, it has just been announced by George E. Kann, export manager for Universal. The pictures were filmed by Captain William Barker, one of the leading British cinematographers, and have been put together so as to form a picture story of the popular prince's travels. It includes colorful and historic incidents taken from all the important places visited by the prince in his 50,000 mile jaunt.

The first prints of the travel feature to be shown in America will be brought to this country by Arthur Clavering, one of the leading British film men, and a prominent figure in the Film Booking Offices, Ltd.

Nathanson May Not Join Beaverbrook, Is Report

According to official intimation received at Toronto, Ont., N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, will probably not go to England to become associated with Lord Beaverbrook in the operation of the latter's many moving picture theatres in Great Britain for a number of months, if at all. It was officially admitted that Lord Beaverbrook has expressed a desire to have the services of the Canadian moving picture magnate and it is understood that Mr. Nathanson has received a handsome offer. At the present time, however, Mr. Nathanson is busily engaged with a theatre expansion program in Canada that is gigantic in proportions and widespread in extensiveness. He does not desire to leave this work, it is intimated, until a number of the large theatres in the principal cities of the Dominion are actually opened. In this work, Mr. Nathanson is representing the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation, a $15,000,000 enterprise, of which he is the managing director.

Brady Opens Fight Against Blue Law Advocates

War is declared against the Lord's Day Alliance. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, following a preparatory barrage on the part of its president, William A. Brady, went "over the top" at its last meeting to meet the Alliance's onslaught in its efforts to secure the passage of a series of blue laws through Congress. President Brady treated the last meeting of the national association to a rare spectacle of verbal pyrotechnics, in which every available aid of the organization was summoned to the fight which Mr. Brady characterized as "the most vital the motion-picture industry has ever been called upon to make."

As a result of Mr. Brady's appeal, a committee from the A. M. P. A. was appointed to attend the meeting of the N. A. M. P. I. and the M. P. T. O. A. on Dec 14th at the Claridge Hotel. The members of this committee are Paul Lazarus, president of the A. M. P. A.; C. L. Yearsley and Merritt Crawford. They will devise some definite way satisfactory to Mr Brady, in which the A. M. P. A. can put its shoulder to the wheel and help make the blue laws turn back.

New Sales Chief for "Big Four" in New York

Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists' Corporation, last week appointed Abraham C. Berman as sales manager of the New York branch of the corporation. At the inception of United Artists, Mr Berman was given charge of the Canadian offices. A short time ago, he made a tour of the Eastern and Middle West branch offices for Mr. Abrams and was recently summoned to New York to handle the business of this territory.

New Studio Is Built in Lake Placid, N.Y.

A new producing organization, with headquarters at Lake Placid, N. Y., is announced by W. F. Griffing. It will be known as the Independent Studios, Inc., and Mr. Griffing, former president of the Independent Productions and owner and general manager of "Arctic City," at Port Henry, N. Y., will head the new concern.

A new and fully equipped studio, large enough to accommodate two companies, is now in course of construction and will be ready by the end of January. In addition to producing pictures, Independent Studios will rent out their studio to companies desiring to make pictures of a Northwestern or Alaskan setting. A Northwestern city set, which can be altered easily, has been built by Mr. Griffing, who points out that Lake Placid, which is near New York, may be used for admirable snow scenes from November until April. The City, Mr. Griffing announces, is cooperating with the picture company, and will welcome producers. Arrangements have been made for excellent hotel accommodations during the entire winter. The new studio is equipped with Alaskan sledge dogs and all accessories required by a producer of pictures of the North.

Independent Studios will begin work on their own production on January 1st. The story contemplated is "Mac, of Placid," a novel by T. Morris Longstreth. Joseph Levering and Mr. Griffing will direct. The pictures will be all-star features of the highest calibre. Releasing arrangements have not been definitely settled.

Special Pictures Product for Federated Release

Federated Film Exchanges will distribute all past and future releases of Special Picture Corporation. David J. Chatkin and Marion H. Cohn concluded negotiations on last Saturday night on behalf of Federated, with Louis W. Thompson, president of Special Pictures Corporation.

Hereafter Special Pictures will center its energies on the production of high class short reel subjects, announces Mr. Thompson. "The arrangement with Federated," he states, "was made in the belief that there are too many exchange systems in the business, with a resulting duplication of effort and added costs to the exhibitor. If by consolidation and elimination we can preserve and make bigger an organization that is on the right track of fair dealing with the theatre owner, we believe that we have made a good move.

"In Federated," he continued, "each exchange is independently owned and is affiliated with the national organization. Its head is the owner and not a branch manager working for a salary."

"Passion" Scores a Hit

BOX-OFFICE records of the Capitol theatre, Broadway and Fifty-first street, New York, were smashed Sunday, December 12, when "Passion," a First National special attraction, opened a week's engagement there. That the receipts would have been much larger had the house been bigger is accented by the fact that the sale of tickets was stopped at 6:30 p. m., at which time the sidewalks and streets were jammed with people for two blocks in each direction. The reserves were called out to keep order and the box-office window was closed. Officials of the Capitol also declared that it was their belief that the beautiful weather outdoors kept many patrons away from the theatre.

"Everybody in the theatre is confident that it will establish a week's record," said Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol on Monday morning, "the matinee weather yesterday was not as propitious for theatre attendance as it was on the Sunday when the box-office receipts came nearest to the record amount taken in yesterday." Mr. Bowes said that the production had gone over in bigger style than anything that had ever been shown at the theatre.

The New York critics were unanimous in the expressions on Monday morning that the production is one of the pre-eminent pictures of the present age.

"Parish Priest" Plays Premiere at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

"THE PARISH PRIEST" an adaptation of the late Dan Sully's famous stage play opened its premiere engagement at the Capitol theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Dec. 13th and according to Herman J. Garfield, manager of the Capitol, played to S. R. O. business both matinee and evening performances the opening day.

Review by James F. McKeon

"The Parish Priest" is a pleasing and exceptional heart interest story of the village pastor who takes the broken and knotted skeins of love and friendship of his parishioners and through a shuttle of kindness weaves a cloak of happiness for all. The production is Irish in atmosphere but entirely nonsectarian. It touches neither creed or nationality and combines palatable portions of love, humor, and pathos and sustains interest delightfully.

William Desmond cast as the clergyman was never better in any role. Ruth Rennick scores in the principal feminine part. The supporting cast is well chosen and the character work of Walter Perry and Billie Bennett notable. The photography is good throughout and the scenic locations exceptional. The projection time is one hour and fifteen minutes. The author is Daniel L. Hart, present mayor of Wilkes-Barre. The production was directed by Joseph Franz.

The presentation includes a fifteen minute prologue with elaborate stage settings that serves as a splendid introduction to the screening of the feature itself.

Stoll Co. to Produce in This Country

That the Stoll Film Corporation would produce pictures in America during the coming year was announced by George King of that concern upon his recent departure for England.

In the course of a statement made before sailing, Mr. King placed his concern in the category of American firms, with a thoroughly American personnel.

The fact that the Stoll Company produces, and will continue to produce, a portion of its output in England, merely carried out the purpose, he declared, behind the operation of the company—namely, to be an international organization, dealing with an international commodity. In this connection he drew a comparison with Famous Players, which also produces in England on a big scale.

That pictures made by his concern should be catalogued as "foreign" productions, any more than those produced by Famous, would be a mis-nomer, he declared.

Heavy Demand for Tickets to Movie Ball Jan. 5

The demand for box seats and tickets for the ball and entertainment to be held under the auspices of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Astor on January 5 is, according to reports, greater than even the Committee on Arrangements anticipated.

Almost all of the large producing organizations have secured one or more boxes, and individual tickets have been sold at exceptional speed. The number of individual tickets is limited to twenty-five hundred. This number of tickets will, it is said, have been disposed of fully a week before the event.

Through a special arrangement with the management of the Hotel Astor, the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce has arranged a special table d'hote dinner which will be covered by the cost of the ticket and which can be partaken of by the guests any time after nine-thirty in the evening until the closing of the affair.

The vaudeville entertainment arranged by B. S. Moss, Marcus Loew and the other committeemen is also taking concrete shape.

A. M. Gollos, president of Gollos Enterprises, Inc., is completing arrangements for a trip to Denver, Colorado, where he will open a branch office for Gollos Enterprises.

The first feature to be released in that territory will be "The Birth of a Race." This production has never been shown in Denver.

Gollos Enterprises now control twenty-one states for "The Birth of a Race," and from the Denver office the following states will be served: Colorado, Utah, Nevada, New Mexico, Wyoming, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Russell - Greiver - Russell announce that they have completed negotiations with the Bray Pictures Corporation for the animation of "Gasoline Alley," Frank King's cartoon to which they recently purchased the screen rights.

Three scenarios have been turned over to the Bray people for animation. These three scenarios were picked from a great number as being the very best obtainable for screening purposes.

The producers of "Gasoline Alley" are spending considerable time and money in a search for the best scenarios the market holds. It is their belief that the animated cartoon with automobiling as a background and real humorous situations and stories picturing incidents that have happened to any one who has ever driven an automobile, will please the public greatly. It is their endeavor to make "Gasoline Alley" cartoons real features in capsule form, full of humor, speed and interest.

The first "Gasoline Alley" will be ready within a few weeks for viewing by the producers.

J. L. Friedman, president and general manager of Celebrated players Film Corporation, announces that "Nobody's Girl" starring Billy Rhodes, is now ready for release through the central west territory.

The picture, which is a Federated Film Exchange output, presents the popular little screen star in a story of the air, land and sea. Such well known players as Melbourne MacDowell, Herbert Lindley, Leo Willis, Lloyd Whitlock and Mary Alden appear in Miss Rhodes' support. The feature was directed by Francis Grandon, who made "Hoop La" and other productions in which Miss Rhodes starred.

A trip to Minneapolis brought J. W. Carnrick, of the Rothacker Industrial Division, two contracts for industrial pictures. C. P. Tobin is on a sales tour of Ohio. W. H. Strafford has returned after directing an industrial picture in the northwest.

Irving Garmon, formerly on the road with "The Birth of a Race," in Kansas City territory, now is covering the northside of Chicago for Gollos Enterprises.

Padorr, president of the Merit Film Exchange Company, Chicago, is in New York closing contracts for the territory on the new Esther Starring series of animated cartoons made by the popular artist, Penny Ross, creator of "Mamma's Angel Child," featured for years by the Chicago Tribune and many of the leading newspapers of the country. Mr. Padorr reports unusual success of the new series due to the great popularity of Mr. Ross as a cartoonist, and says that the posters which have been made for each release have been drawn by Mr. Ross personally and are unusually attractive.

W. H. Roberts, owner of the South Bend Auditorium, which has been under the management of Daddy Hines for some years, is rebuilding the house and will open it about the second week in January under his, Roberts, management. One of the features of the opening bill will be the first episode of the serial "Eddie Polo King of the Circus."

Maurice Hellman, of Universal, who has just returned from a visit to Bloomington, reports Manager Martin of the Irvin Theatre, savs that business is holding up exceptionally well for the holiday season. Manager Lyons, of the Castle Theatre, at Bloomington, claims to be outdoing all other houses in the point of crowds and attributes his great success to the fact that "he appeals to the masses and not to the classes."

At La Salle, Illinois, starting the week of January 17th, the Marquette Theatre will run, for a solid week, one of the first two Gertrude Olmstead pictures, while the Fisher Theatre, of the same city, will run the other. This is the new Universal star's home town, and both houses are anticipating and preparing for a record breaking crowd.

Among the bookings for the new Portage Park Theatre, which opened Saturday, are Century Comedies, distributed by Universal, the first of which will be "Hot Dog." They have also closed for International News, two numbers each week.

Mrs. Emma Cohen, for some time past the manager of the Casino Theatre on Madison street has resigned and is preparing to leave for the east. She will make her future home in Fall River, Mass. Mrs. Cohen made a big reputation while in Chicago as one of the most successful managers of a downtown house, and had the distinction of being the only woman manager in the loop.

The Independent Master Films of Detroit contracted last August for the Neal Hart Series, and has participated in the advertising campaign on these pictures. Last week this company purchased the entire business of the Joe Horwitz Productions in the Film Exchange Building. The purchase price was not disclosed.

Friday afternoon, December 24th (Christmas Eve) will be a big day at all of Ascher Brothers' motion-picture theatres. A Christmas party will be held at each theatre and Santa Claus will leave Christmas presents for all the kiddies. This will be a special performance for the kiddies. An elaborate program will be presented—feature photoplays, and comedies specially adopted for the children with vocal and musical specialties.

Roy R. Dickson, formerly manager of the St. Louis Film Exchange, has accepted an offer from the Independent Films Association of Chicago, and has assumed important duties in the production department of that company. The St. Louis Film Exchange was purchased last week by Sam Werner of the United Film Service.

After playing Neal Hart's release, "Skyfire" to capacity houses last week, the Casino Theatre, located in Chicago's busy loop district, has re-booked the picture for an additional week's run. The Casino has very seldom altered its policy of changing its program each week.

Max and Harry Ascher, Roy McMullen, manager of Aschers' Kenwood Theatre, and Ed Nikodem, manager of Aschers' Terminal Theatre, will leave for New York City Monday, December 13th, to investigate conditions in general, and to talk with the leading exhibitors of the country relative to stage-craft and conditions covering the motion-picture field for the coming year. Max Ascher, Lewis P. Newhafer, general manager, and Harry Beaumont, booking manager, visited Peoria, Illinois, on December 9th to look over Aschers' New Palace Theatre, which is being erected in Peoria. The Palace Theatre is expected to be opened within the next two months, and will be one of the most up-to-date and beautiful theatres in the United States.

Leo White has arrived in Chicago to start work at the Essanay Studio, where he once worked as a member of Charlie Chaplin's company, on comedies bearing his own name and starring none other than himself. Upon the completion at Hollywood of his fourth comedy release for Independent Films Association, White determined to make Chicago the scene of production of the next four comedies in the series of twelve he is under contract to deliver, Chicago being the headquarters of the Independent Films Association. It has not yet been decided whether White will return to Hollywood after completing four comedies at Essanay, or whether he will remain in Chicago.

Louise Fazenda, who has achieved marked popularity as a comedienne, arrived in Chicago Monday on her tour of the country, preliminary to starting work on a series of two reel comedies to be released by Special Pictures Corporation. Manager Dillon has arranged for a number of personal appearances for the popular star in Chicago, and she was welcomed by patrons of the Pantheon, Covent Garden, West End, Broadway-Strand, Woodlawn, Jackson Park and other theatres during her stay in the city. On Monday Manager Dillon was host at a luncheon party in her honor at the Congress Hotel at which representatives of local and trade press were present. Miss Fazenda has completed her contract with Mack Sennett, and will devote her entire time to the pictures to be made by Special Pictures Corporation.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS Roll of Honor

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven hundred exhibitors are listed in the pages that follow; seven hundred live wires, worthy representatives of the art of motion picture presentation and exploitation. Motion Picture News has not attempted to exercise any self-bestowed wisdom in the selection of exhibitors deserving a place on an "Honor Roll." We have allowed the events of the year to tell their own story, place their own honors. In the seven hundred names that follow will be found those exhibitors and advertising men who, by unusual exploitation and presentation of pictures, have earned space in the columns of the Exhibitor Service Bureau. To these men we are indebted for the material that makes possible an Exhibitors Service Bureau; to these men producers and exhibitors are indebted for the inspiration that makes for better "selling" of motion pictures. Just as the motion picture retailer—the exhibitor—stands shoulders above the retailer of any other commercial or amusement field in advertising and selling ability, so do these seven hundred deserve recognition for the achievements that have placed them on "The Motion Picture News Roll of Honor. The names given include those exhibitors whose doings have been related in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau during the past twelve months.]

We Asked Them:

Is This a Merry Christmas?

We "Uncle Sammed" the Above to a few of Our Exhibitor Friends—Some Big Boys, Some Little Fellows, But All Mighty Good Fellows

East, West, North, and South were represented in the list, a sort of hit or miss proposition but intended to get the views of all sections of the country and the conditions in all classes of theatres.

On these pages are published the replies received to our question up to the time it became necessary to close the forms for this particular part of the 1920 Christmas edition. Some of the boys didn't get in with their contribution in time for the kick off.

To these we apologize for so early a dead line, with regrets that we and the News readers are to miss what they have said. A few to whom letters were sent just naturally are such procrastinators that they never will get around to answering our question. These we view with charity, having in mind our own shortcoming in many a like circumstance.

However we regret also that we go to press without them. To those who are represented we extend sincere thanks and congratulations.

May your Christmas be as merry as you expect it to be—judging from the optimistic expressions of your contributions.

Charles H. Williams, Gen. Mgr., Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I., Advises—

There is an old saying that "He who would not be knocked, should knock when entering and not when leaving" which is very applicable to the entertainment business today. We each and every one should feel thankful and show our gratitude in an every day expression of some kind for the bountiful blessings which we have this day. The yoke of the Moving Picture Trust has been broken and the exhibitor therefore has a wider field, and if he is awake to the opportunities that are knocking, the industry, both from the producer's and the exhibitor's end, will be the better for it.

Wishing the Motion Picture News and each one of its staff the very best of success which they deserve for the standard they have maintained, we are, as ever,

Harold B. Franklin, Manag. Dir., Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y. Reports—

The glowing fire with its blazing grates; chairs drawn close; evening shadows fading into black distance—such is the atmosphere beloved of the Xmas story-teller.

The history of motion pictures makes a story in keeping with Xmas. It tells of the struggle of a handful of pioneers who developed the industry from a side-show into an art that is second to none in the affections of the people. These men must feel very proud of their achievement. After all, this is a wonderful industry we are in, where business and artistry are bound together; where prosperity has been the reward of true effort and merit. We have much to be thankful for. Let us show our gratitude by keeping the industry clean and let our business ethics be beyond reproach.

A. G. Stolte, Managing Director, Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, States—

Every exhibitor should have a Merry Xmas. That is my belief, and nearly every brother exhibitor in this good old state of Iowa is going to have such an Xmas. The reason for it is this, there never have been better times, his admissions have advanced, and while his film rentals and general expenses have increased, he will find after careful study that he has had more paid admissions than during the previous year.

He has had better productions, he has had a better chance to exploit them, and if he has not taken advantage of every opportunity he has passed a good "bet." The producers have been liberal in their methods of showing exploitation, the trade papers have never faltered to show the exhibitor every angle to put a production over, and all combined, if he has been asleep and let his competitor have the Merry Xmas instead of himself, it is his own fault. We wonder if 1921 will offer us as good an Xmas as has 1920.

An Effusion By the Best Joke Smith in the Game, George E. Carpenter, Mgr. Paramount - Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah

Personality Plus! says our Advt. Cuss,
Another live stunt—it's a ringer!
Ruth, little girl, with the cute spit curl,
Acquires soft corns on her finger—
Much handling of cash—Cashier records go smash!
Oh, boy, hustle out the s. r. o. sign—
Usual crowds every night, 'neath electrics so bright—
Now, listen, we'll admit the bum rhyme—but
The reason for this outburst on the part of our janitor is the fact that the Paramount-Empress has enjoyed the greatest year in its history, some thirty married employes will discuss turkey and trimmin's at Xmas while the ushers will be dolled up in fancy haberdashery, to say nothing of the coon porter who has a weird golf cap, waistcoat and other fix-in's—all on the house!

That's the reason we are going to have a Merry Christmas.

Good pictures, a set policy and "the customer is always right" are among the factors. We are getting the highest prices in town and standing 'em up every night. We did it every night during the hot weather, too, last summer!

And We Added

If So Why?—If Not Why Not?

Louis K. Sidney, Manager Fox Theatres, Denver, Colo. Contributes—

I offer my thanks to the following ones,
Who have made my dreams what they are
To the vast army of workers in the industry
Who helped theatres advance so far.

To the producer, who struggled a good many years,
During days when the game looked cold,
To the author, the stars, to the pioneers,
Who battled from long days of old.

Thank God, they've stuck to the ship to the last,
And did their work as it should be done,
I owe it all to those great men—and to them
Xmas Greetings — Happy New Year for '21.

H. C. Horater, Managing Director, Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, O. Tells us—

This will be a real Christmas for both the Alhambra and Pantheon theatres, for the reason that the producing companies, particularly such big ones as Goldwyn, First National, Robertson-Cole, United Artists, Associated Producers and others, have given us big pictures, at a fair and equitable rental, so that we could make money. We are also thankful, notwithstanding that there appears to be a general depression, that our theatres have made money during the past year and that prospects never looked brighter. A year ago we were the first to change admission prices and are pleased to say that our patrons have never complained of the same for the reason that we give them just what they want and the big producing companies backed us up by giving us wonderful pictures. I wish the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the readers thereof a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Earle S. Nesbitt, Manager, Linwood Theatre, Tarkio, Mo., Says—

Can we look 'em in the face and grin a "Merry Christmas"? Course we can.

But will they come back on the minute with "the same to you"? So? Well and good, then. No? Ah, soft music and flowers.

Those inflation days. Remember? Up went prices. Ditto, the quality? Say, did it?

And that thing they call Enterprise? Have we seen it through their glasses?

You Old Year, you. You've labeled us. Which is it? "Good scout"? "Gold-digger"?

Well, Nineteen-twenty-one will make it plainer—sheep or goat; shoddy, wool.

One-nine-two-one, howdy and come in. You're lookin' friendly.

A. J. Moeller, General Manager, Mich. M. P. Exhibitors Assn., Contributes—

A Merry Christmas for exhibitors? Certainly. Public sentiment, our patrons demand a Merry Christmas. Consequently, the exhibitor creates a Christmas atmosphere in and about his theatre, arranges for a special Christmas program, special presentation, kiddies' Christmas matinee. He extends Christmas greetings via his screen. He and his surroundings fairly radiate the Christmas spirit, which results in merry Christmas. Who can say that happiness given does not bring a like return?

He himself is merry, because he is an optimist, none other could be a successful exhibitor, and an optimist can not be other than merry at Christmas time.

James A. Maddox, Managr, Victoria Theatre, Columbus, O., Contributes—

Harnessed together, working in absolute harmony, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, by use of their screens, can wield a power so far-reaching and so effective that the world will stand amazed at its potentiality.

Exhibitors of America, Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp was a myth, but there is nothing mythical about your wishes being granted, if you will put aside petty differences and present a solid front, lay your case before the people in an intelligent manner and demand your rights in legislative and other matters that are vital to the best interests of your business and the best interests of your patrons.

Thomas D. Sorerio, Gen. Mgr., Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass. States—

The film industry faces the most prosperous era in its history, despite moving picture actors.

There are three ages at which a moving picture actress is the most dangerous. At the age of seventeen, eigteen and any time over nineteen years.

Moving picture acting has now come to mean the art of impersonating persons not worth impersonating.

An exchange man's advice: if a customer calls you a liar, humor him. He may be right.

Only once in a movie actor's life does he really rise to the splendid heights expected of him. That's when he retires.

O. J. Chandler, Manager, Isis Theatre, Peru, Ind., Writes—

"Is this a Merry Christmas for the exhibitor?" When the exhibitors display the Merry Christmas sign in the box office and on the screen it sure will be a Merry Christmas for all, both the public and the exhibitors, and this prosperity has extended to the studios and we are now receiving the greatest productions that money and brains can produce, nothing is too great, therefore the exhibitors are profiting by this, and the public is more than pleased to pay the increase in the admission price when they receive value for their money.

So let the great work go on so that we may have many more "Merry Christmases to One and All."

Geo. E. Carpenter Earle S. Nesbitt Geo. J. Maurer Mrs. C. Weisenberger O. J. Chandler Sid Lawrence W. W. Watts Thomas D. Sorerio

Harold F. Wendt, Adv. Mgr., Rivoli Theatre, Toledo, O., Tells the World—

"Nobody loves a pessimist"—and as we all want to be loved, let's look at the bright side and tell the world that this is a Merry Christmas for exhibitors. Why?

Another year has passed without another war—although we still have a war tax with us. So we know the "neighbors" once more are seeking amusement and are looking to us to fill their stocking.

While film salesmen still hound us with their dazing figures, some wise man has thought of the idea of bringing back those pictures taken ten years ago. This might help us, but hurt our producers, so that's out.

The print paper scarcity is practically forgotten and once more are our editors willing to accept a story now and then telling of the "best picture yet made."

Phil. Gersdorf, Manager, Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla. Writes—

Yes, indeed, this should be a Merry Christmas for the exhibitor. The very fact that he is one of the cogs in one of the most fascinating and progressive industries in the whole wide world should give him genuine cause for joy. And that wonderful spirit of cooperation which has been gradually increasing throughout the whole industry, sponsored and encouraged by the hard-working trade journals, gives promise of even better times to come. Regardless of certain local conditions, prosperity and good times loom ahead, and with one's face to the sunshine, the shadows soon fall behind.

Wishing you and the entire "game" a Merry Christmas and a prosperous and happy New Year, I remain,

George J. Maurer, Manager, Strand Theatre, Louisville, Ky., Presents—

This should and will be without doubt a Merry Christmas for Exhibitors, in fact it should be a merry, merry one for us all who have the honor to be connected with this great industry. To my notion we are "Sitting on the Moon" with plenty of worth while productions and the public running true to Barnum's statement, which I would make read like this:

"The public want to be entertained with motion pictures." We have the theatres, the producers are giving us the pictures, we are going to give them what they want, and we will always have a Merry Christmas.

This should be a Merry Christmas for the NEWS. "You cover the field." Nuff Ced.

Greetings to the Industry at large.

Edward L. Hyman, Manager Strand Theatre, Brooklyn Tells His Story in Poetry

"Merry" is a grand old word
Especially when
It is tacked onto Christmas
And because we are Merry
Over here at the Brooklyn Strand
You'll forgive us
If we admit that we have
A great theatre
A great show—always
A loyal patronage
A big year ahead
A tip top staff
And no regrets.

From New Orleans and the Saenger Amusement Company, Through E. V. Richards, General Manger, Comes This Message:

Honesty of purpose, elimination of waste, performance instead of promise together with efficient coordination of all branches of the industry for its general good will put the motion picture nearer the apex of big business for 1921. It might be a seasonable idea for some producers to realize that Mr. Barnum has been dead a long time and that Abe Lincoln was a prophet as well as a statesman. We in Dixie at this Christmas-tide are keeping our faces to the sun, looking ahead.

Mrs. Cecil Weisenberger, Mgr., Liberty Theatre, Geneva, O., Comes through with—

"SURE—It Am Gwine to be a Merry Christmas for Exhibitors." WHY?

The Liberty theatre, Geneva, Ohio, is going to give the kiddies of this community a wonderful party, with a real Santa Claus and "everything."

We also anticipate a successful season, although with present high rentals, the monetary result may not be all one might wish.

We have just finished a three days' run of "Humoresque" to crowded houses.

Good music is our specialty. Through novel and attractive advertising we try to keep everybody interested.

Result—A Merry Christmas and Prosperous New Year for Exhibitors.

Charles W. Mason, Manager, Orpheum Theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind., Writes—

Is this a Merry Christmas Time?

Well I should hope,—I say it's fine. Just finished some "Dangerous Business" here and knocked all records for this year.

Dinty's coming and believe me boys,—it's going to make a helluva noise. You can ask us why our Christmas is merry; we'll tell you now, it isn't the sherry. Not even Santa has got the drag—we're safe this year from every snag. Associated First National exhibitor's safe franchise is why we're acting so frisky and wise.

Merry Christmas to all—Happy New Year, too! Associated First National,—here's looking to you!

Edward L. Zorn, Gen. Mgr., Temple Theatre, Toledo, O., Says—

Merry Christmas—Sure! I have no blues to sing and if you ever run across the bird that colored the Mondays just send him along to the Temple and the staff will submerge him in the mellifluent Maumee. Thanks for the opportunity of wishing a Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year to all exhibitors and the staff of the NEWS.

Here is the way the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, advertised "Get Out and Get Under." The result of the exploitation was great business according to Fred S. Meyer, manager of the Palace

L. W. Barclay, Managing Director, Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa.,

States—

"Is this a Merry Christmas for the exhibitor?" Most decidedly so, and for every other factor connected with the motion picture industry.

The summer just past has been the greatest for the picture business ever, and the future looks brighter than ever before.

The star system is passing, and director and story are coming to the fore. More and more the pictured story predominates, instead of the star. This will mean, eventually, that the salaries of stars will drop to a figure in proportion to their real contribution to the industry, and the money expended on screen plays will go into production, instead of into salaries.

The motion picture industry is still in the development stage, and, from indications, the development within the next year will be great.

Sid Lawrence, Manager, Ferry Field Theatre Co., Detroit, Mich.,

Writes—

I personally think that it should be a Merry Christmas because we have this last year enjoyed a year of the greatest prosperity ever known in the history of the motion picture theatres.

Of course it is true that we at this time are having a slight slump due, I think ,to the fact of money conditions, but the outlook looks very big at the beginning of the New Year.

But I think that every exhibitor in the business cleaned up last year and therefore should have a very Merry Xmas.

So let us all say that business is great and all look forward to the coming Merry Xmas and Happy New Year.

H. L. Swain, Manager, Saenger's Theatres, Shreveport, La.,

Tells us—

Is this a Merry Christmas for exhibitors? "Yes or No?" "You Never Can Tell," some of us will be "Going Some" "Down on the Farm," where we will spend the "Week End" "Down Home," like "An Old Fashioned Boy" with "Old Dad," "Mother" and "The Kid," telling "Nothing but Lies" to "Someone in the House" like "A Small Town Idol."

Others "Can't Have Everything" and "It's a Thousand to One" they will be "The Victim" of "A Full House," having "A Moment's Madness" with "The Spenders," "The Money Changers" and "Thoughtless Women."

Then there will be "The Poor Simp" who will be "Sick Abed," suffering from "Movie Madness," spending "One Week" with "Nurse Marjorie" and "His Poor Relations."

Eugene N. Roth, Managing Director, CaliforniaTheatre, San Francisco, Presents the Following

Indeed this should be a very merry Christmas for every Exhibitor in America, Dear Old Nick certainly filled our SOCK aplenty last year and all his good wishes were richly fulfilled. The Producers for most part gave us good pictures. The STARS are less important, The Authors rounded out better stories, The Camaraman delivered 100 per cent, The PUBLIC were very good to us. Milton H. Feld, Manager, Newman's Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.,

Sends us—

This will be a Merry Christmas for exhibitors because in the past year motion picture production and presentation have advanced from a game to a gigantic industry—almost an art. Admissions have come into their own. The day of appealing to the masses through a popular low admission price is past. The public realizes that it can get genuine entertainment in motion picture theatres.

This has been made possible by bigger and better pictures and the great development of motion picture presentation which has brought about the big business of 1920. Motion picture exhibitors should be merry because 1921 will affor d them bigger and better opportunities than any previous year in the short history of this infant industry.

With the genuinely big attractions promised by the producers for 1921, with admission prices set at a figure that makes the only limitations of proper and elaborate presentation the limitations of theatre and equipment and of the exhibitor's own genius, crowded houses will be the rule instead of the exception.

The developments of 1920 will make the year 1921 magnanimously profitable to those exhibitors who don't get cold feet and who use the brains God gave them to give their patrons bigger and better pictures properly presented.

W. W. Watts, Proprietor, Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill.

Operating three theatres, trying to keep managers satisfied, giving them the pictures they should have, listening to the woes of box-office girls and ushers, settling disputes among musicians, putting pep into the press agents, trying to keep expert film salesmen from charging twice as much as the films are worth, kidding express agents into being companionable, smiling at patrons leaving the house condemning the show, and juggling the figures so that there will be a little left to have a little entertainment—these are things I have been doing all year, and I suppose it is a Merry Christmas for me because I am still here. It's a gay life, but I wouldn't trade with anyone on earth —not even Wm. A. Johnston.

Enter the Practical Prologue

Norman K. Whistler's Complete Working Script Showing How to Stage a Prologue for "Earthbound"

MANY an exhibitor is asking himself what is to replace exploitation as the paramount item in the official life of the picture theatre. Our theory is and has been for a year or more—presentation.

Our hard-boiled advertising manager who loves to kid all editors frequently asks us with what we are going to fill up the pages of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau when the enterprising showmen "quit leading moo cows up and down the street with 'This is no Bull' on their sides." Our answer is, "Tell how the same exhibitors put on the show rather than how they put over the show."

In the text on this page and in an inspection of the accompanying cut is to be found the first practical example of what the exploitation pages of the News will contain in the not distant future, complete working scripts telling how to stage prologues, specialty numbers, etc. Herein is described the prologue arranged by Norman K. Whistler, production manager of the California theatre, Los Angeles, for the showing of "Earthbound."

To the layman that which is described and shown may be meaningless. To the electrician, the scenic artist and all of the back stage crew of any theatre it is a comprehensive blue print of how to accomplish certain things in connection with their work.

The publication of such an article and drawing marks an epoch in trade paper service. Following is Mr. Whistler's script. Index letters refer to the cut appearing above.

A—Red Canton Flannel Hanging Drapes (Temporary).

B—Skyblue Cheesecloth (Double yardage draped).

C—Stage floor completely covered to edge of picture sheet; also hanging over into the orchestra pit.

D—Large Polychromed Cathedral Candlesticks, with one five dips of blue lamp color and very small scratch to leak a pin head of light toward the audience. These have to be dipped every day or they will burn off and affect the picture. Lamp candelabra base; flame 110 volt clear.

E—Picture sheet not working (or title curtains); all cheesecloth coverings to mask to edge of sheet showing no black whatever.

LIGHTING EQUIPMENT.

B—Bunches—one bunch on each side to flood curtains and screen, using a 500 watt lamp, and three sheets of (light blue, not steel) to a color frame. (Two bunches on same circuit under a dimmer control.)

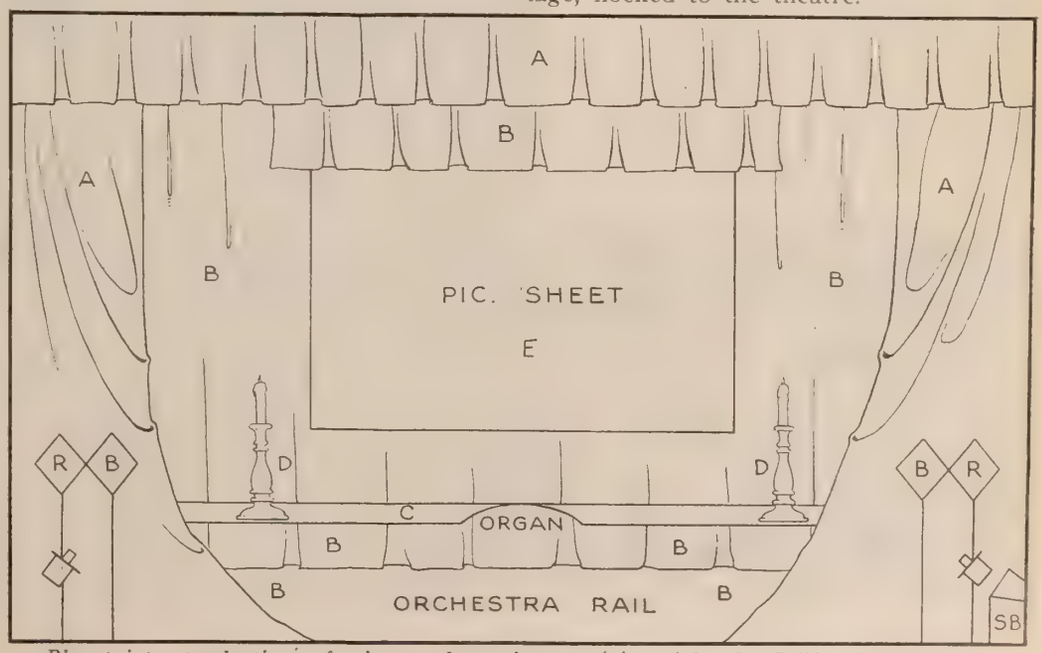
E.

R—Bunches—one on each side to flood curtains and screen with one 500 watt lamp and five sheets of red (warm, but not too dark) in two color frames; these two bunches also on one circuit and under a dimmer control.

C-E.

Cloud effect lamps, using 1000 watt stereopticon lamps, and a storm (fast speed) disc with a fleecy cloud disc, with a piece of pale (faded steel) blue gelatin to tone them to fit the color scheme of the main title. Note: Be sure that your clouds work the same way as the ones on the screen.

D.



Candlesticks do not need a dimmer control, but must be on the same switch and work together.

S-B.

Portable traveling (road) dimmer bank and switchboard.

LIGHT CUES.

The Los Angeles presentation was preceded by a weekly violin solo (Meditation from Thais), and a scenic. At the end of the scenic the lights came up slowly on the blue bunches to full up, while the orchestra was playing the introduction (vocal number), "Until Eternity," and projection started with the singer's voice. the cloud effects came up at the same time with the blues, and when all was up the candlesticks were turned on inside of all. the blues and clouds were dimmed down and out in time to allow the first scene to be given on a dark screen with the candlesticks left burning. (After this there were no cues until in the third or fourth reel, when the wife has told the husband of his wife's carrying on.) Title "Take Her Away from Here Before It Is Too Late"; then come up as slowly on the reds (to be full up when he shoots the other man) as your dimmers will stand. Time, about ten or eleven minutes. After the man is shot and while the action on the screen will cover it during the police business, etc., make your change from red full to blue full up and let it stand until the finish of the picture, where he walks off (out of sight) to Heaven.

Avonia Theatre Uses Special Edition Stunt

The exhibitor in the town so small that it has but once-a-week newspaper has been shown a way to make a crashing advertising smash by the manager of the Avonia, at Avon, Ill.

Avon has but one newspaper published on Thursdays. In view of the fact that the manager of the Avonia theatre is the best advertiser there was little difficulty in putting over the stunt once it was thought of.

The first 500 copies of the Avon Sentinel for November 18 were immediately transferred to a job press and an overprint in heavy, black letters was put over the entire front page, reading:

"Don't Ever Marry—

"It is tough for teamsters, garage guys, writers, milkmen, lawyers, gardeners, bakers, judges, ministers, doctors, grocers, jewelers, fuel men, florists, electricians, druggists, barbers, glaziers, carpenters, masons, operators, bankers, musicians, chauffeurs, architects, landlords, clerks, teachers—everybody!

"FIND OUT SATURDAY"

As soon as the copies were ready, they were sent out by automobile to the regular distributing places of the paper. Only the small town exhibitor who knows the interest with which a newspaper that is published only weekly can appreciate the force with which such a message all over the front page of the paper went over with the townsmen.

In addition to this smash, on the extra edition the Avonia manager had taken care to have plenty of reading notices and two display advertisements inside the same paper on "Don't Ever Marry."

The result was that nearly everybody within riding distance of Avon, in addition to the regular inhabitants of the village, flocked to the theatre.

Novel Prologue for "Dinty"

Weisfeldt of the Strand, Milwaukee, Makes Specialty Number Real Event

"DINTY" offered to E. J. Weisfeldt, manager of the New Strand theatre, Milwaukee, opportunity for exceptional exploitation, display of home talent, and, last but not least, an overflowing cup for the box-office.

First of all, Mr. Weisfeldt tied up with the biggest newspaper in Wisconsin, the Milwaukee Journal. Through this medium a story appeared each day with either the picture of Wesley Barry, the Chinaman, or the negro boy, or a still of some scene in the picture. An advertisement was run in the Journal reading as follows: "Wanted, freckled face newsboy who looks like Wesley Barry, Strand theatre, Tuesday, 4 p. m."

Another was run asking for a Chink and still another for a "Sammy."

Tuesday at 4 p. m. the lobby of the Strand theatre was jammed. Choosing those who were to take part in the prologue seemed impossible, so Manager Weisfeldt came to the rescue once more. He invited all the newspaper boys to a private showing of "Dinty" Thanksgiving morning, after which each newsboy whose ambitions were in the direction of the limelight would be asked to walk up on the stage and give a sample as to how he sold his wares. Was there a variety? Oh, boy! The ones who were cheered most by the newsy audience were to take part in the prologue. And their judgment was good, for with the aid of Manager Weisfeldt and the orchestra the boys put on a prologue that would have been a credit to any number of professionals.

The curtain arose on a scene—a gang of newsboys seated on a stone wall, some kneeling on the ground talking to the ivories, one lad strumming a banjo, another playing an accordeon.

"Dinty," portrayed by a local newsy, dressed as Dinty of the picture, in an old sweater, torn stockings, broken shoes and cap pulled down over his freckled face, came forward and in a regular newsy dialect sang, "Dinty, Dinty, Dat's De Salute They Gimme," an old newsboy song, the words of which were changed a little to suit the picture. He was a hit.

Then the little darkey, not to be outdone, stepped forth and "shook a dark shoulder," to the amusement of the audience.

A scene from the picture in which the little boy dressed up a la Lord Fountleroy approaches the "gang," holding a paper in which is a copy of Dinty's advertisement for a newsboy, and on the gang's cry "Where did you get that hat?" scares 'em all stiff with his voice when he shouts "Murder!" was presented.

A song by another of the newsies, yodeling and selections on the banjo and accordeon completed the prologue.

Free Apples Advertise Peaceful Valley

"Free Apples from Peaceful Valley" distributed from a wagon in the business center of Albany, N. Y., last week, proved a source of good advertising for Charles Ray's picture at Proctor's Harmanus-Bleecker Hall. Several barrels of apples were given away every day, the rig being surrounded at noontime by men and women who grabbed eagerly for the apples as they were passed out. Since the opening of the new Mark Strand theatre in Albany, stimulating competition, two or three of the theatres have employed exploitation stunts with good results.

Princess, Memphis, Decorates for Reid Picture

The psychology which justifies a neat personal appearance as a sales argument for salesmen, has its application in the dressing of a theatre front as was exemplified in the case of the Princess theatre, Memphis, Tenn. Charles A. McElroy, district supervisor of Memphis Enterprises, Inc., brought the lesson to bear when "What's Your Hurry" was being shown.

A display was arranged above the awning in the front of the theatre. The title, "What's Your Hurry," was set up in foot high letters, the words being separated by a three-foot cut of Wallace Reid and Lois Wilson in the leading roles. The correct proportionment of the lettering as well as its arrangement were of material benefit in giving the display an artistic touch.

Large six sheets were pasted on both sides of the entrance, forming perfect symmetry.

The appearance of the theatre helped this display. The Princess is a comparatively small building with Corinthian columns rising on both extremes to the top. The white painting accentuated the sign display.

Noble Furnishes New Idea

Liberty Theatre's Musical Wizard Puts On Fine Exploitation Stunt

PAUL NOBLE, manager of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., has used a business building stunt recently that is worthy of emulation by houses that are fortunate to have the services of an organist who can play from memory.

"For anyone who can name a song popularized within the last twenty-five years, which Henri Keates, our master organist, cannot immediately play from memory the Liberty theatre will give five dollars," said Mr. Noble at the Liberty Sunday noon concert, a weekly "S. R. O." event at this theatre.

"But," continued Mr. Noble, "should Mr. Keates not recognize the tune, then the person who calls for it must prove its existence by himself singing the chorus.

"Sahara," "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "A Bunch of Daisies" were typical of the first songs called for. Then some man requested "When I Was a Dreamer and You Were My Dream," and Keates, confessing the failure of his memory, quieted the giant organ while the fellow stepped into the middle of the aisle and sang the chorus. Applause which followed forced an encore and the man repeated the chorus. He received his $5.

Later a man with less talent requested a number not known to Keates. "You'll have to sing it, brother," Noble answered him.

"Couldn't sing if my life depended on it, but I might whistle," was the answer. He won his $5 reward, although technically the theatre was not forced to pay it.

"Cheyenne," some woman asked.

The opening strains of "Cheyenne" are identical with the introduction of "San Antonio," and Keates, in the excitement of the moment slipped into the latter song instead of the one requested. A whisper from Noble saved him just as he was concluding the chorus of "San Antonio," and then he played the right number.

"Lady, you may not recognize it, but that is probably the speed record for geting out of Texas into Wyoming," said Noble at the successful conclusion of the piece.

Stanley Chambers Creates Another Lobby Sensation

Stanley Chambers of the Palace theatre, Wichita, bears a reputation for being an adroit showman and one of the cleverest exploitation men in the business, even though he does run a house in addition. His most recent sensation occurred when he was playing "The Restless Sex."

The entire color scheme for the lobby and front-of-the-house decorations was worked out in blue, white and gold, a combination that in itself made the display one of the most effective ever seen in Wichita.

On both sides of the main entrance, display boxes had been built. These were arranged like miniature stages, with blue and red silk curtains as a background. The pasteboard pillars were placed about 12 inches in front of the curtain, leaving abundant space for the easels. The large lettering on the top was cut out of black and white paper, so that the light back of them gave an illuminating effect.

The large sign across the front of the marquee was built in similar manner, so as to be legible more than four blocks distant, especially at night time.

Unique as was the display in Wichita, it was equally artistic, many favorable comments finding their way to the box-office.

And "Down on the Farm' Goes On and On

Demonstrating what a smaller motion picture house, using second-run pictures as a rule, can do when some novel features are used in the lobby decorations, the California, an 800-seat house in the heart of the downtown section of San Diego, Cal., recently showed "Down on the Farm" for two days.

James B. Mason, proprietor of the California and also of the Dream, has in Edwin Slocum, house manager, and Vernon Lewin, assistant house manager, two live young men, and to Mr. Lewin falls the interesting job of arranging lobby displays.

For the showing of "Down on the Farm" he secured a life-size horse model, and about it grouped a typical fence, upon which were hung parts of the harness, while nearby was a plow and other farm equipment. During the matinee and evening shows a man in rustic attire stood near the horse or moved about inside the fence, adding the final touch of reality to the scene. The name of the picture appeared in large letters above the lobby entrance, and at night the letters were specially lighted, the words being spelled out in succession by an arrangement fitted by Mr. Lewin.

The California is directly on the route generally taken by the navy boys as they come up town from the harbor front and the rural scene caught them instantly, and many favorable comments were heard from them and others.

Carroll's Lobby Display for "The Devil's Passkey"

Tom Carroll, manager of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, had the entire attention of Prospect avenue centered on his lobby display of "The Devil's Passkey" last week. The Standard theatre lobby is narrow and the big end of the display had to be placed in one corner so as to catch the eye of the passerby on East Ninth street, the nearest cross street. So, with this necessity in mind, Carroll built a solid box around the ticket booth. This box came out flush with the sidewalk and was directly under the inner tier of lights of the marquee, which made it stand out all the more prominently.

A life sized Mephistopheles rose out of the corner of this box, clad in the conventional garb of his kind. Strings emanated from his hands. These strings hung loose almost to the sidewalk, and attached to each one was some symbol of sin. One had a deck of cards fastened to it. Others had dice, heads of beautiful women, bottles of wine, and other mementoes of the wild-oats sowing period.

All around the devil flames were blowing in the breeze. Bright red chiffon was the flames. And a fan placed underneath the chiffon was the breeze. A hose, led from the exhaust pipe nearby, exuded clouds of steam that might have come from the very heart of the infernal regions. This effect was heightened by a cluster of red lights that were placed in the marquee immediately over the head of the devil.

Full sized cut-outs also adorned the entrance and the lobby of the theatre, and so completely occupied the theatre entrance that the prospective patron was literally saturated with "atmosphere

Sladdin Stages Dance as Publicity Medium

Good exploitation means not only devising a stunt that is worthy of publicity notice but also seeing that it gets into print as was exemplified by S. G. Sladdin, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the Boston Exchange. He organized a dance, for the opening of the winter season, under the auspices of the Paramount girls at the exchange. That furnished the news, and was worth several paragraphs. Sladdin saw to it that the Boston papers gave the space it deserved and several of the journals, notably the Boston Post, used pictures of the committee in charge. The function provided a good time for all but was under exploitation furnishing, as it did, a means of publicity for Paramount.

Exploitation Man Has Talent as Cartoonist

R. C. Gary, exploitation representative at the Omaha Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, knows how to draw a line or two himself that even the censors cannot object to. Exhibitors who can wield a mean pen themselves may follow the example and actually sell their own newspaper publicity.

Gary's facility to draw cartoons won him additional newspaper space for his latest picture to exploit which was "Something to Think About," as is shown by the accompanying cut made from the original of Mr. Gary's cartoon published in the Omaha News of a recent date.

Hundreds of the News' readers chuckled at the subtle wit and then caught on when Cecil B. DeMille's latest special was advertised for the Rialto theatre. Gary is going so strong with his cartoon ideas that the News is thinking of attaching him to its staff, while the management of the Rialto theatre is equally certain that it can use him as its personal publicity representative because of the interest his "motion picture" cartoons have created in Omaha.

Rothapfel Staging Elaborate Prologue for "Passion"

That S. L. Rothapfel, production director for the Capitol theatre, has crowned his previous triumphs in novelty prologue and spectacular photoplay presentations with the climaxing achievement of his career, is the consensus of opinion among newspaper critics, as well as the general public that witnessed the premiere Broadway presentations of "Passion."

Fundamentally, the prologue as devised by Mr. Rothapfel for this attraction, comprised all elements which contribute to the Rothapfelesque type of entertainment, varying, however, in that the presentation combined for the first time, two separate and distinct theme notes of a production. The difference between the prologue for "Passion" and for other productions consequently lies in the fact that Mr. Rothapfel not only introduced the spirit of royalty and luxury, but also the feeling and impetuous wrath of the mob.

In view of the length of the production, it was deemed advisable to so arrange the presentation that the overture, prologue and screening of the picture blended into a comprehensive and colorful whole. To this end, Mr. Rothapfel devoted his efforts, supervising the research of the most tuneful and appropriate musical numbers of the Louis XV period available, and virtually compiling the most usable numbers into an overture that minutely expressed the dramatic emotions of the famous DuBarry story.

The overture embodied the spirit of romance in its opening strains, introduced the love theme that is later heard in various arrangements throughout the number, and lead up to the stirring strains of the Marsellaise, gradually diminishing into a dainty French minuette which was the cue for parting the curtains, to disclose a scene in a House of Royalty during the Louis XV period. Five couples in the fitting cosume went through their part of the dance which lead up to the entrance of the royal couple.

Daintily and gracefully, royalty danced on and on.

Suddenly, as a climax for a strange rumbling heard outside the castle during the last part of the dance, the leader of the mob appeared in the doorway. Close on his heels followed the throng.

It was here noticed that Mr. Rothapfel had introduced the leading characters who denounce DuBarry in the photodrama. Accusingly and with intense dramatic fervor, the mob terrifies the members of the royalty. The Marsellaise is the musical number used.

Joint Exploitation Publicity and Advertising Brings Profits

Usually the fact that a picture plays in two theatres in the same locality at the same time is regarded as a distinct handicap, if not a disaster. It remained for Ray C. Brown, manager of the Locust theatre and the manager of the Belmont theatre in Philadelphia, to upset tradition.

The picture was "Something to Think About." Instead of deploring the fact that they were both playing the same picture, the two managers, whose theatres are not very far apart, both being on Fifty-second street, boasted of it. The predominating line of copy in their joint advertising read: "First Time on Record. Big Enough to Play Two Theatres at the Same Time." They pooled their advertising, publicity and exploitation resources and because the picture was able to draw audiences enough to fill two houses at once, they did enormous business.

Buffalo Exhibitor Goes After Christmas Business

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre, one of Buffalo's most attracive neighborhood theatres, this week sent around to all his patrons an attractive card, which was enclosed in the Elmwood program for the week. The card informed Elmwoodgoers that tickets for the theatre were available in book form and that as a Christmas present one of these little books would make a most acceptable and unusual Christmas present, assuring the recipient many happy hours of real recreation in "Buffalo's de luxe Motion Picture Playhouse." The tickets in gift form were placed on sale at the box office or were delivered to homes of patrons if they so desired. Mr. Fowler reports that an unusually large number of the ticket books were sold and expects that he will have to send in another rush order to the printer for more before Yuletide arrives.

Wolfe Writes "Pome" About Doug Fairbanks

Here is a little "pome" which G. G. De Wolfe, manager of the Dixie theatre, Goldthwaite, Texas, used as one of the exploitation ideas of his campaign for "The Mollycoddle."

Venice, Cal., Exploitation for "Peaceful Valley"

Two pretty girls wearing tight-fitting white overalls and jumpers, one leading a balky donkey and the other holding tightly to a less aggressive goat.

Would they attract attention on the streets of any town or city?

Carl Marquard found that they would in Venice, California. He is the manager of California theatre there and the two niftily attired girls, with their escorts of live stock, comprised the first exploitation he has ever attempted since his theatre opened last July.

The results have made him decide that every picture he books from now on will be exploited because of the added success he is convinced exploitation will bring to any picture.

"Peaceful Valley" provided the basis for the exploitation.

The two ushers selected for the pilgrimage through the down-town section of the city were the prettiest of the usherettes of the theatre. Their trip was more successful than he had expected, for the mule became more balky and the goat more restive as the crowd which followed them grew in size.

In response to all inquiries the girls stated they were taking the animals to "Peaceful Valley" farm, and the crowd that followed back to the theatre when the animals had been recovered appreciated the remark, for the lobby of the theatre by means of cut-outs had been transformed into a miniature barn yard.

The goat and mule were put in a pen erected in the lobby and remained there as a part of the lobby display for the duration of the run.

Farming implements borrowed from a local hardware store aided in the effect obtained in the lobby.

The usherettes and the ticket seller wore the white form-fitting overalls and jackets.

Music and The Picture

Holidays, Seasons and Music

By Charles D. Isaacson

IT isn't always possible to book the pictures which fit into the holiday spirit, whether it be Christmas, Easter, Fourth of July or Columbus Day. But it is always the opportunity of the manager to add appropriate atmosphere with music.

I have purposely waited until this last moment to offer some thoughts on Christmas and music in the picture theatre, so as not to interfere with any plans which you may have had on foot. My purpose in these articles is to be suggestive rather than purely serviceable; I hope to arouse the imaginations of my readers so that they may follow their own inclinations along the lines I have started.

Therefore, before offering a type of Christmas picture program, I should like to indicate the atmospheric possibilities of music.

It is a comparatively easy matter to suggest any season, any holiday, any idea with music. For instance, a patriotic program can be made which veritably shrieks Americanism, nationalism and "My Country," and it isn't necessary to use the "Star Spangled Banner" only, either. Christmas is written into music with a flavor which is as significant of the event as Christmas trees and holly! The suggestion of Easter instantly offers a thousand opportunities, for the church literature of music is rich in compositions written expressly for the time of lilies.

A theatre manager books his pictures generally pretty far in advance, or he has to take his features more or less in schedule form. He cannot, except on rare occasions, select the feature or the comedy with any regard to the timeliness or appropriateness of it with the date. He cannot make Christmas picture programs; he cannot celebrate the coming of spring or the Emancipation Proclamation or Armistice Day or St. Valentine's Day or Washington's Birthday. Of course it is possible to make the picture supply the seasonable clue, but it is difficult. Of course, the news reel and some special short bits do bring something of what is needed.

But the music without any difficulty creates the atmosphere.

It is like decorating your house with lilies for Easter, holly and evergreens for Christmas, flags and skyrockets for Fourth of July.

People do like to be reminded of the event we celebrate. It is peculiarly a part of human nature to like to become part of an atmosphere. We feel good when we see the flags flying from the house-tops on a national holiday. We respond to the sight; we feel grateful for the attention with which the individual celebrants have added their touch of color.

When we enter the home of a friend, it gives us a thrill to find that there is a Christmas tree, with burning candles and many colored trimmings. The stocking hanging on the mantel-piece recalls old time's fun. The mistletoe is an impetus to kiss the pretty girl who's nearest to us.

So, it follows that the theatre which takes cognizance of the qualities in human nature which delight in seasonable reminders, atmospheric touches, holiday reminiscences endears the patrons to the house.

"It isn't simply a place where pictures are shown," the patrons say; "it's a homelike institution. They're always doing something which is different, always doing something which is so appropriate."

The best showman in the world is the man who can create a feeling in his patrons of a personal, intimate communion between themselves and the house. It is their place, not simply a theatre. It becomes a club house, so to speak. There is a personality upon the place. Oh, my hat is off for the theatre man who makes a personality shine out of his house. Several prominent managers have done this. When the public walks up to the box office and into the theatre and watches the show, it knows that that personality is expressing itself all the time.

There's a friendliness in a theatre with a personality which can never be felt in a place where they simply show pictures.

Don't forget that you don't make the pictures, so you can't put any of your genius in that. Your personality hasn't any place in the pictures themselves.

Only in the way that the pictures are presented—the atmosphere of the house—can you count. That's where the personality is made.

The music is the only place in the program where personality is created.

Keep a continual musical atmosphere in your program; keep the musical atmosphere in keeping with the turn of events holidays, seasons, etc., and that spirit of homeliness and friendliness cannot help but pervade.

Therefore it is well to keep in mind that musicians have supplied music for every occasion. It is written—if you will only find it. And do not for one moment think it is difficult to find. You can turn to any well informed musician and ask him for music for any occasion and the probability is that he could call off enough compositions for a whole week's entertainment. If I, for instance, were asked to produce a musical atmosphere for Christmas, I could name at least one hundred appropriate numbers. To show you what I mean:

Christmas carols, including "God Rest You Merry Gentleman," "The Lost Chord" of Sullivan; "Ave Maria" of Shubert or Gounod, "Holy Night," "Peaceful Night," choruses from Handel's "Messiah," especially the "Hallelujah" chorus, Verdi's "Requiem," slow movement from Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony," "Adeste Fideles," Toymaker's music, from Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland," "Star of Bethlehem," "While Shepherd's Watched Their Flocks at Night," "Hark the Herald Angels Sing," "Hosanna," etc.

It is not hard to pick from all the opportune music which is available in the Christmas literature. And the remarkable part of it is that from a single instrument up to full symphonic orchestra, there are arrangements aplenty from which to select.

Christmas atmosphere can be made with music, by chimes, religious choruses, quaint old biblical melodies, joyous children's songs, bits of hymns. Some managers with audiences not largely Christian might feel hesitant about using what might seem to be secular numbers. But this is found to be a mistaken fear—the entire world, including the Jewish public, understands that Christmas has

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Goldwyn announces that the eighth picture of the "Edgar" series is now ready for the exhibitor in time for showing during the holiday season. It is titled "Edgar's Little Saw" and is based on a Christmas tale written by Booth Tarkington. It is described as the best comedy yet written by Tarkington and especially appropriate for showing during the Christmas holidays.

Goldwyn reports that the series, the eleventh picture of which is now in production at the Goldwyn studios in the West, is going over unusually well with exhibitors and public alike. Ole M. Nelson, manager of the Majestic theatre, Grand Junction, Colo., writes:

"I consider the Edgars the best and surest comedy I play. Some of the others are more spectacular, perhaps, but for good entertainment, which you can bank on being clean, the Edgars are sure there. Edgar, his pal and sweetheart are perfect wonders at acting."

Johnny Jones and his "leading lady" in a scene from the next "Edgar" comedy released by Goldwyn, "Edgar's Little Saw"

William and Gordon Dooley, the well known knockabout comedians now appearing in the show atop the Century Theatre Roof in New York City, and known throughout the United States for their vaudeville performances, are the latest stars announced to appear in the series of Royal Comedies now being distributed by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

The Dooley boys have appeared on the stage ever since childhood. Their picture debut is made in a two-reel comedy titled "All Balled Up." This Royal Comedy series is distributed through the Reelcraft and allied Independent Exchanges everywhere.

Rivals Endorse Fox Special

First National Franchise Holders Commend "While New York Sleeps"

WILLIAM FOX takes special pride in the fact that he is in receipt of laudatory letters not only from the regular users of his product but also from friendly rivals in the field. One of the most pleasing expressions of friendly interest that has come to Mr. Fox recently is cited in letters and telegrams that have reached the home office in New York from James B Clark, of Rowland & Clark, Pittsburgh, and Nate Gordon, of Boston. Both these showmen hold First National franchises for their respective territories and have, in consequence, their own attractions to exploit in their theatres.

Mr. Clark asserted in his telegram to Mr. Fox that "the poorest day of the first week shattered all records at the Savoy theatre. I never anticipated such a tremendous box office success, playing to absolute capacity. Will keep 'While New York Sleeps' not only a second week, but a third week as well."

Nate Gordon said in his letter to Harry F. Campbell, manager of Fox's Boston branch, that "While New York Sleeps" was played in the Gordon's Old South theatre, Boston, for two weeks "with the biggest business the house has ever done under our management. It has likewise done a big business at our Olympic theatre, Lynn, and Gordon's Central theatre, Cambridge, and a good business at Upham's Corner Strand, Dorchester."

Mr. Fox points to the fact that "While New York Sleeps" is not alone a "big town" attraction, as proved in Mr. Gordon's letter, showmen in smaller cities are sometimes of the opinion that they cannot handle an attraction of exceptional proportions and theme to as much advantage as the same show will give to a big city exhibitor.

New London, Conn., is a town representative of hundreds of its size throughout the country. From the Empire theatre, New London, Manager Pouzzner wrote to Mr. Fox of his playing "While New York Sleeps" in circumstances that developed an outcome immensely pleasing. "This production," writes Mr. Pouzzner, "impressed me sufficiently to run it on the biggest week of my year — anniversary week.

Monte Blue Signed for Allan Dwan Picture

Monte Blue has been engaged to play the leading role in Allan Dwan's second Associated Producer's release, "The Perfect Crime," work on which was started this week at the Hollywood studios.

Since his return to the coast from New York two weeks ago Mr. Dwan has been preparing the script for the picture, which he himself will direct. The story is from the pen of Carl Clausen and originally appeared between the pages of the Saturday Evening Post.

Jacqueline Logan, a Ziegfeld girl imported from the Follies by Mr. Dwan, will play the leading feminine role opposite Monte Blue.

Pearl White Company Goes to Bermuda

On December 4 Pearl White, accompanied by her director, J. Searle Dawley, and the entire "Woman or Tiger", company sailed for Bermuda, where scenes will be made for the William Fox production that will eventually be released in succession to "The Thief," the Pearl White feature just issued. Miss White remained in New York long enough to see the first public showings of "The Thief."

Third Hallroom Comedy Now Ready

"This Is the Life," the third release of the new series of the Percy-Ferdie Hallroom Boys' Comedies which was directed under the personal supervision of Harry Cohn is now ready, according to the announcement made by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, which is offering these comedies to state rights' buyers. Harry McCoy, Hugh Fay, Lillian Hackett, Max Asher, Polly Moran and a capable cast make this a sure fire comic.

Legion Weekly Endorses "Topics"

"An editorial subject like 'Topics of the Day,' now familiar all the way from the Broadway palaces to the smallest village theatre, never drives the masses out of the house, but interests them so strongly that in two years it has developed from a hopeful experiment to a definite success."

The foregoing paragraph, quoted from the editorial page of the American Legion Weekly, sums up the unusual success of "Topics of the Day" with American audiences. Pathe Exchange, Inc., the distributors of this reel of witticisms, report ever increasing bookings on this subject, produced by Timely Films, Inc.

Strand Bills Ray Film for Week of Dec. 26

"Nineteen and Phyllis," starring Charles Ray, has been engaged by Managing Director Joe Plunkett for the Strand theatre, New York, for the week of December 26 instead of the preceding week. This adaptation of Frederick Stowers's story is the third picture in which Charles Ray is presented by Arthur S. Kane for release by First National. Mr. Plunkett is quoted as saying:

"I have had a pre-view of this Ray picture, and I consider that it deserves to be shown when as many people as possible can see it. Thousands devote the last week before Christmas to shopping. During the next week conditions are entirely different. They want good, clean, wholesome entertainment, anl 'Nineteen and Phyllis' will give them just that."

"Kismet" Continues to Score

Favorable Reports on Picture Received at Home-Office

TRIBUTES to the powers of "Kismet" as an attraction capable of breaking house record, continue to flow in to Robertson-Cole which produced and which is distributing this super-special, starring Otis Skinner.

Tom Moore, of the Rialto theatre, Washington, wired Robertson-Cole that he was keeping "Kismet" for an indefinite run there. Directly after this wire came others from Will D. Harris, of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ohio, who gives "Kismet" unqualified praise, and from Clemmer and James, Seattle, who opened the Winter Garden theatre with "Kismet" as a special attraction.

Mr. Moore, in Washington, held "Kismet" over after a most extensive advertising and exploitation campaign. He put on a prologue for which he sent to New York City for his costuming and other material. Every house employee, including the orchestra, was dressed in Arabian costume, and a company of a score of local players, who were headed by Theodore Hardy, acted out an elaborate introduction for the picture.

There was special lighting for the prologue, and special effects in the house, included the burning of incense in large holders on either side of the stage. Daniel Breeskin who leads the Rialto orchestra, arranged a special musical program which was widely commented upon.

Will D. Harris, one of the most enterprising of Ohio exhibitors, was one of the first to book "Kismet" in the Buckeye state. He screened it at his Grand theatre, Columbus, and then sent Robertson-Cole this wire: "We screened 'Kismet' and were delighted with it. It is a truly great picture and one of the finest productions ever offered to the screen. I am playing it here shortly and feel that I am giving my patrons and the theatre-going public, of Columbus the most thoroughly worthwhile artistic production that the screen has offered for a long while."

Mr. Harris' expectations were entirely fulfilled by "Kismet's" success at his house, according to the wire which has just reached Robertson-Cole and which tells of its run at the Grand theatre. In this Mr. Harris said:

"Opened 'Kismet' today to packed and enthusiastic houses all day long. Seating capacity eighteen hundred. Turned away literally thousands could have filled the house twice over again. 'Kismet' is truly a great and artistic production.

"Will D. Harris,
"Grand Theatre."

Messrs. Clemmer and James, of the Winter Garden theatre, a new house in Seattle, chose "Kismet" as their opening bill. The success of the Otis Skinner feature there has been the sensation of the Northwest. A day after the opening the managers wired to Robertson-Cole as follows:

"Kindly accept our fullest appreciation of your fair treatment to us from your home office and your branch management here also our unlimited praise for 'Kismet' which, to date, has no equal. We feel that nothing could have been more satisfactory for opening the Winter Garden. An immense business, far beyond capacity, is our reward.

"Winter Garden Theatre,"
"Clemmer and James, Managers."

Word of the success of "Kismet" in Seattle completes its nation-wide sweep. Starting with its world premier at the Strand theatre, New York City, on November 14, at which time it broke all day and week records at the Strand, it continued by breaking all records at the Strand, Brooklyn, the Goodwin, Newark, and Moore's Rialto, Washington, thence sweeping westward to Ohio where at the Grand Opera House, Canton, and the Grand theatre, Columbus, it received the endorsement of typical cities on the eastern border of the Middle West. This finds it playing all over the nation, and breaking as many records in the houses of smaller places as it did in New York City, and throughout the East.

A special service section on "Kismet" was published in the November 20th issue of the Motion Picture News.

Goldwyn Premier in West

California Theatre to Play "Prisoners of Love"; Also at Capitol

THE first big presentation of Betty Compson's initial starring production, "Prisoners of Love," released through Goldwyn, will take place at the California theatre, Los Angeles, during the week of December 26. The production is now scheduled for its New York presentation at the Capitol theatre the week beginning Sunday, January 2.

A special program will be built around the Los Angeles presentation of "Prisoners of Love." Carli D. Elinor, musical director of the California theatre, who arranged the musical score for several of the largest productions in motion pictures, has compiled a special musical setting for the Compson picture.

Los Angelans are reported to be displaying a lively interest in the forthcoming presentation of "Prisoners of Love" because it marks the first stellar appearance of Miss Compson, who for a number of years has been a member of the picture colony in that city, and who has a large circle of personal friends there in addition to her great fan following. Miss Compson has not been seen in a picture since her acting in George Loane Tucker's production of "The Miracle Man," which elevated her to stardom, and those who saw her work in that photoplay are keenly desirous of seeing to what further heights as an actress as she may have risen in her own independent production.

Exhibitors generally are greatly interested in the film for the same reason and because of the extensive exploitation carried on by Goldwyn for "Prisoners of Love."

In preparation for exploitation activities early in the New Year, the Fox staff of artists and designers are busy sketching and outlining the advertising material for Fox stars and special attractions. The publicity staff and exploitation forces are preparing copy for the printer that press books, clip sheets and billing novelties may be in readiness far in advance of the release dates subsequently to be announced.

Detailed information on all pictures the Fox studios in New York and Hollywood are turning out for January and later distribution will be forthcoming in due season, but this advance statement will serve as an intimation to picture showmen that the 1921 activities of the Fox organization promise to be productive of ticket-selling attractions galore.

The fourth Pearl White feature, "Woman or Tiger?" is said to have inspired the imagination of the Fox staff of illustrators to a high degree. As some time will elapse before the successor to "The Thief" is released, it is declared that ample opportunity will be given for the preparation of an extensive and attendance-inspiring line of billing and exploitation material on "Woman or Tiger?"

Muriel Ostriche Serves as Temporary Mayor

Word is received by the Arrow Film Corporation from Mrs. Garnette Sabin, producer of the Arrow-Muriel Ostriche Comedies, and who is now in Atlanta, Ga., attending the Motion Picture Exposition with Miss Ostriche, that Miss Ostriche's personal appearance in Atlanta has created a veritable sensation.

Miss Ostriche had the honor conferred upon her as being appointed the Honorary Mayor of Atlanta for a period of one hour, on December 8, during which time she sat in the Mayor's chair from 11:30 A. M. to 12:30 P. M.

"Number, Please," to Be Holiday Attraction

That the release of Harold Lloyd's new comedy, "Number, Please?" at the height of the holiday is decidedly appropriate, is the opinion expressed by the managements of leading picture theatres over the country. Information from Pathe branches make it certain that the favorite comedian's latest offering will take a leading place as an attraction during the Christmas season.

A few weeks prior to the release of "Numbers, Please?" which is on the Pathe schedule for December 26, it was evident that Lloyd would outstrip his best previous record for wide distribution, according to reports from the branches, which also state the picture will establish a new mark for long runs and extensive theatre advertising for two-reel feature comedies.

Here's best wishes of the season:
May your ticket-rolls melt fast;
May your gains exceed all reason;
May each showing beat the last:
May your friend, Success, come rushing
With extended, cordial hand;
May your ushers wilt from ushing-
May your patrons have to stand.

May your hands and eyes grow weary
From the counting of your kale;
May it rise to totals cheery,
And you bank it by the bale.

Lew Cody has entered the independent producing field and his first independent feature, "A Dangerous Pastime," is now ready for distribution through Irving M. Lesser, general manager of the Western Pictures Exploitation Company. "A Dangerous Pastime" is said to prove that the star can also play a "man's man" as well as a "he-vamp."

The story, by Wyndham Martyn, was adapted to the screen by H. Tipton Steck. It is described as a happy blending of drama, comedy and mystery.

James W. Horne directed "A Dangerous Pastime" and the supporting cast includes Elinor Fair and Cleo Ridgely, in the leading feminine roles, Ernest Joy, Mrs. Irving Cummings, Arthur Hoyt and Frank Elliott.

Two Featured Players in New Christie

Two single-reel players appearing in a single-reel comedy is a new mark to be set in "Dining Room, Kitchen and Sink," the latest Christie Comedy to be released through Educational Exchanges. Fay Tincher and Eddie Barry are the two players, each of whom has been heretofore featured alone.

However, a point is being made by Educational that the new Christies do not rely for their interest or quality on single players, but that in all of them there are a group of players of unusual ability and with strong fan following. For instance, with Bobby Vernon in "A Homespun Hero," there were Helen Darling and Vera Steadman, and in "Wedding Blues" Neal Burns, Helen Darling, Vera Steadman and Earl Rodney.

Author's Name to Aid Pictures

Knoblock's Fame to Help Put "Blind Wives" Over

IT is contended by William Fox that not once in scores of instances has a playwright whose work has come to the screen even approached the record Edward Knoblock has attained in writing successes for the stage. It was on Knoblock's play, "My Lady's Dress," that Mr. Fox based his new special production, "Blind Wives," for which Charles J. Brabin, the director, also wrote the scenario.

Mr. Fox directs the attention of showmen to the advertising and publicity possibilities that attend the mention of Kuoblock's name as the author of the inspiration for "Blind Wives."

Knoblock's record is a part of dramatic history as recorded in recent seasons. "One," this season's starring vehicle for Frances Starr, is a David Belasco production of a Knoblock play that has been running since September 14, 1920, and still runs at the Belasco theatre, New York City. It is interesting to note that "Marie Odile," the play in which Belasco added Miss Starr to his list of attractions several seasons ago, was written also by Mr. Knoblock.

A third Knoblock play to be produced by Belasco with Miss Starr leading, was "Tiger Tiger," a success of last season. "Kismet," used to star Otis Skinner on stage and screen; "Milestones," one of the great Broadway successes of late seasons; "The Faun," in which William Faversham starred upon the stage; "The Headmaster," "Paganini," and "The Cottage in the Air," all plays by Knoblock, have been staged with attending success both in America and abroad.

With dramatic editors and reviewers for the stage taking the screen more seriously as time passes, William Fox maintains that showmen should capitalize this increasing good-will toward the younger branch of amusement. Mr. Fox cites the name of Knoblock as an author holding a record of successful stage creations that is bound to challenge the attention of newspaper editors and reviewers, who will be commensurately impressed with the fact that moving pictures are attracting the best writers.

For these reasons Mr. Fox contends that exhibitors should herald, by every means possible, the "big names" that come from stage to screen, be they players, authors or directors. It is particularly a matter of self-interest to do so when an author so celebrated as Edward Knoblock—with his great record of successful plays—may be mentioned in such instances as that of "Blind Wives."

Mr. Fox declares that devotees of the stage who witnessed "My Lady's Dress" will find in "Blind Wives" a new interest, broadened as the play proceeds because of the pictured additions to the original theme. Those who never saw the Knoblock play will have entertainment in the screen version that thrills with heart interest, and reaches deeply to touch the strings of emotion that await within almost every human the occasion to respond to skilful manipulation.

For the appeal of "Blind Wives" is addressed to no particular class. It is a story of human interest, and that it will be artistically presented may be assumed when recalling that Marc MacDermott, Estelle Taylor and Harry Sothern, who were principals in "While New York Sleeps," enact the leading roles in this newest "episode" drama.

Famous Sculptor Previews Big Special

Edgar Walters, sculptor and traveler, is another artist who, having been permitted to see early showings of portions of Metro's gigantic production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," declares it to be "one of the most remarkable pictures he ever has seen."

The famous sculptor and his bride visited Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood a few days ago while in Southern California on their honeymoon and, as the guest of Director Rex Ingram, watched the filming of a portion of the allegorical episodes of the world famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

Warner Vehicle Scores in New Orleans

Facing the poorest conditions New Orleans has experienced in many years, H. B. Warner's Pathe feature, "Dice of Destiny," broke all records at the big Pantages theatre there the past week, according to information just received at the Pathe home office. All over the country "Dice of Destiny" is accomplishing the same results, declare Pathe officials.

"The Furnace" Booked Heavily

Exhibitors Enthusiastic Over New Realart Production

REALART'S William D. Taylor production, "The Furnace," is proving a box-office attraction of unusual power, judging from the messages of congratulation and heavy bookings which Realart reports are pouring into the home office from exhibitors throughout the country.

"Wish to congratulate you on 'The Furnace,' now playing at Vaudette," says a recent telegram from W. W. Watts, manager of the Vaudette theatre, Springfield, Ill. "Consider it a high class attraction in every respect. Cast, photography, acting, directing, great. Opened Sunday to good business and has been building up every day since. Great woman's picture. Give us more like it."

A wire from Detroit, where "The Furnace" was shown at Kunsky's theatre, says: "'Furnace' went fine Monday. Unusually good for worst day of week. Capacity crowds most of the day."

The Alamo theatre, Louisville, Ky., booked the picture, ran it and found that "business held up well all week."

In addition to messages of praise and accounts of the success the production is bringing are the exceptionally heavy bookings Realart is receiving on "The Furnace." Exhibitors in all sections of the country are signing up for the super-special.

How to Exploit R.-C. Film

"Little 'Fraid Lady" Can Be Well Exploited, Says Robertson - Cole

"THE LITTLE 'FRAID LADY," the Robertson-Cole super-special, starring Mae Marsh, which is for early release, has, claims the producers, exploitation possibilities which are almost unlimited in their scope. Every exhibitor, no matter whether he is in the habit of using exploitation or not, is bound to be attracted by some one of the many angles which this picture offers.

"The Little 'Fraid Lady," which was directed by John G. Adolfi, tells the story of a girl artist who left the sham and hypocrisy of the city to seek the simpler, more wholesome life in the great open. She goes to the woods to live and work. While there she becomes acquainted with a wealthy family, through dramatic circumstances, and the events which follow offered varied scenes and diversified action.

In speaking of the exploitation possibilities of the picture, the Robertson-Cole press book on the subject, which has just been published, says:

"A practical exploitation man who knows exhibitors and their problems from coast to coast, saw 'The Little 'Fraid Lady' and in just as long as it took for him to write them, he made the following notes:

"Dog, masked costume, child's intuition, 'fraid girls, bootlegging, would any daughter give up father? first aid to injured, painting father love, birds, Bohemia, judge's decisions and conduct, dog biscuits, freckles, and Marsh's return.

"I don't know how many of these would work out at any one showing of the Marsh picture," he said, "but in some form or another each of these notes represents some method of extraordinary exploitation that I would try to put over as circumstances permitted in all classes of towns. By 'extraordinary exploitation' I mean methods other than usual advertising methods which may be standardized."

Walsh-Fielding Start First Production

Work on the initial offering of the recently-launched Walsh-Fielding Productions, Inc., was begun this week at the Glendale studios, under the personal supervision of Thomas B. Walsh, director-general of the new company. It has been given the working title of "True to Life." The principal roles have been entrusted to Barbara Castleton, Montagu Love, Macy Harlam, Edwards Davis and Victor Gilbert.

The production marks the advent into the American picture field of another British financier. He is Percival D. M. Fielding, president of the new corporation, who controls large holdings in England and India. Mr. Fielding recently spent several months in America, during which visit the new independent producing unit was incorporated.

Kineto Review Will Be Launched in 1921

The Urban Popular Classics, which embrace all releases of pictures produced by Charles Urban for the Kineto Company of America, have enjoyed a remarkable growth during the year which is just now coming to a close.

There are now completed and ready for their place in the permanent motion picture encyclopedia, otherwise known as "The Living Book of Knowledge," more than 80 Kineto Reviews, more than 50 Movie Chats, more than 40 Science Series and a considerable number of other completed subjects which ultimately will be classified in an Art Series, a Travel Series, an Industrial Series, a Military Series, a Costume Series, a Customs Series, a Religious Series, and so on until all the possible pictorial classifications are covered.

During 1920 Mr. Urban arranged for distribution only for the Movie Chats. In the coming year he will also launch the Kineto Review; possibly still another series.

Both the Kineto Review and the Movie Chats are single-reel subjects; "one-reel features" they are often called. The difference between them is one of variety. The Kineto Reviews devote the entire length of the reel to the consideration of one subject; the Movie Chats treat of more than one subject, the variety ranging anywhere from three to twenty different subjects.

The Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., announce Helen Gibson's latest Western drama, a feature production totaling six thousand feet, entitled "No Man's Woman," which is heralded as this young star's greatest screen achievement.

The story is one of a dance-hall girl who fights her way through misunderstanding and adversity to the love of a stern-principled prospector.

Edward Coxen plays the male lead, and Leo Maloney the heavy. Others in the cast are Aggie Herring, Estelle Allen, Charles Smiley, Al Cody, Mrs. R. T. Curry, and little Margareta Curry and Duncan Pulliam. The picture was directed by Wayne Mack and Leo Maloney.

Hugo Ballin an Artist of National Repute

Hugo Ballin, besides heading the producing company that bears his name, is an artist of national repute and high standing. It is to such a type of man, says W. W. Hodkinson, that the industry must look for the advancement of the motion picture as an expression of real art. The Hugo Ballin productions are released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mr. Ballin is now at work on the screening of "East Lynne," the world famous stage play. He is giving it a breadth of treatment and all-around magnificence of production that will insure its value to the showmen, for with his artistic nature Mr. Ballin couples a thorough understanding of commercial values.

Two new directors have been engaged by Mr. Carl Laemmle to produce pictures for Universal's special attraction program, it has just been announced. They are William Worthington, who directed many of Haworth's recent successes, and Robert Thornby, who has been handling a megaphone for Famous Players and J. P. Hampton during the past several years.

These new acquisitions, taken in connection with the recent return of Stuart Paton to the Universal lot, and the prospective return of Jack Ford, maker of many Harry Carey successes, prompt officials at Universal City to announce that Universal's directorial staff now is stronger than it ever has been, and is well equipped to meet the intensified production of high class five-reelers planned for the coming year.

Worthington and Thornby will be associated with Rollin Sturgeon, Norman Dawn, Reaves Eason, Jacques Jaccard, Stuart Paton, Leo McCarey, Harry Harris and other Universal directors of feature productions.

Prominent Authors Aid Screen

Goldwyn Tells of the Work Done by Them During 1920

IN addition to the half dozen American writers whose stories are reaching the screen through the Goldwyn-Rex Beach Eminent Authors' Productions, and practically all of whom are now writing original screen stories, more than thirty prominent American writers either have already contributed stories for Goldwyn's fourth year production or are now preparing stories for picturization in the near future. Comprised in the Eminent Authors' group are Rex Beach, Gouverneur Morris, Rupert Hughes, Leroy Scott, Mary Roberts Rinehart and Gertrude Atherton.

Among the other contributing American authors, Booth Tarkington should be named first. He has already won success on the screen with his series of two-reel comedies of boy life known collectively as "The Emotions and Adventures of Edgar Pomeroy." Original scenarios for feature productions will be contributed by Mr. Tarkington in the coming year.

Ben Ames Williams, the novelist and short story writer, is already represented by four pictures, "Jubilo," for Will Rogers; "The Great Accident," starring Tom Moore; "The Man Who Had Everything," starring Jack Pickford, and "Godless Men," a Reginald Barker Production with an all-star cast made from the story called "Black Pawl."

Katherine Newlin Burt's first great success, "The Branding Iron," has been as popular with picture fans, and her new novel, "Snow Blindness," is now being filmed. Both are directed by Reginald Barker.

Irving S. Cobb is represented on Goldwyn's roster of famous authors by "Boys Will Be Boys," in which Will Rogers appears; Peter Clark MacFarlane, newspaperman, magazine writer and novelist, also contributes a starring vehicle for Rogers, "Guile of Women." Maximilian Foster's new novel, "The Trap," was converted into "The Highest Bidder," as a screen starring vehicle for Madge Kennedy. George Ade, who ranks with Irvin Cobb as the country's two foremost living humorists, is represented by two pictures, both made from successful stage comedies, "The Slim Princess," in which Mabel Normand was starred, and "Just Out of College," for Jack Pickford.

Ralph E. Dyar's is a new name in pictures. He is a Spokane newspaperman who wrote the highly successful melodrama, "A Voice in the Dark," which A. H. Woods produced on the stage; that play was done on the screen for Goldwyn by Frank Lloyd. Graham Moffatt contributed the story for one of Goldwyn's great fourth year pictures, "Bunty Pulls the Strings." Hermann Bahr, author of "The Concert," and the great Belgian dramatist, Maurice Maeterlinck, are under contract to write one feature scenario a year for Goldwyn.

Wallace Irwin contributed "Trimmed with Red" for Madge Kennedy; Garret Smith, "Honest Hutch" for Will Rogers; Carlyle Moore, "Stop Thief!" for Tom Moore; Pearl Lenore Curran, "What Happened to Rosa," for Mabel Normand; Catherine Henry, "Prisoners of Love," for Betty Compson; Frank Brownlee, "His Own Law," for Hobart Bosworth; Edgar Allan Woolf, "Head Over Heels," from Nalbro Bartley's story of "Shadows," for Mabel Normand; Leo Ditrichstein and Frederic and Fanny Locke Hatton, by "The Great Lover," Augustin MacHugh and Winchell Smith, by "Officer 666;" William J. Hurlbut by "Made in Heaven;" Charles Kenyon, by an original scenario, "The Alibi;" while Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Rice, members of the Goldwyn staff, are writing original scenarios.

DeMille Discusses New Policy

"Longer Runs Destined to Crowd Out Poorer Photoplays"

"LONG run pictures such as we plan to produce under the new production policy of this organization are destined to crowd out weaker and purposeless photoplays thus making 'fewer and better' pictures a fact rather than a phrase."

There, in a few words, is Cecil B. DeMille's summary of future events under the new all-star production policy recently announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. DeMille has just started the initial production for Paramount under this policy—an adaptation of Arthur Schnitzler's play, "The Affairs of Anatol," with an all-star cast which includes Wallace Reid, Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels, Theodore Roberts, Dorothy Cumming, Agnes Ayres, Theodore Kosloff and Julia Faye. Stage settings for this production are being designed by Paul Iribe, a prominent French artist, and a stellar staff of scenario writers headed by Jeanie Macpherson, Elmer Harrie, Avery Hopwood, Beulah Marie Dix and others are now at work on the manuscript.

In an interview given out on the eve of production work on this photodrama, Mr. DeMille made the following interesting prophesy and resume regarding this policy:

"Just a few years ago the producer was delighted when his picture enjoyed a run of one or two weeks at a single theatre. Today we have relatively many productions which play engagements from three to eight or nine weeks.

"The reasons for this change are many, but perhaps the most obvious is that pictures have become steadily better and have found corresponding favor in the eye of the public. The day of experimentation is passing and the day of achievement is at hand. More time, money and thought are being put into the pictures of today with the result that the spectator sees immeasurably better pictures.

"Barely six years ago, I made fourteen pictures in a single year. We regarded those as very good pictures at that time.

"Today, working just as hard or harder, I find that I can only turn out three pictures in the same length of time. But the three pictures that I make today draw more patronage than the entire fourteen of six years ago. Any one of this trio can be counted on to play for several weeks in several of the theatres of the larger cities.

"A few years ago this same class of theatre would change program weekly. In other words, it required fifty-two pictures each year to meet the demands of the exhibitors.

"Thanks to long runs, this yearly total is steadily decreasing. Whereas the exhibitor of the past required a different picture for every week of the year, today he not infrequently requires only one a month. His yearly total has dropped from fifty-two to twelve perhaps.

"That these pictures were capable of playing engagements of several weeks was due to their increased quality. Better stories, casts, staging and direction were responsible for this change.

"It is not beyond the bounds of reason to say that the picture of the future may take a year or more to produce. If a picture produced under this system should play for three or six months—and our experience in the past has shown us that this is not impossible—a year spent on production work would be a year well spent. We are working constantly toward a realization in fact of our slogan of 'fewer and better pictures.'"

New Talmadge Picture is "Playing the Game"

The First National Production on which Norma Talmadge is now at work, "On Principle," by Andrew Soutar, adapted for the screen by Paul Anthony Kelly and Albert Parker, and temporarily given the working title of "Satan's Paradise," has now definitely been titled "Playing the Game," and was finished last Wednesday.

This is the first First National in which Harrison Ford, who has been signed for a year's contract to play opposite Norma, will appear. Other important members of the cast are : Montagu Love, Leslie Stewart, Jr., Mabel Bert, Michael Barns, Cooper Cliffe and E. Fernandez.

"Passion" Scores Again at Atlantic City

"Passion," the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., special, starring Pola Negri, the European emotional actress, repeated the triumph it has scored at all other places it has been shown, at the Globe theatre in Atlantic City during the week of December 5th. From the opening performance to the closing date the theatre was forced to sell standing room at eevry performance, and the production itself gained comment and newspaper reviews ahead of any that has ever been accorded a motion picture in the New Jersey city, declares First National.

Scenic Beauty Feature of "Not Guilty"

"Not Guilty," Sidney Franklin's production adapted to the screen from Harold MacGrath's famous novel and soon to be presented by Albert Kaufman through Associated First National, is reported to be artistically photographed and to contain some of the most wonderful natural backgrounds of California.

Exteriors were taken at Monterey, Del Monte, Pebble Beach Lodge, Seventeen-Mile Drive, Laguna, Balboa, Mount Hollywood, Pasadena, Big Bear Lake and in the famous gardens of the Hotel Huntington.

Massive Church Set in "Temple Dusk"

Under the watchful eye of Arthur and Herbert Lubin, a massive replica of a great church interior is being constructed at the Metro studio, for use in the George D. Baker production of the S-L feature, "Temple Dusk." The set, when completed, will be one of the most costly and beautiful interiors ever utilized in a motion picture feature, it is declared. In it the all-star cast selected by Mr. Baker will enact the scenes of Calvin Johnston's Saturday Evening Post story.

George D. Baker is said to have given his leading players, Anna Q. Nilsson and Robert Frazier the best roles of their career in this production.

"Fantomas" Set for Dec. 19

Many Surprises Promised in New Fox Serial by Director Sedgwick

EDWARD SEDGWICK promises many surprises in the new William Fox serial "Fantomas," which is now nearing the finishing episodes at the Fox studios in West 55th Street, New York. The new serial is scheduled for release December 19, immediately following the final episode of the first Fox serial, "Bride 13."

Director Sedgwick is not following a tradition of using a measuring stick on stunts and thrills, but is making them fall as the story dictates—saving, of course, a final thrill for the finish of each episode, declares a statement from the Fox headquarters. In the "Fantomas" stories he has plenty of material, it is declared.

The twenty-six volumes of detective tales which William Fox purchased from Marcel Allain, the French author, are declared to contain enough big situations for five serials. Mr. Sedgwick is said to have packed as many of the sensations as he could into each episode, and now declares there is more "big stuff" in each episode than there is in any ordinary feature.

Sedgwick has had fine co-operation from New Jersey officials around Fort Lee. He has burned down "sets" of buildings and has had the use of the two fire engines and the firemen, not only to watch for any possible danger but to give atmosphere to the scenes. He has also given many Jerseyites several thrills, for whenever he had worked at night in the towns along the Palisades nearly all the population has come out and remained spectators far into the early morning.

The contracts received up-to-date have been in excess of those on the preceeding Fox serial "Bride 13" which has received so big a welcome all over the country.

Pathe Serial Well-Received

Pathe Reports That Bookers Plan Big Drives for "Velvet Fingers"

ACCOMPANYING reports of successes recorded by "Velvet Fingers," the new George B. Seitz serial, released by Pathe, December 6, at prominent theatres that have presented the first episode, are communications informing that extensive exploitation campaigns are being prepared for use in connection with the fifteen episode melodrama with Mr. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot as the stars.

The diversity of exploitation angles provided by the new serial has stimulated interest in novel advertising schemes, and on that account preparations are under way for campaigns in which all the up-to-date methods will be employed, states Pathe. It is expected "Velvet Fingers" will make a new serial record for the conspicuous exploitation ideas used in connection with its exhibition, say Pathe officials.

Prominent among the theatres where the picture will be advertised on a big scale is the Hills theatre at Newark, N. J. Manager Harris of the Hills theatre has about completed plans for a campaign that will include many novel features, both in newspaper ads and street demonstrations, it is stated.

A party in honor of Tommy Carr, who plays a leading role in "Velvet Fingers," is also to be held at the afternoon performance on the opening day of the serial. At this affair features of especial interest to children will be presented. The manager of the Hills is confident that his campaign will center the interest of Newark picture fans in "Velvet Fingers," which he has selected as the subject for the biggest theatre campaign ever attempted by his house.

Canton, O., House Opens with "Humoresque"

Canton, O., witnessed the opening of a new theatre recently when the Melba, a 632-seat house, opened its doors for the first time. The Melba began under the most favorable circumstances with second run pictures, playing to capacity on "Humoresque," its initial offering.

Window tie-ups were arranged with local merchants in the vicinity, while a tie-up with the Army recruiting service resulted in fifty huge posters which advertised the picture from store windows and telegraph poles.

As the step towards establishing personal contact with the future patrons of the new house, a mailing list of 3,000 was prepared, and announcements of the opening, signed by the manager as a personal message, were sent out.

Arthur Somers Roche Now at Hollywood

All of that knowledge of the devious ways of a great city that has made the fiction stories of Arthur Somers Roche so popular among magazine readers will be woven into the plots of a series of screen tales just begun by Mr. Roche for Metro, declares Metro.

The author of "Uneasy Street" and other tales has arrived in Hollywood, Cal., his pocket containing one original story upon which production will start in the near future. Moreover, he has the rough outlines of a series of mystery stories, stories of New York, and stories of business intrigues, that promise an entirely new variety of pictures for Metro's stars.

"Number, Please" to Open in New York

The New York premiere of Harold Lloyd's next Pathe comedy special, "Number, Please?" will be given day and date at the Strand and Capitol theatres the first week in the New Year. At the same time, the Brooklyn Strand will feature the latest Lloyd fun maker.

The following week, the production will be released generally in New York, and the week after in Brooklyn.

Three Pathe pictures which will make holiday time bows to the public. Left—"That Girl Montana." Center—"The Devil," with George Arliss. Right—"When We Were 21," with H. B. Warner

One of the competitors of William Fox in production, distribution and exhibition of photoplays sponsored a recently published assertion, in one of the trade papers, that "a year's run on Broadway will soon be nothing uncommon." In this connection Mr. Fox reminds the trade that he has already gone more than one-quarter of that distance across the calendar with "Over the Hill."

Now in its fourteenth week, "Over the Hill" is drawing capacity business at practically every performance, according to box-office reports, while seats are offered on reserve and the attraction is advertised eight weeks in advance.

Universal Release Has Scored in Buffalo

Reports from Buffalo, N. Y., indicate that "Once to Every Woman," the Universal-Jewel production, starring Dorothy Phillips, which recently was shown for a week's run in the Palace theatre, Buffalo, has created more interest in that city than any film ever shown there, announces a statement from Universal's headquarters. Mouth-to-mouth advertisement had been its biggest asset, Buffalo film men assert.

Maurice A. Chase, manager for Universal in the Buffalo district, attributes much of the picture's popularity to the "Ben Bolt" singing stunt being generally used in conjunction with Miss Phillips' action on the screen.

Burton Holmes Scenic Shows Malay Life

The Paramount-Burton Holmes release of December 12th takes one to the Malay Peninsula, a peaceful land where the noisy motor breaks the silence as infrequently as once a day, but where one can tour through the loveliest of surroundings and see the native Malayan as one rides over sleepy hill and lazy dale in his "benzine buggy." The roads are fine and one gets a wonderful opportunity to study Malay methods of life in the quaintest and most amusing forms.

Pathe Serial Set for Jan. 23

THE serial starring Charles Hutchison, "Double Adventure," is to be released by Pathe on the schedule for the week of January 23. Announcement that the stunt star's newest picture would succeed "The Phantom Foe" on the Fathe two-at-a-time releasing card was made this week.

"Double Adventure" will be the second Brunton produced serial to be released by Path and is the work of Director W. S. Van Dyke, who filmed Jack Dempsey's "Daredevil Jack" under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton. In advance announcements it is described by Pathe as "a more pretentious offering from the standpoint of scenic effects than the Dempsey picture, which gained widespread comment as a model of serial production."

Hutchison is starred as a daredevil in "Double Adventure." In the production of this piece he is said to have many scientific devices to aid him in the performance of stunts that would register with exciting effect. To bring additional thrills to his acrobatics he uses aeroplanes, motor cars, motorcycles in various combinations with his widely known accomplishments as a high diver and performer of dangerous tricks.

Charles Hutchison in Thrilling Stunts in New Picture

The star has a vehicle written for him by Jack Cunningham, who as the author of many photoplays is familiar to the picturegoers. The scenario provides a dual role for the star, who will appear as Dick Biddle, scapegrace son of a prominent banker, and Bob Cross, newspaper man and seeker after adventure. Between these two men, whose characters differ so greatly, there is a most unusual physical resemblance, a situation from which Mr. Cunningham is reported to have evolved many impressive melodramatic moments.

The author has also supplied a love tale which relates the romance of the newspaper reporter for the heiress to the Biddle fortune and that of the ne'er-do-well young Biddle and the daughter of a South American statesman. Much of the action transpires in a South American republic, the scene of plotting and counterplotting to gain valuable oil lands and property rightfully belonging to the Biddle estate.

Charles Hutchison will be supported by Josie Sedgwick and Ruth Langston in the leading feminine parts. Miss Sedgwick and Miss Langston were prominent in the "Daredevil Jack" serial, as was Carl Stockdale, who is the leading heavy character in "Double Adventure." S. E. Jennings is seen as a revolutionist chief and Louis D'Or as the President of the Republic completes the cast of principals.

"Double Adventure" was completed so far as actual staging is concerned in September. Since that time Charles Hutchison has been forced to remain away from studio work by an accident in which he received bone fractures and bruises resulting from a fall which occurred while making a retake for the film. The finished titles and other details of the picture have since been completed, and all fifteen episodes of "Double Adventure" will be ready for presentation before the first is released.

Read Announces Plans for 1921

J. PARKER READ, JR., has just announced, by wire from the Coast, his plans for production in 1921. The keynote of Producer Read's "campaign message" is the fact he is looking to the original story as a vehicle for Louise Glaum, and for the creation of two all-star or non-star specials to be made for Associated Producers if his present plans work out properly to this end.

The three or four Louise Glaum productions and the two Hobart Bosworth stories released this year have been found successful, according to Mr. Read's announcement, and it is expected that the producer will enlarge his activities the coming year to permit of the greatest production effort he yet has put forth.

Mahlon Hamilton has been engaged by Read to play the leading male part in the next Louise Glaum picture.

Mahlon Hamilton Is to Play Opposite Louise Glaum

"Reports that I am going to produce 'The Impossible Mrs. Bellew' as my next picture," wired Read to his representative, Sig Schlager, "were anticipatory. My next production will be an original story which I confidently believe will make my greatest work. I have not yet decided upon a title for it."

Louise Glaum has been signed up for a number of years to come, Mr. Read having faith that Miss Glaum's following and the vehicles in which he is placing his star will result in her achieving a higher place in the hall of motion picture popularity within the next twelvemonth.

Miss Glaum's productions will be released through Associated Producers as J. Parker Read, Jr., Productions.

A number of specials are in contemplation.

Producer Read already has purchased several novels, and the right to plays which he is holding in reserve, his faith in the original story being paramount, as witness "Sahara," "Sex," "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," "Love Madness" and now, "Love."

Mr. Read will continue to produce at the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City under a special arrangement with Mr. Ince.

Mr. Read declares his 1921 product will have box-office projected all over them.

Build on 1920, Says Laemmle

Universal Plans Fewer Pictures for Coming Year

"BUILD on 1920!" was the ultimatum recently issued by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, to the assembled department heads at Universal City, the West Coast production center of that firm.

"In the past twelve months," explained Mr. Laemmle, "Universal has accomplished far greater things than ever before, not only in the solidifying of its organization and closer co-ordination of its various production, distribution and executive branches, but, also in its output of more first-class, outstanding pictures.

"This last—the making of good pictures—is the prime reason for the company's existence, and we are about to enter into the year 1921 with a heritage of efficiency, upon which to build good pictures in the future. The stage is all set for an era of quality production for Universal, and it is up to you men to see that our 1920 record is used as a firm foundation for building a year's output of greater and better pictures that will be overstepped by no others in the moving picture field."

That Carl Laemmle's words, indicating a long forward step for Universal in the next twelve months, are prophetic of what Universal may be expected to accomplish, is well borne out by a resume of Universal activities in 1920 and its plans for 1921, as made public in a recent statement issued from that film company's home office.

One important change marks the new year's policy in Universal production. Whereas seven big Universal Jewel pictures were released during 1920, Universal intends to make a fewer number during the coming year, but each one that is made, will be the result of the combined cooperation of the executives, scenario, technical and productive departments at Universal City. Thus, in the making of Universal-Jewel productions, efforts will be concentrated to produce a few pictures far in advance of those of the past.

Universal heads explain this by announcing their belief that the industry is now in the era of specialization and that Universal City, the largest single picture producing plant in the world, is not so great that its main efforts cannot be concentrated upon the making of one big picture at a time. Heretofore there sometimes have been three or four big Universal pictures under way at the same time.

The first photoplay to be made under the new order of things will be "False Colors," starring Priscilla Dean. "False Colors" is a dramatic story of the stage, written by Edwina Levin. Stuart Paton will make the picture. The script is now in preparation at the hands of Lucien Hubbard, scenario chief at Universal City, assisted by Doris Schroeder.

"Foolish Wives" is heralded by Universal as the costliest picture ever screened. It is estimated that the picture will cost almost three-quarters of a million dollars in the making alone. Advertising, exploitation and distribution is expected to run the actual outlay to the million mark, declares Universal.

Universal supplies actual production figures to back up its assertion as to the cost of Von Stroheim's coming Universal-Jewel. Von Stroheim superintended the construction of a series of sets, exactly reproducing many of the great buildings at Monte Carlo, which is the locale of the picture. Among these sets is the Plaza, near the famous gambling Casino. The set is 400 feet long, 200 feet wide and necessitated the removal of 10,000 cubic yards of earth. It is said to have cost $100,000; taking 160 men twelve weeks in its construction.

Barrymore in Melodrama

Well-Known English Play Chosen by Bennett for Lionel Barrymore

"JIM, THE PENMAN," reputed to be the most popular of all English melodramas, will be the fourth of the productions starring Lionel Barrymore prepared under the personal supervision of Whitman Bennett for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Work on the filming of the feature has already been started at the Yonkers studio of the Whitman Bennett Productions Co., and will be finished, according to the present schedule by January 15, when "Salvation Nell," the second of the special features Mr. Bennett will produce for First National, will be started.

The latest vehicle chosen for Mr. Barrymore in the present series he is appearing in for Mr. Bennett, is a melodrama which in its dramatic climaxes gives that star unusual opportunity, it is said. "Jim, the Penman" has the record of having been produced more times in the "speakies" than any other English play and every time it has been presented on the American stage it has repeated its original triumph. William A. Brady sponsored its last revival in this country, giving it a sumptuous scenic setting at the Lyric theatre in New York with Wilton Lackaye in the role of Jim, and Theodore Roberts in that of the Baron. That revival was a notable popular success.

The release of this melodrama will complete the series of four pictures which represent the versatility of Mr. Barrymore to a noteworthy degree. In the space of six working months he will have appeared in "The Master Mind," "The Devil's Garden," "The Great Adventure," and "Jim, the Penman." The contrast between these roles is noteworthy. The first was a study of the psychological reactions of circumstances upon a man wealthy enough and brainy enough to attempt to control his own destiny; the second dwelt with the reactions of a man fettered by his own condition in life; the third was a delicious comedy; and the fourth is a melodrama.

Mr. Barrymore, of course, will portray the role of Jim in this new picture. Doris Rankin, who has given him such magnificent support in previous productions, will play the part of Nina Bronson.

Strong Cast Seen in "The Other Woman"

The first of a series of four, J. L. Frothingham pictures which are to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation during the year 1921 will be "The Other Woman" from the extraordinary successful novel of the same name by Nora Davis.

The direction is to be in the hands of Edward Sloman, and the photography will be by Tony Gaudio. In the cast will appear Jerome Patrick, Jane Novak, Helen Jerome Eddy, Joseph J. Dowling, William Conklin, Aggie Herring, John Steppling and the child actor, Frankie Lee.

Wilfred Buckland to Be Producer

Wilfred Buckland, for the past six years art director for Famous Players-Lasky, is the latest to join the ranks of the motion picture producers. He has associated himself with Allan Dwan, who will in due course of time present the Wilfred Buckland productions.

Mr. Buckland will start work in the near future at the Hollywood studios on his own productions. He will do his own directing and his interesting training promises to bring something of real value to his pictures. Allan Dwan is most enthusiastic in his praise of Mr. Buckland as a new maker of photoplays and entertains the highest hopes for his future success.

Eileen Percy Vehicle Due for Release

Eileen Percy is on the list of the new William Fox attractions scheduled for immediate release. The farce comedy in which this star appears is "The Land of Jazz," from an original screen story by Jules G. Furthman, author of "The Man Who Dared," with William Russell and "The Skywayman."

The assembly of supporting players includes Herbert Heyes, Ruthe Stonehouse, Jane Miller, George Fisher, Rose Dione, Wilson Hummel, Blanche Payson, Franklyn Farnum, Carrie Ward, Kewpie Morgan, Hayward Mack and Dick La Reno.

First view of Katherine McDonald's next starring vehicle, "My Lady's Latchkey," to be a First National release

The elaborately produced stunt serial starring Charles Hutchinson, "Double Adventure," is to be released by Pathe on the schedule for the week of January 23rd. Announcement that the stunt star's newest picture would succeed "The Phantom Foe" on the Pathe two-at-a-time releasing card was made this week.

"Double Adventure" will be the second Brunton produced serial to be released by Pathe and is the work of Director W. S. Van Dyke, who filmed Jack Dempsey's "Daredevil Jack" under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton.

The four of United Artists who make 1920's Christmas a merry one for both public and their releasing organization. Why waste words in naming them

Stroheim Film Went Big, Says Rembusch

F. J. Rembusch, head of the F. J. Rembusch Enterprises, of Indiana, recently notified Ralph W. Abbett, Universal's branch exchange manager in Indianapolis, that he had one of the biggest crowds he ever had for the opening of "The Devil's Pass Key," the big Erich Von Stroheim production, at the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis.

"I confess that I was a little anxious when I began to exploit the picture, as to whether or not it would go over," said Rembusch, "but I find that it is one of those pictures that people begin to notice as soon as you talk about it. I had a hunch the day before we opened that it was going over big, but it has surprised me and exceeded my expectations.

"The business is holding up great all this week.

New Art Director for the Lasky Studio

Max Parker is the new art director of the Lasky studio, succeeding Wilfred Buckland. So says a recent announcement from the office of the West Coast studio of this organization.

Following a successful career as an interior decorator and architect, Max Parker joined the Lasky studio art staff five years ago. As Wilfred Buckland's assistant, Parker won high rank in this important field of studio activity.

Wide Interest Shown in Leblanc's "813"

From all quarters bookings on "813" are pouring in, announces a statement from the headquarters of Robertson-Cole. Nearly every Robertson-Cole Exchange has had many expressions of interest from exhibitors, while half of them report exhibitors who have been approached by literary people and fiction readers with a view to ascertaining when they might be able to see the picturization of Maurice Leblanc's celebrated story on the local screens.

Mary Pickford in New Role

"The Love Light" Said to Be a Distinct Departure

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of United Artists, announced this week that the next Mary Pickford production, "The Love Light," written and directed by Frances Marion, would be released on January 9. This is the third "Big Four" production that Miss Pickford has made, and the first since her trip abroad.

With this production Miss Pickford returns to the screen in a story that is entirely different from anything she has yet done, but in which she is given most unusual opportunities of displaying her exceptional talents.

Word has come from the West Coast, says United Artists, that in the annals of filmdom "The Love Light" will doubtless go down as the big picture of 1921. The story is said to be filled with delightful humor, pathetic appeal, and has a wealth of character and keen artistry.

This picture marks the first entrance of Frances Marion, the well-known writer, in the directorial field. She has accomplished wonders. "The Love Light" is her original story, which made it possible for her to add many delightful touches during the course of producing the picture.

While Miss Pickford was in Europe recently, Miss Marion was also there on her honeymoon. The two met in London and journeyed into Italy, where Miss Marion obtained the details for "The Love Light." The entire plot of the story was worked out in Europe, and Miss Pickford, who is always after the best in detail, secured a number of her leading players for the picture on the other side, importing them so as to have a perfect cast to produce the picture which she believes will be a sensation.

Among those players are such artists as Jean De Briac, for several years leading man to Sarah Bernhardt, Raymond Bloomer, Edward Phillips, Albert Prescott, Evelyn Dumo, who played with Miss Pickford in "Little Peppina," but who returned to Italy to play important roles in an Italian company, and George Rigas. The photography of this picture has been in charge of Charles Rosher, who was responsible for the wonderful lighting in "Suds," and Henry Cronjager, while the art direction was under the supervision of Stephen Goosson.

"The Love Light" is not only a unique departure in the line of stories which have been produced by the "World's Sweetheart," but it is a gripping comedy drama of unusual interest.

The story centers about the romance of a young girl whose brothers are called from their lighthouse station to follow the fortunes of war. The girl takes up the work of tending the lighthouse light after their departure. The picture does not embody any battle scenes though the theme is one built on the depravity of an enemy spy in betraying the young lighthouse keeper in the absence of her kinsfolk and disrupting the peaceful life of the fishing village in which he carries on his sinister work. Tragedy, comedy and a wealth of action enter into the story that is unfolded on the screen in this new production which is declared give Miss Pickford a distinctive role in the part of the simple romantic maiden of the lighthouse.

Special Pathe News Reels

Nos. 97 and 98 Are Specially Taken for Tenth Anniversary Celebration

FOR the closing weeks of its tenth anniversary celebration, Pathe News presents more original and thrilling "stunts," specially staged and executed in its honor and exhibiting the capacity and daring of its camera experts at their best. Reels Nos. 97 and 98 show a most inviting program, according to a statement from Pathe headquarters. The former carries the spectator into a part of the world wholly unfamiliar alike to city people and the most enterprising of globe-trotters —into the great lumber district of the Cascades, where thrilling "stunts" are all in the day's work.

You see giants of the forest seeming to tower into the skies, with lumber-jacks laying them low. A great cable comes swinging down from somewhere out of sight, wraps its lower end about the weighty trunks and yanks them unceremoniously over the ground and into a chute, down which they flash into the river, there to be made up into rafts. There is a central spar tree to be cut off at a distance of 250 feet from the ground. A steel-shod lumber-jack throws a length of rope about the thick trunk, and with a rope-end in each hand walks swiftly upward with the apparent ease of a squirrel.

In its historical review, No. 97 illustrates unique devices of offense introduced in the World War. The dread death-dealing element, liquid fire, is shown spurting from its containing mechanism. Upon the ocean depth-bombs are seen leaving the muzzles of deck guns, dropping into the waves, and exploding.

Uncle Sam's fleet of swift little submarine chasers, built to comb the seas for lurking mines and to keep vigil over enemy submarines, are shown tossed about in heavy seas.

Sales Record Set by Hodkinson

NOVEMBER, 1920, has passed into history as the record month for sales since the inception of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The total sales for the month of November in actual figures showed an increase of eighty per cent. over any previous month. This is a remarkable tribute on the part of the sales organization of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to Mr. Hodkinson and equally as remarkable a tribute on the part of exhibitors in the United States to Mr. Hodkinson.

Starting out on the first day of November, with the slogan "nothing can stop us," the members of the Hodkinson sales organization proceeded to justify this slogan. The country was divided into three major districts and four minor districts. Each district assigned to a supervisor. Mr. P. N. Brinch, sales manager, already outlined to his organization the lines along which the drive was to be conducted and quotas were assigned to each district; and, as an added incentive to the men to do their utmost to put the Hodkinson Month Drive over the top, gold watches suitably engraved were offered to those members of the organization who showed the highest percentage of sales and a silver cigarette case was offered to each member who reached the quota of sales assigned to him in collections. A liberal cash commission was also offered to each branch reaching a fixed quota. This commission to be shared by the representative and sales force.

It was a psychological moment for the Hodkinson organization to launch such a drive. Mr. Hodkinson's personal fight to give exhibitors a square deal and to secure for them the very best in pictures, on terms which would enable them to stay in business and make a fair margin of profit, had been receiving national recognition for some time past. The trend of exhibitor opinion seemed to be Hodkinsonward. Letters from exhibitors to branches and direct to the main office and reports from the field indicated this. Mr. Hodkinson had been since the inception of this corporation, waiting just such a moment to show exhibitors that his proposition was one which had for its basic principle a square deal for the exhibitor, first, last and all the time. He had been surrounding himself with the best brains in the industry and had been creating an organization and selective machinery for securing good product.

A comparison of Hodkinson releases during the year 1919 and releases during the year 1920, when such pictures as "Sex," "Riders of the Dawn," "Love Madness," "Down Home" and "The U. P. Trail" were offered to exhibitors, will show the progress which had been made in the production line.

While new product was being secured, a sales organization was being welded together, an organization which knew Mr. Hodkinson's plans and knew that they must be successful. With such facts in mind it is not surprising that November set up a new high record.

Albert Parker to Make Specials for Schenck

Albert Parker, who has been directing Norma Talmadge in her last two productions, has signed a new agreement with Joseph M. Schenck, whereby he will make for him a series of special productions, all of them to be based on well known plays or books. Mr. Parker recently returned from the West Indies, where he had been making exteriors in the sugar cane plantations for Norma's newest First National.

Previous to this story, Mr. Parker directed "The Branded Woman," adapted by himself in collaboration with Anita Loos, from Oliver D. Bailey's play "Branded." Before being affiliated with Miss Talmadge, Parker had come into exceptional prominence through his production of "Eyes of Youth," adapted by himself from Max Marcin's play of the same name.

When Mr. Schenck produces "Smilin' Through," Mr. Parker will return to the Norma Talmadge Film Company, to direct this play by Allen Langdon Martin, in which Jane Cowl starred on Broadway. Mr. Schenck's scenario department is now busy reading several books and plays for Mr. Parker, and it is expected that the title of the first of these Parker special productions, will be announced in the near future, when the releasing organization will also be made public.

Improvements in Brunton Studios

THE year of 1920 has probably been the busiest in the motion picture career of Robert Brunton, head of the great Brunton studios in Los Angeles. Employing the Edisonian twenty-hour-day plan, this worker has expanded his plant until it is now considered to be one of the largest and best equipped motion picture studios in the world. In addition to this he has personally produced or supervised a dozen of the leading screen successes of the year.

"Longacre" has been added to the imposing array of Brunton stages. This edifice measures 300 x 125 feet, and is considered to be the largest structure of its kind in the world. It is tall enough to serve as a hanger for a great Zeppelin, and provides 37,500 square feet of floor space. As many as fifteen companies have erected sets on "Longacre" at the same time.

In order to safeguard the 600 painters, electricians, carpenters and prop hands who work at Brunton a complete emergency hospital has been established. The building contains a ward large enough to accommodate six patients, an operating room fitted with the latest surgical appliances and living quarters for members of the medical staff. The hospital is under the direction of Paul M. McWilliams, former instructor of surgery in the United States navy. All medical care is given to Brunton employees without charge.

Realizing that efficient transportation is an important time saving factor in film making Mr. Brunton has devoted consistent effort to improvement of the studio streets and transportation service. A formidable fleet of Ford tractors and trailers has been purchased to deliver and collect set materials, and more than a mile of macadamized roadway has been laid.

In the planing mill a huge "resaw" machine, a recent invention in timber cutting machinery which converts trees in their natural state to finished lumber of every size and description, has been installed. The working force in this department has nearly doubled during the past year.

One of Mr. Brunton's recent innovations is a spacious greenhouse which supplies studio tenants with all manner of palms, potted plants, shrubbery and flowers for hotel foyer, conservatory or garden scenes. Adjacent to this building is a large tract where turf is grown for exterior sets.

Sixteen acres of land has been added to the west side of the studio and four new scene docks, constructed of tile and corrugated iron, have been erected. A fireproof paint shop, stables large enough to house fifteen horses, a barber shop and a cutting and projection building have also been built recently. Besides these improvements a quarter-mile track has been laid out for the use of studio people who keep mounts at the new paddock.

The tenant roster of the Brunton studio has received some notable additions during the last year. Ruth Roland and Charles Hutchison, Pathe serial stars, have occupied quarters at the big plant, as have Oliver Morosco, J. L. Frothingham, Betty Compson, Mae Marsh, Monroe Salisbury, Catherine Curtis, Florence Lawrence, Sidney Franklin and Lottie Pickford.

Salesmen Are Shown Urban Subjects

Roy F. Soule, general sales director of the Urban Motion Picture Industries, spoke before two large gatherings of business men this week.

On Tuesday night he entertained the sales force of the Knapp Co., one of the largest organizations dealing in art calendars in the world. They are in convention here in New York and had invited Mr. Soule to address them. Mr. Soule accepted, but made the suggestion that all the home officials and visitors come up to the Urban offices and hear his speech up there, at the same time seeing the Urban Natural Color Pictures.

On Wednesday Mr. Soule entertained a group of officials from some of the largest advertising agencies in the country. They were invited principally to see the Spirograph and to study its possibilities as a selling help.

"Dice of Destiny"

Story by JOHN MOROSO

Directed by HENRY KING

The name of H. B. Warner will be associated with the tremendous success of "Alias, Jimmy Valentine," for years to come.

The play can hardly be mentioned without recalling the star. The combination was one of the most remarkable of all stage triumphs

In "Dice of Destiny" H. B. Warner has another wonderful crook role in a story of romance and dramatic power. Another great combination of star and play has been achieved.

An intensely exciting story mellowed by love is developed to the great climax when the so-called thief has the man who hounded him under ether and waiting for an operation at his hands?

Did He Kill Him or Did He Save His Life?

"When We Were Twenty-One"

From the celebrated stage success
by H. V. ESMOND
Director—HENRY KING

Remember the stage play "When We Were 21" that ran for week after week and month after month to crowded houses, and that played in practically every city of any size in the country? Remember its delicate humor, its pathos, its dramatic qualities and its truthful representation of life? Remember how you praised it and your friends praised it?

PATHE Distributors

Here it is—
Warner's greatest picture with all the qualities that made the stage play great.

Those who are young will see themselves in the young man who has just become 21; those who are older will think regretfully of the days that are gone; they will excuse his foolish love affair because they will see that he is in love with the sex rather than the woman, just as were they at the same age

A picture for long runs for prestige, and for profits.

"Absence makes the heart grow fonder—of some one else," said the cynic.

So she found it. Probably at home she would not have given a second thought to the picturesque ruffian who prated of patriotism while he plotted revolution. But there under the soft blue Spanish skies her heart warmed to him and she forgot her fiance at home in America many miles away.

But the forgotten one refused to be forgotten. To win her back he joined her in Spain and outloved, outwitted and outfought the scamp who was about to walk away with the prize!

Entertainment value—great!

SEITZ is the man who makes serials like features,—high class sets, great lighting, smooth finish, first class technique and all that.

Now he has produced a feature of the highest feature class but with the fast action, suspense, thrills and crashing climaxes that he puts into his serials.

To get the proper atmosphere he took his company to Spain and there took the outdoor scenes of this really big production.

See the big battle in the old Spanish plaza between the Revolutionists and the soldiers; see the struggles between the American hero and the Revolutionists; see the scores of thrilling and beautiful scenes!

Associated Exhibitors Issues Statement

IN a statement eminating from the headquarters of the Associated Exhibitors in New York, Phil L. Ryan declares that the close of the present year finds the industry in a "much sounder condition and on much firmer basis than ever before in its history." Mr. Ryan's statement follows:

"Irrespective of what the economic conditions of the past year have meant to general business the close of this year finds the motion picture industry as a whole in a much sounder condition and on a much firmer basis than ever before in its history. Much has been accomplished in the course of the past twelve months and the situation at the moment points to big things accomplished in a big way in the future. The froth is off the brew, but the substance remains and it is strong.

"The exhibitor's position is sound. He has raised his prices to meet general rising costs, but the general quality of his product has been so greatly improved that his prices may remain when men in other lines are forced to make reductions. Merchants in staple lines of long development had reached the top-notch in quality before they started to raise their prices in line with the general movement. Therefore, the raise in prices was a definite increase on a fixed value. The motion picture business on the other hand was in a state of development and the raise in price came with the improvement in quality. Since the quality is to remain the higher price can remain without detriment or loss of patronage. Rentals, being the basis of quality, will also not decrease.

"Surrounding the soundness of the real men and firms of this industry we have had for years the wild-cat promoters and the shoestring producers. Roosevelt said that every progressive movement had its 'lunatic fringe.' So too every legitimate industry in the course of its development has had its 'Frenzied Finance Fringe.' One of the most significant happenings in the industry is the investigation conducted by the National Association into the numerous stock-selling schemes that have hampered the legitimate standing of legitimate concerns and the public branding of these fakers for just what they are. This is just one of the things indicating that we have struck close to rock bottom in business methods in this business.

"The motion picture industry has followed the course of all other industries of rapid and great development and has steadily tended toward centralization until today we are on the eve of its complete accomplishment. Local theatre chains have steadily extended their scope until many of them are becoming almost nationwide. In distribution only those organizations of country-wide strength are really important. This all portends the accomplishment of big things in a big way and it is a significant fact that the big men in the developing of this industry are today the leaders of the big combinations. This is another evidence of the manner in which we have followed the development of the steel industry, the automobile industry, and others of the same character.

"Little need be said of the financial situation, of depression on the present, or the future. Such trouble as the motion picture business has experienced has been local in its character and not national. We have felt the change of underlying conditions less than any other industry. Other lines are now on the up-grade, local troubles are clearing up, and the producer and exhibitor who plans on the basis of a prosperous year will be the gainer.

Rolin Film Leads as Comedy Producer

AS the producers of the comedies starring Harold Lloyd, the one-reelers with Harry "Snub" Pollard and the Vanity Fair Girls, the Rolin Film Company has taken commanding position among the organizations proing short-length comedy pictures.

The company was organized by Hal Roach and began its operations with the production of one-reel comedies with Harold Lloyd in the role of chief funster. Lloyd's ascent to the heights of his present great popularity was made under the guidance of Mr. Roach, through Pathe Exchange, Inc. Roach has steadily increased his organization to its present eminence. The studio at Culver City is the largest devoted to the production of comedy pictures. At this plant the Lloyd two-reel feature comedies, the Pollard and Vanity Fair Girls one-reelers are filmed.

During the past year Mr. Roach added to his forces Harley Walker, long a prominent newspaperman, and far famed for his humorous writings. Mr. Walker assists Mr. Roach in the selection of scenario material and writes the titles for the Harold Lloyd pictures.

The Rolin Film Company has released its productions through Pathe Exchange, Inc., from the first. Its initial contributions were the Lonesome Luke one-reel comedies with Harold Lloyd in the name part. These pictures have earned a new interest since Lloyd's popularity has carried him to the peak of his profession and reissues of them are now to be seen featured on many programs.

When Mr. Roach started producing the two-reel Lloyd specials for Pathe he organized another company to make one-reel subjects. These featured "Snub" Pollard and established themselves with exhibitors as a series marked for their high and uniform quality. Within the past six months, another company was formed to alternate with the Pollard comedies on the Pathe schedule. The Vanity Fair Girls was the name given these pictures.

His new series has met with the success that attended Mr. Roach's other works and in a comparatively brief career are a widely known among the picturegoers. Throughout its work for the photoplay comedy, the Rolin company bears the reputation for clean and wholesome type of play and it is declared that there is perhaps no other specific plan more assiduously adhered to in the production of these pictures than the strict observance of the rule to produce laughter only from material that is innocent of suggestiveness.

The George B. Seitz Organization

IN a career of two years the George B. Seitz organization, formed by Mr. Seitz to make pictures according to ideas and ideals, he formed in his association as scenario writer and director of Pathe serials, has given the screen six notable photoplays. Among these are five serials and one feature. Among the stars who appeared in them are: Pearl White, June Caprice, Marguerite Courtot, Juanita Hansen and Warner Oland.

The success that has attended such Pathe offerings as "The Black Secret," "Bound and Gagged," "Pirate Gold," "The Phantom Foe," and "Velvet Fingers" in the serial line and the feature, "Rogues and Romance," is an illustration of the organizing genius and administrative abilities which Mr. Seitz numbers among his accomplishments. For in his present organization the responsible personnel is the same as when he first assembled his associates in his new enterprise as a film producer.

The Seitz organization has grown rapidly. Its initial effort was the filming of the Robert W. Chambers story, "In Secret," in fifteen episodes with Pearl White as the star. The serial was offered by Pathe under the title, "The Black Secret." At that time Mr. Seitz surrounded himself with men whose past achievements in the world of the pictures were familiar alike to film men and the public. And since that time they have furthered themselves in their professions.

For his scenario department Mr. Seitz enlisted the services of Frank Leon Smith and Bertram Millhauser. Mr. Millhauser was known to serial fans through his many serial stories and his first work was the adaptation of "The Black Secret," a work which won him the praise of Mr. Chambers. Millhauser later essayed directing with a success that is proved in the fine notices given "The Phantom Foe." Frank Leon Smith wrote the serial in which Seitz made his first appearance as a star with June Caprice in "Bound and Gagged," and he also wrote "Pirate Gold."

Two scenes from "Rogues and Romance," a George B. Seitz serial for Pathe release

This year George B. Seitz was joined by his father, F. W. Seitz, who severed his business connections in Boston to become vice president and general manager of the producing corporation at the urgent request of his son. James Shelley Hamilton was added to the scenario department in 1920, and at the same time Robert Amick became the head of the art department. William Sullivan has served in the capacity of assistant director to Mr. Seitz from the first and others who have served long and prominently in the company are Spencer Bennett, assistant director; Anton Grot, technical director; Harry Wood, cameraman; Edward Snyder, cameraman; William Quinn, "still" photographer.

Variety in Nazimova Roles

Past Year's Work Show Two of a Dramatic Kind and Two Satirical

OF the four Metro productions that Nazimova contributed to the screen during 1920, two were poignantly dramatic in theme and the other were in the lighter vein. "Stronger Than Death" and "The Heart of a Child" revealed the Russian star in her more compelling moods, whereas "Madame Peacock" and "Billions" afforded her a delightful excursion into brilliant satirical comedy.

Nazimova's future screen efforts for Metro, it is understood, will be more serious, marking a return to the style of drama in which she has scored the signal triumphs of her career on the speaking stage and in silent drama. Along this line were her impersonations in her first two pictures of the year now drawing to a close.

The average of three months was devoted by Nazimova to each of the pictures she made in 1920. While six-reel productions as a rule are filmed in considerably less time, the Russian artiste is never content with hurried work, nor will she countenance any slipshod methods of production.

"Stronger Than Death" was adapted for the screen by Charles Bryant from the novel of Anglo-Indian life by I. A. R. Wylie. It was directed by Herbert Blache and Mr. Bryant. "The Heart of a Child" was adapted from the novel by Frank Danby and directed by Ray C. Smallwood. Mr. Smallwood also directed "Madame Peacock," scenarioized by Nazimova from Rita Weiman's story that appeared in The Saturday Evening Post, and "Billions" which was made into a photoplay by Mr. Bryant from a French comedy-drama.

Pioneer Announces Releases

Has Strong Schedule Ready for Opening Months of the New Year

WITH preparations completed for the release during the year 1921 of features, reported to be greater in magnitude than have ever before appeared on the Pioneer list of attractions. The Pioneer Film Corporation, in a special statement issued this week over the signature of President A. E. Lefcourt, sounds a most optimistic note for the new year.

"Talk, think, and act optimism. The motion picture industry is passing through a period which demands sound judgment and keen foresight," is the belief of officials at Pioneer headquarters.

So far as the new releases for the coming year are concerned, the Pioneer list of attractions is headed with "The Barbarian," starring Monroe Salisbury who is supported by Jane Novak and an all-star cast.

Another important release scheduled for the new year by the Pioneer Film Corporation, is "The Eternal Mother," starring Florence Reed. "Beyond the Crossroads," starring Ora Carew, and "In Society," featuring the adorable Edith Roberts, are two more special features which will be released during the first six months of the new year; and these features will be supplemented by the big Park & Whiteside specials, "Idle Hands" and "A Good Woman." Gail Kane, J. Herbert Frank and Thurston Hall are starring in "Idle Hands," while in "A Good Woman," Miss Kane will be supported by J. Herbert Frank, Gladden James, Lillian Worth and other well known players.

Considerable interest will be centered in the release early in the new year of "A Man There Was," starring Victor Seastrom. Other important releases for the new year include, "His Brother's Keeper," starring Martha Mansfield, Rogers Lytton and Gladden James; "The Midnight Riders" with Bill Payton and Carlyn Wagner in the leading roles; the extensively advertised Fanark feature "The Crimson Cross," and "Finders Keepers" and "Out of the Depths," starring Violet Mersereau and Edmond Cobb.

Open New Publicity Bureau

Novel Methods in Publicity and Advertising Work Are Promised

WHAT is promised to be a departure from the beaten path in the publicity and advertising field is disclosed in an announcement issued by Cook & Shay, Inc., 145 West Forty-fifth street, which will be found in another page of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

In the announcement Messrs. Cook and Shay promise a service of exceptional merit to advertisers and publicity clients.

The firm has organized a corps of trained experts in these lines who will act in an advisory capacity, it is announced. It has established connections with dependable representatives in the larger cities throughout the country and is peculiarly well equipped to handle advertising and publicity campaigns of any magnitude, according to the statement.

Both of these men have had considerable experience in publicity advertising and exploitation fields. William H. Cook, who needs little if any introduction to the trade, recently left Fox Film Corporation to associate himself with James H. Shay in this new enterprise. Cook has had a broad experience in the theatrical as well as the screen world, while Mr. Shay brings to the firm the welcome and refreshing angles of the trained newspaper man and special feature writer.

During the past two presidential campaigns Mr. Shay was engaged in an active and advisory capacity in the political publicity bureaus. Directing publicity for some of the largest and most successful promotions has, however, occupied the greater portion of his attention, and it is the theatrical record of his associate Mr. Cook.

A. W. Smith Promoted

Made Assistant to P. N. Brinch, the Hodkinson General Sales Manager

One of the first moves made by P. N. Brinch, the recently appointed general sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, was the promoting of A. W. Smith, Jr., to be his assistant.

Mr. Smith, although a young man, has been engaged in the motion picture industry since 1914, at which time he associated himself with Pathe. There he received his training under A. S. Abeles, Pathe Manager. He was salesman, then booker, then assistant manager and learned thoroughly the different angles of the game. Later he covered Western Massachusetts for Pathe. Then he was transferred to Dallas, Texas, as assistant manager, from which position he was promoted to be branch manager in July, 1917. Shortly after, he enlisted.

Mr. Smith summed up his ideas in a very few words: "Whatever I have accomplished," he said, "makes me ambitious to go a great deal further. And I know that with my present organization and working as I do under Mr. Brinch, there is much that I can accomplish. It is a veritable inspiration to be associated with Mr. Hodkinson and the type of men that go to make up his organization. We are out for results now—and we're geared to get them."

Special Opens at Broadway

"Dead Men Tell No Tales" Showing Ends Big Teaser Campaign in N. Y.

THE secret of the "Dead Men Tell No Tales" teaser, if it was any longer a secret, was revealed to New York on December 6th, when the Vitagraph feature opened at the Broadway Theatre for a week's run. The management made particular use of the black and white one-sheets which looked like enlargements of the black and white newspaper advertisements. Charles McDonald, exploitation for the theatre, featured the special one-sheets in his exploitation. Mr. Johnston, manager of the Broadway, reported an unusual large "opera cloak" audience, the members of which came especially for the picture.

The reviewers of the New York papers made many comments on this super-feature, and every review featured the scenes aboard the burning ship in the first part of the film, and paid tribute to the directorial skill of Tom Terriss in handling this particular scene. The reviewer of the New York Globe made reference to "the cryptic advertisement which has decorated the recent dailies in huge black splashes," as being revealed at last. The review went on to say that many readers had been made "nervous" by the advertisements of such sinister appearance, but ended by expressing the opinion that "the picture is here and all is forgiven because it is an excellent example of a mystery melodrama."

Harriette Underhill, in the Tribune, stated that "the picture is one of the best of its kind that we ever saw."

December 2nd saw the start of the new Cecil DeMille production, "Anatol," which Paramount considers to be a distinctive step in the advance of motion picture production. This is the picture which has been widely heralded as the first picture to be produced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on the West Coast under the recently announced policy of assembling all the Paramount stars in one great stock company.

The cast is composed of Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley, Agnes Ayres, Bebe Daniels, Theodore Roberts, Dorothy Cumming, Theodore Kosloff, Julia Faye and others. The scenario will be the work, in collaboration, of Jeanie MacPherson, Avery Hopwood, Beulah Marie Dix, and Elmer Harris. The production will have settings of magnificence and an investiture in which neither expense nor trouble will be spared to bring it to the highest pitch of perfection, declares Paramount. It will demand the concerted effort of hundreds of skilled artisans and artists and will eventually bring to the screen, in the most sumptuous manner possible, the highest attainments in art and literature combined with the science of modern motion picture production, declare Paramount officials.

Semon Rests 36 Hours Between Comedies

Larry Semon is one of the busiest stars on the Pacific Coast these days. He recently finished a comedy, entitled "The Sportsman," and within 36 hours was engaged in actual production on a new comedy, which he is making under the tentative title of "The Hick." Then, his new leading lady, Maryon Aye, needed some new costumes, and rather than be held up, Larry launched the balance of his company on still another comedy, which he claims will be an entirely new departure in the realm of comedy. He states that he will not announce the title of the third comedy until it is actually finished, as the title is a key to the action and nature of the story.

Bebe Daniels' Vehicle at Rialto Dec. 19th

"Oh, Lady, Lady!" Bebe Daniels' newest picture for Realart, has been booked by Dr. Riesenfeld, and will be shown at the Rialto theatre, New York, during Christmas week, beginning Sunday, December 19. The Production is adapted from the musical comedy of the same name by Bolton and Wodehouse, which had a long and successful run on Broadway a short time ago. With many humorous incidents and funny situations embodied in this picture, it is said to provide an ideal vehicle for Miss Daniels.

Supporting Miss Daniels are: Walter Hiers, comedian; Harrison Ford, popular leading man; Charlotte Woods, Lillian Langdon and Jack Doud.

Big Theatres Book "The Thief"

Bookings Prove Pearl White Has Pleased as Feature Star

THAT showmen have been pleased with Pearl White as star of feature photoplays is demonstrated by the quality and quantity of bookings on "The Thief" that the Fox contract department has reported to the trade press. Aside from countless bookings reported to be secured from the smaller towns, the Fox organization has contracted "The Thief" in every large city from Coast to Coast, it is declared.

Miss White made her appearance in her third Fox production on Sunday following Thanksgiving. The picture proved to be "just the ticket" for showmen, who in that booking warded off the slump in box-office takings that generally follows a holiday period. Reports are still coming in from all directions confirming the conviction Mr. Fox has often expressed that Pearl White would be an even better "draw" when she became established as a one-presentation star than she was in serials.

And with "The White Moll" and "Tiger's Cub" she became established as demonstrated in box-office takings in the printed expression of editorial opinion, and in the manner audiences received her presentations. Now comes "The Thief," an offering that is said to be off to a better start than either of its Pearl White predecessors.

The showing of "The Thief" at the Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J., was a success to such an extent that house records fell despite strongest opposition, according to statements issued by H. K. Robinson, the house manager. This was the earliest report on any engagement played by "The Thief," Newark being close enough to New York to get the returns on record ahead of towns further away.

Manager Robinson made the Pearl White production the basis of some active hustling which resulted in a local newspaper campaign that exceeded anything ever before done in behalf of motion pictures in Newark. He went personally to local merchants in cooperation with the advertising staff of the Star-Eagle and put stills from "The Thief" into every advertisement that was included in the resulting three-page spread preceding the photoplay's opening.

Developments in other large cities are still to be recorded, but it may readily be judged, from the importance of the theatres playing Miss White's latest photodrama, that there will be more than considerable activity in the long run. Exploitation aids and ideas for awakening public interest in the Henri Bernstein play have been developed to an unusual degree by the Fox staff of publicists, and each Fox branch is getting behind "The Thief" with every ounce of effort.

M. L. Markowitz plays "The Thief" at his Strand theatre, San Francisco; in Chicago the H. C. Moir Co. plays Miss White's new one at their Rose, Boston and Alcazar theatres, and Rowland and Clark have contracted their Savoy theatre, Pittsburgh, for "The Thief." Among other showmen in the larger cities who have booked Miss White's latest are:

W. D. Scoville, Idle Hour, Kansas City; Empire Amusement Co.'s Regent, Indianapolis; Ike Lison's Strand, Louisville; the Liberty, Terre Haute; N. S. Silverman's Barcli, Schenectady, and Keith's Boston theatre.

E. W. Fay will play "The Thief" at Fay's, Rochester; John Seifert will have Miss White at the Rialto, Dayton; the Saxe Amusement Co. will show her at the Princess, Milwaukee; while E. M. Fay's Knickerbocker, Philadelphia; E. C. Buckius's Valentine, Canton, Ohio; C. H. Miles's Miles theatre, Cleveland, and Ruthenburg's Globe, Flint, Mich., are among the listings of contracts already confirmed in the Fox home office.

Hammond Sees No Depression

Educational Chief Reports Bookings as Big as Ever

"THERE is not the slightest sign of business depression shown in our bookings," according to E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. "In fact, every month is showing a marked increase over the month immediately preceding. November far surpassed October and the reports received for December business indicate that the month will show a bigger percentage gain over November.

"Not only is this true, but practically all of these contracts cover entire series of comedies and single reel pictures. It is the more significant when it is stated that this has been brought about without increasing product and that no special productions are responsible for this gain. Still more important is that these contracts show faith in future business for the theatres. It indicates to us that the theatres of the country are on a much sounder business basis than ever before. Only a short time ago managers would have been in a panic at rumors of business depression. Now they know that their affairs are being conducted on a sound basis and they refuse to be frightened by rumors."

Mr. Hammons added to this statement that this was a particularly important statement because in case exhibitors did feel that they had to retrench they would be inclined to contract for cheaper product instead of the higher, both in features and in short subjects.

This statement was made not only on the report of bookings from the exchanges, but on a survey of conditions generally made through the home office. This embraced an examination into the steadiness with which the prints were working and the demand for posters, photographs and advertising material. All of these showed a marked increase over the whole period that Educational's own exchanges have been open and brought forward larger orders for the future.

Educational's production plans are entirely settled for many months to come. All of the various producing units are far ahead on schedule and actual prints are being received in the New York office weeks ahead, so that all advertising and exploitation material can be completed. While there will be no further increase in product by Educational, the company also announces that there will be no decrease in the number of offerings.

No. Carolina Exhibs Convene

RESOLUTION condemning state and local censorshop, recommending that steps be taken immediately by theatre owners of the United States toward the repeal of Federal theatre taxes and the passage in North Carolina of a law based upon the New York state law in regard to deposits by exhibitors were passed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina in convention at Charlotte, December 6. The censorship and deposit resolutions probably will result in representatives of the association being present when the next General Assembly of North Carolina convenes for the purpose of opposing any attempt at the passage of a censorship bill and to make efforts to have a bill drafted along the lines of the New York statute providing that deposits made as a pledge for merchandise shall be given into the custody of the county treasurer.

About one hundred exhibitors of the state were in convention and arrived in Charlotte the day preceding the convention for the purpose of accepting an invitation of Graver's Broadway theatre to attend a special showing of "Passion," the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., special production starring Pola Negri, the continental emotional actress, after the regular Sunday night performances.

The convention met the following day in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Selwyn. P. W. Wells, of Wilmington, president of the organization, presided at the sessions. After the questions of Federal taxes, deposits and censorship had been thoroughly discussed, C. J. McLane, J. C. Walsh and D. W. Bair were appointed members of a special committee for the purpose of drafting the consensus of opinion of the convention into resolution form.

The resolutions, as reported back and passed by the convention, were as follows:

"That greetings be sent to the Theatre Owners' Association of America, with which we are allied, congratulating that body upon its splendid achievements in bringing the producers, distributors and exhibitors in closer relationship and better understanding, and that it is the wish and purpose of this body to lend its good offices and support at all times in furthering the work so well begun along this line.

"That it is the judgment of this body that steps should be taken immediately to present to the Sixty-seventh Congress of the United States a clear, comprehensive statement of the burdensome Federal taxes which are being borne by the exhibitors of the country, with an appeal for the repeal of such amendments to the admission tax law as will place the exhibitor on a ground equal with other industries of the country.

"That in our opinion the deposit system has long placed upon the exhibitors an unjust and indefensible burden, at the same time yielding to the producer and distributor an unfair advantage which in many instances has been availed of, therefore, be it resolved that the next General Assembly of North Carolina be urged to enact a law similar to the New York statute, by which all deposits made as a pledge to merchandise leased for future use, be held in trust by the treasurer of the county in which said contract is to be executed until such contract shall have been fully executed to the satisfaction of both parties to the contract, or until the rights thereunder shall be judicially determined.

"That this body reaffirm its position in favor of clean, moral programs and as unalterably opposed to the exhibition of any picture of immoral or questionable character, and that we invite all persons and organizations interested in clean, wholesome shows to co-operate with a committee of exhibitors and a like committee of producers and distributors to the end that the best possible results may be obtained at least expense, and without the disturbance of legitimate business incident to local and state censorship. In our opinion the present state and Federal laws are ample for the protection of the public, and if any further protection should become necessary our efforts should be directed toward a uniform Federal, rather than a state and local censorship, therefore, be it resolved that this organization shall, through its official representatives, resist any and all encroachments upon their business rights by attended state or local censorship."

First National Gives Special Showing of "Passion"

Violet Clark Writing for Douglas MacLean

Early in her girlhood, Violet Clark showed a pronounced leaning towards the use of the pen for the income she decided to establish for herself. In school she had little or no trouble putting her essays, in fact any compilation, up to the 100 mark. And in writing was her paramount interest. It is not surprising, therefore, that she has finally become a leading writer for the screen, associated with a leading producer, Thomas H. Ince, and devotes her activities to stories which will become film plays starring Douglas MacLean.

Miss Clark was born in Omaha, Nebraska, and has attended Mills College of California, as well as the University of Chicago. Her career in writing for the screen dates back to "Loot," "Bonnie Bonnie Laurie," with Mary MacLaren, and "No Experience Required," for Universal. That she has continued to progress is evident by her present enviable position.

Heidelberger, Active Treasurer of World

Peter C. Heidelberger, secretary and treasurer of the World Motion Picture Corp., is one of the latest successful business men of New York City to enter actively a motion picture enterprise. It is due to the fact that he is always on the job, states World, that the company has proven to be so successful.

In addition to his motion picture activities Mr. Heidelberger is engaged in the real estate business in Greenpoint.

Two Realart Releases in Dec.

TWO important productions—one adapted from a musical comedy success, and the other based on an Alice Duer Miller story—constitute Realart's December releases.

These pictures are included in the quota of thirty-six productions offered under the Realart Star Franchise.

The first is, "Oh, Lady, Lady!" adapted from the play of the same name by Bolton and Wodehouse. Bebe Daniels, the "good little bad girl," is featured in it as May Barber. She is supported by a cast including Harrison Ford, Walter Hiers, known as "the funny fat boy;" Charlotte Woods, Lillian Langdon, and Jack Doud. It is directed by Major Maurice Campbell, and the scenario is by Edith Kennedy.

"Oh, Lady, Lady!" is known to thousands who saw the play on the speaking stage, where its great success led Realart to adapt it for the screen.

The story is full of humorous incidents, and is said to furnish Miss Daniels one of the best roles she has had, Realart officials believe. It deals with a country boy and girl, Willoughby Finch and May Barber, who are youthful sweethearts. Finch leaves for the city, and after five years becomes engaged to another girl. Meantime May has become a successful actress, and has forgotten her childhood attachment. She meets Hale Underwood, a young artist, who is on his way to be best man at the wedding, and from him learns of Finch's engagement. She sends a message to her former sweetheart which is misinterpreted by the butler, who receives it; and complications follow. May becomes deeply involved in these—so much so that Hale, who is in love with her, begins to believe she is not the innocent girl he had thought her to be. But it all works out for the best, and he finds himself justified in his choice—while Finch and his fiancee, who have been separated by the strange course of events, are happily united again.

Realart's second December offering is Wanda Hawley in "Her First Elopement," a story by Alice Duer Miller. Miss Hawley starred in "Food for Scandal" and "Her Beloved Villain," both recent Realart releases. Her first picture for Realart was "Miss Hobbs."

"Her First Elopement" was directed by Sam Wood, and the scenario is by Edith Kennedy. Miss Hawley carries the role of Christina Elliott, wealthy, beautiful and carefree, who by helping her cousin out of an unfortunate love affair becomes involved in several unusual and exciting situations. She is supported by Jerome Patrick, who will be remembered for his fine acting in "The Furnace," a current Realart release. Others in the specially selected cast are: Nell Craig, Lucien Littlefield, Jay Eaton, Helen Dunbar, Herbert Standing, Edwin Stevens, Margaret Morris, Ann Hastings, and John MacKinnon.

Pioneer Report a 200 Percent Increase

Reports from all the Pioneer exchanges, extending from Maine to California, which have reached the headquarters of the Pioneer Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, show an increased business during the month of November, as against a year ago, of over 200 per cent, and an increased business over the month of October of this year of 79 per cent.

"Bonnie May," the first Bessie Love production made by the A. J. Callaghan Productions and being distributed through Federated Exchanges, will be released soon by Celebrated Players in the Illinois and Indiana territories.

This is the first of four special productions Bessie Love is to make for Federated. The screen play was made from the book by Louis Dodge and was directed by Ida May Park and Joseph de Grasse.

From The New York Tribune

"'Dead Men Tell No Tales' is thrilling drama on the screen. It follows Hornung's tale closely, and reel follows reel without the slightest drop in interest. It is a fascinating story from first to last, much nicer, we think, on the screen than in book form. The picture is one of the best of its kind that we ever saw. It is perfect in every detail, and the burning of the ship at sea is so realistic that you have to exercise great self-control to keep from jumping on the stage and joining in the rescue."

Educational Comedies Heavily Advertised

Educational claims that a new record has just been set in Cleveland, O., newspapers with the announcement of thirteen of its pictures at thirteen theatres. It points out that this is far more significant than the mere booking of the pictures, for all of these houses realized the importance of advertising these pictures, even including those that used a half-inch space. In some cases more space was given the comedy than the feature. In every case the brand name of the comedy was used, and in every case but one the title was also included.

The pictures advertised on this day were: "A Tray Full of Trouble," a Chester, at the Euclid; "Seven Bald Pates," a Christie, at the Mal and Alhambra; "Four Times Foiled," Chester, at the Savoy; "A Fresh Start," Mermaid, at the Ezella: "Torchey," at the Homestead; "Nonsense," Mermaid, at the Crystal; "The Big Show," Chester, at the Regent; "Don't Blame the Stork," Christie, at the Lyceum, and "A Seaside Siren," at the Jennings, Gordon Square and Lucier. The Olympia merely advertised the brand, a Christie.

According to the Cleveland Exchange eight other theatres were playing Educational Comedies at the same time, but did not advertise.

Edwin Frazee, who is making a series of two-reel comedies at his new studio in Riverside, Cal., announces that he has just completed his third, entitled "All in the Air." The first comedy was "After Bedtime," and the second "A House Full of Spirits." Mr. Frazee is reported to be making good use of the trick photography he learned while directing Sennett comedies, and for which he is especially noted.

These comedies are now being distributed through independent exchanges throughout the country. Exhibitor reports in regard to those already released are said to be unusually favorable.

Metro Head Issues Statement

Thirty-eight Pictures Released to American Market

THE year 1920 passes into the film history as one of the best years enjoyed by Metro Pictures Corporation, as is evidenced by the many letters and telegrams of congratulation that have been arriving at Metro's home offices. The year brought to a successful fruition the praiseworthy policy, steadfastly and undeviatingly pursued by Metro, of giving the exacting film public bigger and better pictures.

Thirty-eight pictures were put into the motion picture market by Metro. Of this number, nineteen were Metro specials, while the company served as a medium of release for seven Screen Classics productions, one Maurice Tourneur production, two S. L. (Sawyer-Lubin) productions, three C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., productions—all of them adaptations from novels by Jack London; three Taylor Holmes productions, one Hope Hampton production, and three Buster Keaton comedies put out by Joseph M. Schenck.

The majority of the Metro specials were produced in Hollywood, California, while some were filmed at Metro's eastern studios in New York City.

During January two Metro pictures were offered the public, "The Willow Tree," Screen Classics, Inc., production released by Metro, starring Viola Dana, and "Nothing But the Truth," a Taylor Holmes production starring Taylor Holmes.

Metro released two pictures in February, "The Right of Way," in which Bert Lytell starred, and "The Walk Offs," starring May Allison. Both were produced by Screen Classics, Inc.

Four pictures were released in March, two of them Screen Classics productions, one a Taylor Holmes production, and one a Hope Hampton production.

In April Metro released "Alias Jimmy Valentine," starring Bert Lytell; "Dangerous to Men" with Viola Dana, and "Nothing But Lies," a Taylor Holmes production. In May, came "The Best of Luck," with an all-star cast, and the June schedule listed "The Cheater," which starred May Allison.

The first July release was "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," adapted from the comedy by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan and directed by Edward Dillon. "The Misfit Wife" was also released in July with Alice Lake as the star. The three August releases were "Held in Trust," starring May Allison; "The Chorus Girl's Romance," with Viola Dana as the star, and "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," with a special all-star cast.

Six pictures, "The Hope," "The Price of Redemption," "Clothes," "The Great Redeemer," "Love, Honor and Obey," and the first Buster Keaton comedy, "One Week," were released in September. In October came the second Keaton comedy, "Convict 13," "Blackmail," "The Saphead," and "Body and Soul."

November saw five pictures released. They were "The Star Rover," "The Fatal Hour," "Are All Men Alike," and "Someone in the House." For the present month the schedule includes "The Scarecrow," with Buster Keaton; "Hearts Are Trumps," "Polly With a Past," "The Misleading Lady" and "Cinderella's Twins."

Roth Finishes Tour of East

Reports on Conditions in East; 1921 to Advance Short-Lengths

MAX ROTH, division manager for Special Pictures Corporation, has just forwarded a report to the home office in Los Angeles on existing conditions in the East generally and how these conditions affect the short subject field specifically.

Mr. Roth returned to New York a few days ago after a lengthy trip convering fifty per cent of the country, terminating with two weeks in Boston spent in a close study of the New England situation. The report reads in part as follows:

"We are experiencing the reaction that all other industries are undergoing in greater or lesser degree, and a perfectly natural condition resultant from an overdose of prosperity. This reaction is not in itself dangerous and should not cause us a great deal of worry. After it is all over, the result will leave the entire industry in a more healthy condition.

"A close study of the motion picture industry will show very convincingly that it has been moving in cyeles and each completed cycle has raised the industry a little bit higher than its predecessor.

"Generally speaking, with the possible exception of the first run exhibitor, short subjects until very recently have been purchased by the exhibitor on a basis of footage. For example, if he needed two reels to fill out his program, it did not concern him greatly if these two reels happened to be a two reel Western or Comedy, or a single reel comedy and a weekly, of any other combination, so long as it ws conveniently available. However, the smaller exhibitor is giving more and more attention each day to this part of the program, and for that reason he is putting on a better balanced program.

"Short subjects are slowly but surely coming into their own, and the instances where two-reelers are featured over the feature itself are growing in number every day. Comparing the regular run two-reel comedy, slapstick, or otherwise, with a regular run of five-reel features, a careful analysis proves that the former has greater entertainment value and is the better picture. The intelligent interest being shown by the smaller exhibitor in short subjects will logically compel the producer to use every effort towards the raising of the standards.

Pathe Dates Four for January

Blanche Sweet, Gladys Brockwell and H. B. Warner on List

AS the immediate successor to the December feature schedule that brought forth such productions as "Dice of Destiny," with H. B. Warner; "The Empire of Diamonds," Leonce Perret's big international spectacle, and "Rogues and Romance," with June Caprice and George B. Seitz, Pathe announces a group of four big feature attractions for the month of January. These include Blanche Sweet in "That Girl Montana," H. B. Warner in "When We Were Twenty-One," both Jesse D. Hampton productions; "The Sage Hen," an Edgar Lewis special, which marks the return to the screen of Gladys Brockwell, and "The Killer," produced by Benjamin B. Hampton from a story by Steward Edward White.

The release dates are: "That Girl Montana," January 2; "When We Were Twenty-One," January 16; "The Sage Hen," January 23, and "The Killer," January 30. These four features make up one of the most notable schedules Pathe has offered during one month and have been selected with the greatest care to provide a formidable group of attractions for the first month in 1921.

"That Girl Montana" presents Miss Sweet in the role of the heroine of a romance of the frontier. The play was adapted by George H. Plympton from the novel by Marah Ellis Ryan. Robert Thornby directed, and the cast supporting the star is headed by Mahlon Hamilton and includes Edward Peil, Frank Lanning, Charles Edler, Jack Roseleigh and Kate Price.

The second feature on this schedule is an elaborate screen presentation of H. V. Esmond's play, "When We Were Twenty-One." The play was obtained by Jesse D. Hampton for H. B. Warner. In his part as the self-sacrificing guardian to the irresponhsible young heir to the Audaine fortune, Mr. Warner has a strong support. James W. Morrison appears as Richard Audaine and Claire Anderson as Phyllis. The other principals are Minna Grey, Claude Payton and Kara Glynesk. Henry King directed the production.

The release for January 23 is a drama of the old West produced by Edgar Lewis. "The Sage Hen" is based on the story of the same name by Harry Solter and deals with the struggles of a woman against the narrow and intolerant morality of small towns of the West. It is a story of mother love fighting against heavy odds to bring youthful romance to a happy issue. Miss Brockwell has the part of the mother. It is a character role and is reported to be a powerful and vivid portrayal as rendered by this well and favorably known actress.

Another player who has played leads in some of the big picture successes of the year, who is seen in "The Sage Hen," is Lillian Rich. Miss Rich played opposite H. B. Warner in "One Hour Before Dawn," "Felix O'Day" and "Dice of Destiny." She was featured with Mahlon Hamilton in "Half a Chance." For the remainder of the cast Mr. Lewis selected Alfred Allen, James Mason, Helen Case and the young hero of the story is Wallace MacDonald.

The contribution from the Benjamin B. Hampton studios will be the final number on the Pathe January schedule. "The Killer" is described by Pathe as a thrilling melodrama revolving about a character who is a killer by nature and instinct. In the story by Stewart Edward White, the Killer differs from his great prototype, Lucretia Borgia, in his methods of executing his cunningly conceived plots. The poison cup of the historical killer is discarded for the more actionable and melodramatic expedient invented by a modern man.

Frank Campeau, celebrated for his dramatic portrayals on the stage and the creator of many notable screen characters, is seen in the same role. Jack Conway, Tod Sloan, Frankie Lee, Zack Williams and Frank Haynes are other well known players who are in the cast of "The Killer."

Quive, of Realart, Heads Managers' Association

Ralph Quive, Realart's manager at Detroit, has been elected president of the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, according to a report received at the home office.

Mr. Quive has been in charge of Realart's Detroit office for the last year and a half. He has worked in close co-operation with other members of the local board, and is known as one of the most popular exchange managers in that territory, not only with other managers, but with exhibitors as well.

Larry Semon in "The Suitor"

From

Photoplay Magazine

"THE SUITOR"

VITAGRAPH

"For boys and girls of all ages. When we saw it, a family of three—staid middle-aged father, decorous younger mother, and a son of eleven—had mutual hysterics from mirth, although I suspect the small boy's enthusiasm penetrated to his parents. Larry Semon isn't standing still, that's certain. He has improved his methods of funmaking immeasurably in the past months, and this two-reeler is packed with bright bits of business, clever clowning, and all-around good sense in sets and story. For there is a story—all about a band of plotting dynamiters who are hounding the rich father of the lovely heroine, deftly played by Lucille Carlisle. A few more like this and Semon will be in the front rank of the silent comedians."

"For unalloyed slapstick this two-reeler wins medals.

"Fast action and novelty gags in which the cleverest kind of trick photography is used to advantage characterizes the picture throughout.

"Larry Semon as the star again apparently takes many chances of breaking his neck with his tumbling stunts and in this connection is ably supported by a good cast of 'knock - about' comedians."

Wm. DeMille Guest at Dinner

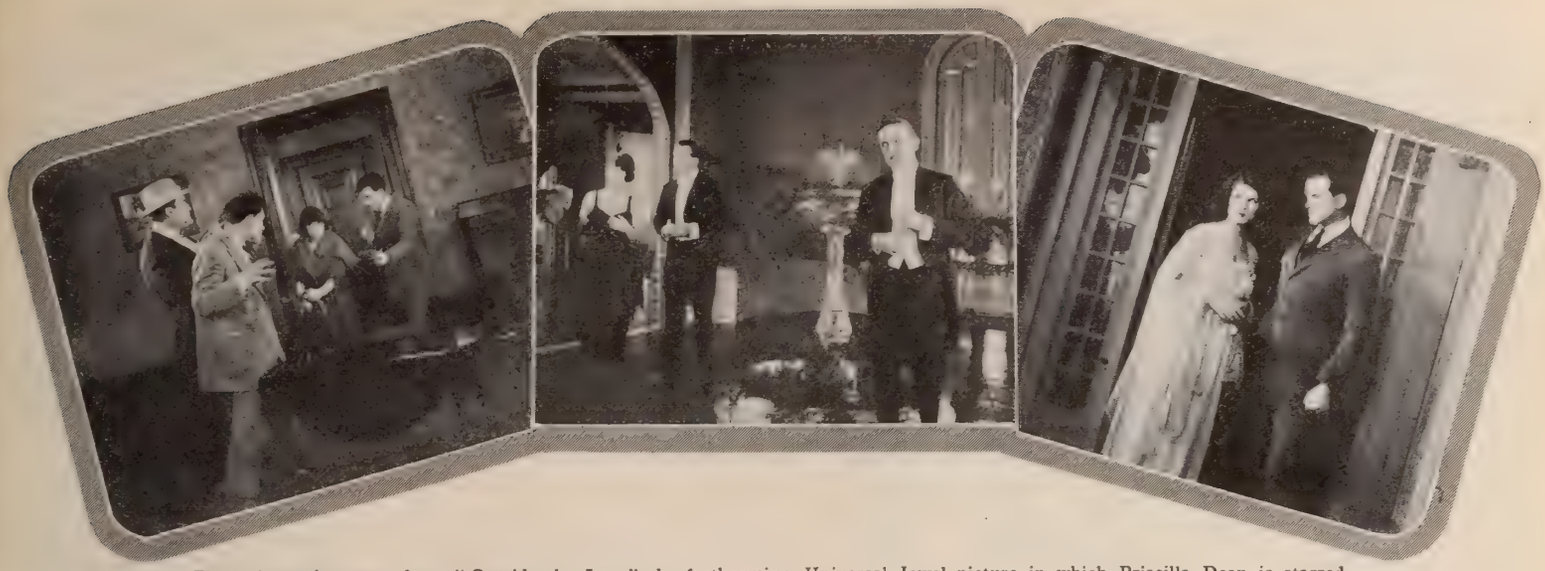
Tells of Work Attending Production of "Love Madness"

AT a luncheon given in his honor by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld at the Claridge, on Wednesday of last week, William DeMille, who produced "Midsummer Madness," the Paramount picture now being shown at the Criterion theatre, told a group of newspaper people his ideas and ideals in motion picture production.

Mr. DeMille at the same time gave some interesting information on how "Midsummer Madness" was produced from Cosmo Hamilton's novel, "His Friend and His Wife."

"'Midsummer Madness'" he said, "furnishes an interesting illustration of the necessity of co-operation between authors and directors, and shows why the Paramount producing organization headed by Mr. Lasky has brought a group of big writers into its studios. Somebody has raised the point that 'Midsummer Madness' is not Cosmo Hamilton's book, 'His Friend and His Wife.' With this statement I agree heartily, although I must admit that I have never read the book. But, while admitting the picture is not the book, I maintain that it does tell the story which the book told.

"Mr. Hamilton spent more than a month in the Lasky studio in Hollywood, during which time we worked in the closest co-operation. Before we began to work, I asked Mr. Hamilton to tell me the story of 'His Friend and His Wife.' He started to tell it to me with the ideas and the words of a novelist, introducing more than fifty characters and sketching in details which make up the book. But I soon convinced him that from the standpoint of the pictures the story must center in the four characters, portrayed on the screen by Jack Holt, Lila Lee, Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel, and that he must discard every incident that could not be told in pictures. He worked over this for days on end, my task always being to have him tell his story in terms of motion pictures. The story he finally evolved is the story of 'His Friend and His Wife' and 'Midsummer Madness.' But, of course, it is not the book.



"I do not want books. I do not want plays. I want authors—authors who can learn that building a drama in terms of pictures is entirely different from building a drama for the stage. I shall probably never adapt another book to the screen, because the future of motion pictures lies entirely in the establishment of a new screen literature. Until we have that we shall not have an art, and the only way to get a screen literature is to have authors who can tell dramatic stories, tell those stories in motion picture terms.

"The motion picture today has about the same relation to its ultimate development that the miracle play of the fifteenth century has to modern drama.

"The reason for this is that up to the present we have been almost wholly devoted to perfecting our craft learning our tools and improving on them. We have now developed this craftsmanship to a degree that enables us to present our story. Well, therefore, it behooves us to strike into new fields and make the motion picture the art that it is destined to be. In this we are growing rapidly—I should say that every five years in motion picture growth is equivalent to a century's growth in the legitimate drama. In about twenty-five years the motion picture will have brought itself down into the twentieth century."

Six Houses in One Street Have Star Franchise

Six out of seven theatres on Easton avenue, St. Louis, between the numbers 3600 and 5600, are holders of Realart's Star Franchise, according to reports received by Realart from the branch manager in that district. The franchise carries with it the theatre rights to thirty-six productions. Realart officials regard it a tribute to the popularity of the pictures that out of the seven theatres in this small area, six have selected Realart productions—very nearly a 90 per cent showing.

Wesley Barry Loaned to McDonald Co.

Wesley Barry, recently elevated to stardom by Marshall Neilan in his production of "Dinty," distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has been loaned by Mr. Neilan to the Katherine MacDonald Productions Company in support of that star in her next production, "Trust Your Wife." The latest production starring Miss MacDonald for distribution by First National is completed, and the actual filming of the play, in which Wesley Barry will appear in the supporting cast, will be started at once.

The play is as yet unnamed. It is an original script selected by Bernard Fineman, vice-president of the Katherine MacDonald Productions Company.

First Duncan Comedy Due January 15

The advance advertising on the new series of Bud and His Buddies Comedies was started by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation over six months ago, when the engagement of the diminutive comedian, Bud Duncan, of the Ham and Bud duo, was announced to the exhibitors via the trade papers.

Now January 15 is the date set for the first release. The title of the picture is "Puppy Love." From then on there will be a weekly release on schedule. Enough pictures have been completed and received by the general office to assure an uninterrupted schedule for exhibitors.

Distribution will be through the Reelcraft and allied independent exchanges throughout the United States.

The firm of Finkelstein and Ruben, of Minnesota, have acquired the distribution rights to all the Harry A. Sherman Productions, according to reports received this week. They will distribute the Sherman pictures in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin.

New Contract for Harry Carey

Universal Star Will Have Own Company Under New Plan

HARRY CAREY, Universal's most popular western star, is to be featured in Universal-Jewel productions, it is announced by Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. As four more Carey pictures have been promised to exhibitors in Universal's 1920-1921 Star Series, his first super-production will not be put into production until next summer. Then he will be taken from Universal's special attraction schedule entirely and will devote his time to making two or three big pictures each year.

The arrangement with Carey was made upon Mr. Laemmle's recent arrival at Universal City. A contract was signed by the star and the film chief under which Carey will make Universal-Jewel productions for the next two years. The arrangement is said to involve a sum upwards of $150,000.

Under the new plan, Carey will have his own producing company. This innovation for the cowboy star will be inaugurated immediately, so that his next four pictures, for release in the Star Series, can benefit from the intensified production efforts of Carey's own company as it is built up in readiness to handle the projected Universal-Jewels.

Kenneth McCaffey, formerly personal representative for Mary Pickford, will be production manager for Carey from now on. He will superintend Carey's next four five-reelers as well as the forthcoming larger productions.

Carey has been with Universal for five years, during the last two of which he has been starred in five-reelers. Prior to that he was the featured player in two-reel "westerns." Before joining Universal he played for Biograph, where he took leading roles for Griffith. Among his best Biograph pictures were "Olag, the Atom," "A Chance Deception," and "Knight of the Range," which he wrote for himself. He also played for Griffith in "The Unseen Enemy," with Lillian and Dorothy Gish.

Carey's past twelve months with Universal have been a succession of successful photoplays. Among the most successful of this series were "The Rider of Vengeance," "Marked Men," "Overland Red," and "Blue Streak McCoy." "Marked Men" established a new record for Carey's ability as a screen star. It was a touching story of deep human characterizations, wholly unlike the rough and ready western roles he previously had portrayed. It was adapted from Peter B. Kyne's story "The Three Godfathers."

Carey also won unusual praise for his interpretation of the quaint tramp character in "Overland Red," the popular story by H. H. Knibbs. "Blue Streak McCoy" was from the pen of H. H. Van Loan, one of the screen's leading writers.

The Universal star gained fame on the stage and as a playwright before he entered the film world. He wrote and produced "Montana," a popular melodrama of a decade ago, playing the leading role of "Cheyenne Harry" in the piece.

His most recent production, "Hearts Up!" is from his own pen. It is considered to be the best picture he has made since "Overland Red." In "Hearts Up!" Carey is supported by Mignonne Golden, Frank Braidwood, Arthur Millett, Charles LeMoyne and others. The picture was filmed under Carey's personal direction, although Val Paul handled the megaphone.

The star now is engaged in the production of "If Only Jim," an adaptation of Phillip V. Mighels' story, "Bruver Jim's Baby." Jacques Jaccard is in charge. Carey's support includes Carol Halloway, Ruth Royce, Duke R. Lee, Roy Coulson, Charles Brinley, George E. Bunny, Joe Hazelton and Minne Prevost.

Blackstone Pictures, Inc., the latest exchange to enter the Chicago field, is now established in its new offices at 21-23 East Seventh Street, and have taken a long term lease on the premises which were remodeled in every detail to give commodious accommodations to the business, the exchange including three large vaults, two inspection rooms, poster and shipping rooms with comfortable offices.

Morris Kline is president of the corporation, R. H. Hadfield, the manager, started as an exhibitor in 1906 and since that time having been connected with production, state rights and exchange business from almost every angle. Fred Linick and Maurice Salin are covering the Chicago district as salesmen and three others working the outside territory for Blackstone Pictures, Inc.

The first pictures being released are reissues of Wm. Russell, Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes and a series of twenty Ben Turpin, two-reel comedies. Other pictures will be added to the list regularly but no picture rights will be acquired unless they have a positive drawing punch for the theatre.

The territory to be covered is Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, with possible a little later connections in Indianapolis and Milwaukee.

Jacksonville's Advantages for Producers

By W. J. McCormack, Motion Picture News

PRODUCERS are beginning to view with annoyance the increased expense attached to making exterior scenes on the West Coast. Why? Because the locations in and adjacent to popular studio sites have been 'shot to death.' To quote a well known western director, who knows of what he speaks: "I've got to be mighty careful about shooting scenes around here. Every bit of the country has been used. To include familiar exteriors in any picture is courting sameness. If I'm forced to take a company of thirty or more a night's ride from the studio in order to get new scenery, how do you think that cuts into production expenses?"

There is only one solution to the problem confronting producers. Find a site that offers facilities at least on a par with the West, where there are excellent climatic conditions, natural scenery, business co-operation and, if possible, a nearness to New York.

That site is Jacksonville, Florida.

The average temperature throughout the year in Jacksonville is about 69° Fahr. The city is situated on the St. John River. It offers a lavish variety of scenery—cattle, alligator ranches, ostrich and poultry farms, orange and grapefruit groves, a 450 yard wide beach and fisheries. It is only a night's ride to the mountainous regions, a forty mile ride on a beautiful road to St. Augustine with all its wonderful old and new sites, lumber industries, turpentine plants, sawmills, tropical scenes—everything. The country lends itself to northern settings, in fact to every geographical location.

And this city of Jacksonville is only a twenty-eight hour ride from New York City at express train speed!

Jacksonville has a municipally controlled electric light plant that gives service lower than many privately owned competitive plants. The city sells power at three cents and light at seven cents. The plant is equipped with oil burning engines. During the recent coal strike, this electric light plant, with its equipment of oil burning engines, was able to keep the factories running right along.

A few months ago, the leading business men of Jacksonville got together at the Chamber of Commerce to consider the possibility of Jacksonville becoming a large motion picture production centre. After considerable discussion, they decided to make investigations with a view to what New York and Los Angeles offer motion picture producers.

First they commissioned a responsible motion picture technical man to investigate the climate. He found, after consulting the United States weather report, that at no time during the average year is the temperature of Jacksonville higher than that of Los Angeles. Armed with a climate and other weather conditions on a par with that of the West Coast and with a wide diversity of scenery never before used in picture making, a committee was formed immediately to act in a body in bringing before producers the advantages of making motion pictures in Jacksonville, Florida.

W. R. Carter, former newspaper man, editor, and owner of Jacksonville's The Metropolis, was elected chairman of the committee. His associates are H. K. Klutho, leading architect and owner of the largest studio in Jacksonville, Harry B. Hoyt, president of the city's Gas Plant, E. E. Cohen, president of a large department store, and B. S. Levy, president of chain clothing stores.

The committee single out, first, the western background for pictures in Jacksonville. There are large cattle ranches in close proximity to the city, the rich grazing grounds and climate make this country particularly good for cattle raising.

In the event that a producer wants immediate transportation service, he finds that five railroads have terminals in Jacksonville; that ten lines run into the city from various directions, and that the trains are of the express class. If he wants river transportation, the St. John River and its various ship lines are at his beck and call.

And there are locations aplenty for typical fruit growing atmosphere. Of course there are orange and grapefruit groves. But only a short distance away are farms specially devoted to raising on a large scale, figs, grapes, pears, peaches, and the like, as well as farms that are typically northern in their appearance.

How many times is sugar cane planting appropriate for exteriors? Jacksonville abounds in such lands.

Fishing is quite an industry. The St. John River is a Mecca for the deep sea hunters and the producer interested in this sort of atmosphere can glory in the inexpensiveness of it as offered by Jacksonville, Florida.

If the producer wants shots of big northern city life, Jacksonville can supply this, for it has a population of about 125,000 people, and has all the pep of a western city of a half million population.

In the way of industries, which may prove of interest in picture making, are enumerated: the cracker manufacturing concern; the cotton oil refinery; the dry kilns; the dairies; broom factories; one of the largest coffee roasting plants of the South; macaroni manufacturing plants; turpentine yards encircling the city.

The St. John River offers an excellent locale for scenes depicting pleasure and commercial boats. A boat can go safely for over a hundred miles up the St. John River to Sanford, with "side trips" to Silver Springs and other interesting places. Not only are splendid locations offered here, but the very variety of them inoculates into the fertile mind ideas for screen stories!

Jacksonville is the hope of the producers who view with annoyance the increased expense attached to making exterior scenes on the West Coast where the country has been 'shot to death.' The beauty of Nature, the excellent climatic conditions—on a par with that of the West—the transportation facilities, the production facilities, the nearness to New York, and the sincere co-operation of the business men are fundamental in Jacksonville's bid for motion picture production.

Years ago, Sidney Olcott, well known director, recognized the wonderful advantages offered by this city, and he made numerous productions there. The old Kalem company also took advantage of Jacksonville's economic and highly efficient motion picture facilities, but on a rather small scale.

Now, for the ensuing year of 1921, Jacksonville makes a serious bid to become a prominent centre for picture making. Investigate, Mr. Producer, and verify for yourself.

Samuel Hutchinson Speaks

"PERSONALLY, I do not claim the motion picture business is now in its infancy I have watched its growth for seventeen years, through personal contact, and have viewed its ups and downs in this particular. The motion picture business is like any other basic industry, in which there are periods of great prosperity followed by periods of lesser results.

"Reviewing the past year's results of the efforts of the American Film Company, I am inclined to believe that we are now entering on an era of greater prosperity in the industry Our company has just finished one of the most profitable years in its history. Our sales in the United States as well as those in Europe and the Far East has far exceeded our expectations, and while our net profits have not been large, the volume of business has been extremely satisfactory.

"In our Chicago laboratory, the laboratory work has been of such a character and quality that we have secured a great number of clients who appreciate high quality and service.

"In our London laboratories, which our company owns, including the land and buildings, our printing is of such high quality that our English and Continental clients refer to us as the 'Tiffany' of the printing business, and in spite of reconstruction and depression caused by the war, our London business has been extremely satisfactory.

Following the announcement in last week's Motion Picture News that Milton C. Work, president of the Peerless Producing Co., had acquired the world rights to the latest Mayflower production, "Whispering Shadows," in which Lucy Cotton is starred, comes the news that he has also purchased the Lawrence Weber, Inc., production, "The Wakefield Case," with Herbert Rawlinson as the star. This is a mystery story from the pen of Shannon Faife. The pro duction was directed by George Irving. In the supporting cast are Charles Dalton and Florence Billings.

Both of these high class pictures will be distributed on the State Right market, by Peerless Producing Company, which is rapidly rising to the fore as the distributors of state and foreign right features. Among the previous features which they have successfully handled are the Edythe Sterling Western, "A Daughter of the West," and "The White Rider." Practically all of the territory on these two pictures has been sold.

New Minneapolis House Books Educational

Declared to be the finest residential district playhouse in America, the Loring theatre, located at Nicollet and Fourteenth streets, Minneapolis, was opened Saturday, December 3rd. "Torchy Turns Cupid" was featured on the opening bill, and with the first change of program Lloyd Hamilton in "The Simp," a mermaid, was included. The theatre has announced the policy of showing all the Educational Comedies.

Hutchinson Says

"We believe the time has passed for any class of work and service 'to get by' and the day has arrived when real quality, real work and honest service is appreciated by the discriminating, whether in the exhibition or producing lines.

"We are preparing special plans for productions for the future, along lines of novelty, knowing from our experience that new and striking offerings are the life of the show business. We expect some wonderful announcements during the next twelve months.

"In conclusion, it is with great pride we can state that our company owns all its own property, lands and buildings, without incumbrances; does not owe any debts of any kind and has a very satisfactory bank balance on which to start next year's business. What better prospects could be reviewed than these?

"We wish to extend our best wishes and the compliments of the season to our many friends and customers throughout the United States and abroad, for the next year."

Dailies Devote Greater Space to Pictures

In a statement just issued, William Fox calls attention to the fact that newspapers throughout the country are giving increasing space to the part that motion pictures play in the life of the public. News items and editorial comment regarding motion pictures being shown or about to be shown are in the ascendency even in those dailies who heretofore tabooed all references to film matters.

As an instance of this new order of affairs, William Fox calls attention to an editorial expression, applying to William Farnum in "If I Were King," that appeared in the Savannah Press under date of November 25.

In part the editor wrote:

"Everybody has read the book or seen the play, and yet, from the way people attended the pictured representation in Savannah they are not tired of reheasing the story. Every performance, morning, noon and night, was crowded, the last as heavily as the first. The representations were plain and impressive.

The point the Savannah Press wishes to make is that there is great demand among the people for clean, high-class motion pictures. There is nothing erotic in this film. It is full of action and teems with color and spirit.

"Forward" Is Dwan's Slogan

Disagrees With Fan Who Hearkens to Good Old Days

A MOTION picture fan recently wrote Allan Dwan to the effect that the world in general and the motion picture public in particular would be vastly benefitted and much happier—and perhaps wealthier—if some of the old-fashioned games and men and women and modes of travel and methods of correspondence and so forth and so on should return to their former popularity.

He advised Mr. Dwan to make a series of pictures as a sort of propaganda for this big idea.

"In those days—well, yes, perhaps the good old fashioned ways were good," Mr. Dwan remarked as he tossed the letter on the table. "Return to them? Please excuse—me—please!"

"Wouldn't it be wonderful to go back to the old square dance?" suggested the fan from Cincinnati.

"Oh, yes—it would," replied Mr. Dwan. "Wonderful opportunity to trim the toes of some of our most progressive dancers. That's the only comforting thought I entertain relative to the matter."

"And there's the old-fashioned parlor, with its hallowed memories, that was opened once during the week—and that was Sunday afternoon and Sunday evening," laments the fan.

"Great sentiment!" Mr. Dwan says. "Back to the frosty, musty parlor, with its damp, dank atmosphere and pneumania. Back to the sofa and brand new chairs and new carpet for inspiration—perhaps. Well, I believe the modern way is best. Instead of the moldy, mildewed old parlor, why not a spin in your roadster or limousine on a Sunday afternoon? Why not a sprightly trip to the beach, or the mountains? Why not an hour or two at the theatre? Why not a trip in your airplane? Back to the old parlor? Again I beg to be excused."

"I shall never forget those old-fashioned husking-bees and hay rides," further says the fan.

"Neither will I," replies Mr. Dwan. "I fell off a hay wagon once—and that cured my hay-ride sentiments. "I also attended a husking-bee back in Illinois—and that's not so far from Cincinnati, at that—and a red-headed swain planted a red ear of corn in my face when I disputed the right of discovery of same with him. I don't want any more husking-bees in mine. Give me a book and a quiet evening at home—or if it is afternoon, perhaps a visit to the ball park or the football game—or something. Maybe a motor trip."

"Also, I remember well the Sunday morning sermon in the little old red church over in Kentucky," avers the fan in a new outburst of enthusiasm.

"So do I—but not in Kentucky," Mr. Dwan said, but with a perceptable lack of enthusiasm. "It was a little gray church—also in Illinois. Well do I remember it. The preacher would start preaching at 11 a. m. and at 2 p. m. he would still be preaching. In fact, I sometimes thought he would continue preaching until that doom's day he was telling us about. I am not opposed to good preaching, understand—but not any more of the good old-fashioned kind. Let's hear the progressive, modern disclaimer—for his sermons are brief, business-like and timely."

The Cincinnati fan mentioned many other old-fashioned customs and fads, which he hopes will return, but Mr. Dwan dismissed them with a shrug, and in a more serious vein, expressed himself as follows:

"Happiness lies in progress. The man who stands still will always be knocked about and pummeled by the passing throng. The man who is ever moving forward wins the admiration of his fellow man, or his envy, but secure in the knowledge that he is progressing, comes happiness.

"Let us always go forward—and not backward.

"And that's one mission the motion picture industry is called upon to fill. May we rise to the occasion and perform the duty that devolves upon us as members of that industry."

Christie Has Successful Year

HAVING kept pace with an unusually great impetus in its producing activities within the year, the Christie company is entering 1921 with picture production well in hand to take care of forthcoming releases of the winter months and early spring. Marked not only by a broadening out into six-reel comedy-dramas, but also an increase in the quantity of its short subject offerings, the year of 1920 has been a big one for the Christie company.

The next of the six-reel comedy-dramas has already been made. It is "See My Lawyer" from the big Broadway play by Max Marcin and will be released early in the new year presenting T. Roy Barnes, and Grace Darmond who made a hit in "So Long Letty," augmented by a list of other stellar players.

Greater than these accomplishments, Al Christie points to the new two-reel comedies which Educational is releasing at the rate of two per month, which are characterized by the same quality in short lengths as Christie has produced during the year in the feature pictures. "The demand for more comedies of a high grade this year has been met by a comedy which is at least fifty per cent better in merit and pulling power than at this time last year," says Christie. "Not only that, but the comedies in the single-reel brand which have now been introduced as Vanity Comedies, are bearing the same stamp.

"The end of the year is said to be characterized by a general slump in production, but we are going right ahead with the two-reel and single-reel schedule, now making the comedies which will be released through Educational exchanges in March and April of 1921."

Mr. Christie is now working on a two-reel special which will present Neal Burns and Dorothy Devore with a cast of five supporting players from the large stock company. William Beaudine, and Frederic Sullivan are producing one-reel Vanity Comedies with the stock company of players which has been set aside exclusively for this one-reel release.

Olga Printzlau, Paramount scenario writer, who for some time has devoted her attention to the preparation of the scripts of William DeMille's productions, has just signed a five-year contract under the terms of which she will continue to write exclusively for Mr. DeMille.

Miss Printzlau's success in the adaptation of Cosmo Hamilton's story, "His Friend and His Wife," which William DeMille produced under the title, "Midsummer Madness," is said to have been the determining factor which led to her engagement for a long term of years.

To Film "Unchartered Seas" in the North

Wesley Ruggles has been entrusted with the script for Metro's adaptation of John Fleming Wilson's "Uncharted Seas." Rudolpho Valentino will play the masculine lead, while Carl Gereard will give the heavy portrayal.

The entire company plans to leave for the Arctic regions at an early date, where most of the exterior scenes will be taken. Director Ruggles plans to "shoot" the Aurora Borealis while the troupe are in the northland.

Pearl White's Third Feature in Demand

The home office of the Fox organization is in receipt of information from its various branches in this country that "The Thief," Miss White's third special from the Fox studios, is exceeding the vogue she attained with "The White Moll" and "Tiger's Cub." The third Pearl White picture did not get under way until the week after Thanksgiving, but the bookings have far exceeded her first two, as demonstrated by the records in the Fox contract department, it is announced.

Clyde Cook's Third to Be Ready January 9

As his third Clyde Cook special comedy, William Fox will release "All Wrong" on January 9. So well has the new comedy star been received by showmen and ticket-buyers that Mr. Fox expects for "All Wrong" increasing sales and popularity—for the two comedies already released with Clyde Cook the star are reported to have gone over with a "bang."

Predicts Advance for 1921

New Marketing Methods and Perfecting of Color Photography Seen

FAR-REACHING changes in methods of marketing pictures, improvements in methods of showmanship and the perfection of color photography are some of the prominent advances that will be accomplished in the coming year, according to John W. McKay, general manager of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

"Judging by present indications," said Mr. McKay, "we may look for some very revolutionary things next year. Chief of these will be far-reaching changes in marketing methods. And next to this will be the progress made in the technical end of the business. Then, too, methods of showmanship will be perfected to the highest point attainable next year."

In the opinion of Mr. McKay there can be no question that the next great step forward for the motion picture will be the perfection of color photography.

"Although a number of color photography systems have been developed this year," explained Mr. McKay, "none has been wholly satisfactory. The method has been either imperfect or so expensive as to render it impractical for commercial purposes on a large scale. But with the creative minds in the mechanical and technical end of the business concentrating on this problem, it is only reasonable to anticipate some startling achievements in 1921 as a result of their experiments."

The opening of the way for an entire reorganization of marketing methods has been effected, according to Mr. McKay, by the Mayflower - Realart "Play and Then Pay Plan," under which exhibitors play their pictures first, and then pay for them afterward, basing payment on actual box-office receipts instead of on a guess as to the worth of the picture as embodied in the rental price fixed by the distributor.

Without a doubt this "honor system of booking," as some call it, is the most radical method ever injected into the motion picture industry, he states, and it is believed the fuller development next year of this scheme will be watched with great interest by every exhibitor and distributor in the business.

"Exploitation of motion pictures during 1920," says Mr. McKay, "has evolved much from which the wise theatre owner will profit in 1921. Picture presentation has probably been perfected to its highest degree of usefulness, but such is not true of exploitation. I am told there are still many exhibitors throughout the country who are not sold on the exploitation idea. But the fact remains that undoubtedly the end of 1921 will find every theater owner in the country converted to this business stimulant, and it will be established as a concrete adjunct of the exhibition game."

Barker Production Delayed

Infection of Pauline Starke's Eyes Causes Set-Back; Other Units Busy

A TELEGRAM received at the Goldwyn studios from Reginald Barker who, with the company making the screen version of Katherine Newlin Burt's new novel, "Snow Blindness," is in Banff, Canada, states that work of photographing the exteriors has been delayed, due to a serious infection of the eyes developed by Pauline Starke. The trouble was caused by a scratch on the forehead sustained on the train while en route from Los Angeles to Banff. The curious part of the entire matter is that Miss Starke plays the role of a girl temporarily snow blind in the picture. Russell Simpson, Mary Alden, Cullen Landis and Miss Starke have the four big roles in the Reginald Barker all-star production of "Snow Blindness."

E. Mason Hopper is putting the finishing touches to the new Rupert Hughes picture in which Helene Chadwick has the principal role. This is the first story which Mr. Hughes wrote directly for the screen. He is spending every day on the set and is collaborating with Director Hopper on intricate camera effects.

Director Frank Lloyd has finished nearly all of the American scenes for Gouverneur Morris' first original scenario known tentatively as "The Water Lily," and will soon begin photographing the big scenes of the Boxer uprising which figure in the early part of the story and for which an entire section of a Chinese city was built on the Goldwyn studios.

Tom Moore's new stellar picture, "Mr. Barnes of New York," from the famous old novel by Archibald Clavering Gunter, is rapidly taking screen form under the directing eye of Victor Schertzinger. Quaint and colorful costumes and settings have been designed for this production in keeping with the period in which the action takes place.

Marion Davies Entertains

Marion Davies will give a Christmas party at the International Film Company's studio on the afternoon of December 25, between 3 and 5 o'clock. Hundreds of children of the neighborhood will then be the guests of the beautiful film star, who will personally present a Christmas gift to each child, previously—on Wednesday, December 22. At the party there will be dancing, music, refreshments and a general gala time.

If "Buried Treasure," Miss Davies' newest picture, can be secured from the laboratories where it is now being worked on, it will be shown the children as an added attraction. Previous to this, Miss Davies has held her Christmas Day children's party in her Riverside Drive home, but this one, in the studio, is planned the greatest treat of them all.

Harry Wilson, Author of "The Spenders"

Harry Leon Wilson, author of "The Spenders," which Benjamin B. Hampton has made into a motion picture and which the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will release in January, is known as one of the great American humorists alive today.

Mr. Wilson worked with Mr. Hampton in bringing the situations embodied in "The Spenders" absolutely up-to-the-minute, as a result of which the picture offers an interesting portrayal of New York's society at the present time, and is replete with the richest humor.

Universal Series Wins Access to Sax Houses

A new precedent was set recently for the theatres of the Julius Sax Theatres Circuit of Portland, Ore., when Sam Sax, general manager of the chain, booked "King of the Circus," the new Universal serial starring Eddie Polo, for the New Grand theatre. Heretofore it has been strictly against the policy of the Sax houses to show serials, states Universal.

Rothacker's Greatest Expansion in 1921

IN a statement just issued from the Chicago headquarters of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Watterson R. Rothacker extends holiday greetings to the entire industry in the following words:

"Every one in the motion picture industry—producers, distributors, exhibitors and professionals—I wish all of these as merry a Christmas and as happy a New Year as the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company will have. And I hope they will enjoy as prosperous a coming year as I feel sure is in store for our organization."

The past twelve months are described in the statement from the Rothacker headquarters as "the biggest by far on the Rothacker calendar." In the laboratory division of the big plant business was turned away, it is stated, because it was not humanly or mechanically possible to turn out any more prints. In the industrial division it was impossible at times to get enough cameramen to supply the demands of Rothacker's clients, announces the Rothacker statement.

The coming year is expected to witness even greater achievements by the Rothacker forces. By the time the infant 1921 has its teeth cut the Rothacker Coast laboratory will be opened. As soon as the Hollywood plant is in operation Mr. Rothacker will go to London to get construction started on a third laboratory there. While in Europe last summer he received assurance of enough business to enable the foreign plant to open up with 500,000 feet of planting a week, it is stated. On returning from abroad next spring, Mr. Rothacker plans to award the contract for the erection of a fourth laboratory in New York.

The dawn of 1920 saw the Rothacker Industrial Division the world's largest producer of practical pictures, the field in which Mr. Rothacker was the pioneer. But one would scarcely recognize that industrial division today, so swiftly has it grown in twelve months. Last January there was only one Rothacker industrial headquarters—Chicago.

Early last spring President Rothacker bought out the Leggett & Gruen industrial film concern and formally opened the Eastern Rothacker industrial branch in commodious quarters at 220 West Forty-second street, New York City. One after another, other branches were established in St. Louis, Buffalo, Peoria and Milwaukee. The Rothacker Industrial Division is determined to have every strategical city in the country covered within another twelve months. While in Europe last summer Mr. Rothacker appointed Richard Wainwright industrial representative for the United Kingdom. Mr. Wainwright having offices at 6 Piccadilly Mansions, Shaftsbury avenue, W. I.

The "super-production" made its advent into the industrial field this year. Formerly most practical pictures were of short length—in the majority of cases only one reel and seldom running over three or four. This year industry came into full appreciation of the value of the medium which Mr. Rothacker was the first to harness into their service ten years ago. A manufacturer who, two years ago would have been content with only one reel, this year found need for eight to ten reels. The seven and eight-reel practical picture was as common on the 1920 production schedule as single reelers were several years ago.

Films which American manufacturers will use to get Uncle Sam's share of the foreign trade were a notable feature of 1920 practical picture production. Films produced in the Chicago studio last spring are now in all parts of the world.

For the Laboratory Division 1920 proved a severe test. There literally was not a breathing spell in the entire year. But in spite of this pressure a half-hour was chopped off each person's working hours by giving the laboratory workers two recesses a day—fifteen minutes morning and afternoon, in which they might dance in the studio, go for a walk, regale themselves in an ice cream soda across the street or whatever they pleased. Of course, the pay remained the same. The laboratory force responded to this innovation by actually turning out more prints in eight hours than they had been doing in eight and one-half hours.

Early in the year the exterior fireproof vault was completed, affording clients an absolutely safe storage place for negatives. Inside the laboratory a number of changes were made, notably the segregation of assemblers into small asbestos-walled rooms.

Frequently the Rothacker organization was called upon to furnish a special messenger to convey prints to a distant city in order that an advanced release date might be made.

The organization started out at the beginning of 1920 to make "Rothacker Service" as well known as "Rothacker Prints." Service men were dispatched on a tour of the exchanges to find out all the ways the organization could deliver something more than prints. Members of the organization now feel that the service goal has been attained, but they are determined that the goal of 1920 shall be only the starting point of 1921. Letters received from exchanges the last few months indicate that "Rothacker Service" has become a part of film-dom's vernacular. Wesley Smith has been maintained on the Coast as a service representative, visiting the studios regularly.

"One of the big jobs on our program for 1921 is the standardization of our laboratories," said the president of the Rothacker Company. "Early in the new year the Rothacker laboratory on the Coast will be opened. As soon as this one is operating. I plan to go to London to get construction started on the European contract. I do not think we are overly optimistic when we hope to see laboratories erected both in London and New York City in 1921."

"The then four Rothacker laboratories must be standardized—although long distances apart they must operate as one.

"Our technical experts are now working on this standardization problem. Their task is to insure that in no matter which laboratory the negative is developed or the print made the result will be the same. With laboratories in Los Angeles, New York and London as well as in Chicago, all operating under standardized methods, it will be possible for the Rothacker workers to develop most of the negatives they will be called upon to make prints from."

Lull Proves Return to Normal

Bennett Says Holiday Drop Shows War Craze is By

THAT theatres in various parts of the country are noting a discernible lull in patronage is one of the best signs that the times could afford of the solid basis upon which the motion-picture industry is based, is the opinion of Whitman Bennett at the head of the producing company of that name which is preparing seven special productions, four of them starring Lionel Barrymore, for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Mr. Bennett declares that a halt in motion picture-theatre patronage at this time of year is a good indication that the business of exhibiting is once more on a normal basis.

"The exhibitor who feels alarmed because he has noticed a perceptible drop in attendance at his theatre within the past few weeks." said Mr. Bennett, "is either one who has a very short memory or else one who entered the business of exhibiting during the abnormal period which has persisted over the past thirty months. The experienced exhibitor knows that in normal times there is always a lull in attendance before the Christmas holidays and these exhibitors were surprised when it did not come last year or the year before.

"This mid-season lull has been explained in various ways but the most plausible one lies in the fact that the business of preparing for the celebration of Christmas is an occupation that allows but scant time for theatre attendance. Retail trade is on the boom especially in the evening. Clerks, accountants and other store employes are tied up at their place of business. They themselves are not only prevented from attending the theatre but the members of their families stay home to be present when they return from work. A great many of those who are not forced to work in the evenings employ the hours used at other times for theatre attendance to do their Christmas shopping or else take the opportunity of earning additional money by the many extra temporary positions that are open to them for their evening hours.

Whitman Bennett, producer of pictures for First National release

"The fact that the lull has been discernible this year should be a source of confidence to the exhibitor. It is the surest indication that could occur to show that the country is getting back on a normal basis. The American people have once more taken up the business of living sane and safe lives when the occupation of preparing for Christmas is widespread enough to be felt in the motion picture theatre. The hysteria of war is gone. The carelessness of private extravagance engendered by the recklessness of all the governments of the world, recklessness which caused the people to disregard all customs of normal living, is gone and it is for the benfit of all legitimate business that it is gone.

"The brake has been applied just in time. The American public has served notice on the motion picture theatre that it is once again living on a normal basis. Real showmanship will once more come into its own and the man that knows the science of exhibiting is the one who will be rewarded for his efforts. The ones who will suffer are those who are real showmen but mere owners or managers of motion picture theatres. The public will be once more responsive to well thought out exploitation."

Miss Talmadge in Florida

Constance and Her Company Busy on Exteriors for New Production

CONSTANCE TALMADGE with her director, Chet Withey, Cameraman Oliver Marsh, and her entire company, have gone to Miami, Florida, to make exteriors for "The Man From Toronto," Douglas Murray's play which has been adapted for the screen by Grant Carpenter.

The name of this story which was played in this country by Henry Miller, under the title of "Perkins," and is still playing in England as "The Man From Toronto," will be changed later on. Kenneth Harlan, who recently appeared with Constance in "Dangerous Business," and who, on account of his splendid work in that picture, has been signed up by Jos. M. Schenck for a year's contract will be seen as Constance Talmadge's leading man. This is the first of the Constance Talmadge productions to be directed by Chet Withey, who formerly directed Norma Talmadge. Following "The Man From Toronto" Mr. Withey will direct "The Butterfly in Harness."

Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, has made December a "Harold Lloyd Tribute Month" at the Palace. The house has played all of Lloyd's two-reel feature comedies. With the showing of each, increased interest in Pathe's premier comedian has been manifested by the public until it has become apparent to Mr. Meyer that his patrons are sufficiently enthusiastic about Lloyd's performances to warrant his offering as features during the month of December five of Lloyd's best one-reel pictures.

The five one-reel pictures selected by the Hamilton for exhibition during December are "Why Pick on Me?" "Ask Father," "Hear 'em Rave!" "Bees in His Bonnet" and "Two Scrambled." The playing dates are December 2, 3 and 4, "Why Pick on Me?"; 8 and 9, "Ask Father!"; 15 and 16, "Hear 'Em Rave!"; 19, 20 and 21, "Bees in His Bonnet," and 27 and 28, "Two Scrambled." In announcements of the Lloyd Tribute Month showings, which bill these one-reel comedies as "5 De-Luxe Re-issues," advantage is taken of the appearance in the cast supporting Harold Lloyd of "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels.

Geo. Beban to Extend Tour

Begins Tour of Personal Appearances at Newark, N. J., January 2

BEGINNING January 2nd, George Beban will open his tour in connection with "One Man in a Million," his latest film product with which he intends to accompany through its showing throughout the country. The initial opening will take place at the Branford theatre, Newark, which, according to Mr. Fabian, who is erecting the theatre, will be ready to house the Beban attraction by that date.

After playing the Branford a full week, Beban will move to New York and while the theatre has not as yet been definitely settled upon, it is understood that arrangements are well under way with Moe Mark for the Strand and that the local presentation will take place in that theatre.

When Beban left his West Coast studios it was with the intention of remaining on tour for a period of ten weeks. Since that time bookings have been made which will keep the star away from Los Angeles for siz months' time.

"I did not dream of remaining away as long as this," declared Mr. Beban. "But exhibitors in the large cities, hearing of my new plan and, in many instances, speaking with brother exhibitors who had already booked the attraction, wired me not to pass them by. Inasmuch as the main motive of my tour is to bring the artist and public on a more friendly basis and to urge co-operation between the producer and the exhibitor, it would be folly to rush through this tour, hitting but a small portion of the field. And while I shall not, in any manner, receive the financial reimbursement that I would in producing pictures, I feel that adding a few months to my tour will do much more good to me and for my ideals and in carrying my message directly to the motion picture audiences."

The fact that Beban is urging better pictures and in his talk speaks at length on the uplift of the picture industry has brought the tour to the eyes and ears of the executives of many cities in which he will appear. In many cases the star will arrive as guest of the mayor and in some instances arrangements have been made to appoint him mayor for a day, such as was done on First National day in Oakland this year. The rotary clubs have also evinced a desire to support the Beban project as well as have the welfare leagues, the parent-teacher associations and other civic organizations. A special representative is now on tour ahead of Beban and is arranging various meetings.

Research Department Attached to Studio

A comprehensive research department and library that are prepared to furnish all of the wide range of information necessary for the making of more accurate, interesting and beautiful motion pictures has been organized by Mrs. Pauline Payton Forney at the new Paramount studio in Long Island City. Mrs. Forney, with a number of years' experience in the Library of Congress, is considered to be unusually well qualified for this work in which she is assisted by Miss Gertrude Koch, formerly of the Newark Public Library.

The research department is to be an adjunct of the production department where, on a moment's notice, a director may learn everything ranging from how a native woman of Tahiti wears her hair to details of court etiquette at an Embassy ball in Turkey; the kind of tablecloth used in Colonial days or the interior fixings of an Australian ranchman's hut.

Neilan's Diversified Product

Widely Different Pictures Come from Neilan Studio

WITH the completion of "Not a Drum Was Heard," Marshall Neilan's newest independent production, not far off, this young director rounds out a year of diversified product.

Since last January Mr. Neilan has been responsible for five productions that—in theme and general atmosphere—have been as wide apart as the poles. "Not a Drum Was Heard" is a dramatic story of the American West with two cowboys and a beautiful girl of the plains in the leading parts. A goodly amount of pathos is promised throughout the story in incidents dealing with the unhappy life of the young wife of a weakling whose neck is saved from the hangman's rope in the supreme sacrifice of his cowboy pal. Staged in the locale of the story, this production has for its background and general atmosphere a setting unlike any of the previous Neilan releases of the year. The theme of the story itself is different from any of the four former offerings.

Previous to this production came "Dinty," a story with Wesley Barry, the boy star, in the big part. Staged in San Francisco, this is a tale of the metropolis with drama and humor sprinkled throughout in equal parts and a spectacular thrill as the climax.

"Go and Get It," predecessor to "Dinty," was a romance of the newspaper world disclosing one thrilling episode after another. It was a sensational story with sensationalism ever present in each scene.

In "Don't Ever Marry," Mr. Neilan proved himself equally adept at farce. A humorous story throughout, this photoplay portrayed the director's keen sense of comedy values given to the public in his own inimitable manner.

"The River's End," another triumph from the Neilan studio, gave us a romance of the Canadian Northwest, again entirely different from any of the above-mentioned pictures. One of the year's biggest financial successes, this picture has achieved a prominent place in the annals of motion picture production.

Santschi Series Open Jan. 23

"Beyond the Trail" to Be First Released by Pathe

THE announcement of the release date of the first of the Tom Santschi series of Western productions made by Cyrus J. Williams is contained this week by Pathe in a statement revealing that "Beyond the Trail" would introduce the series on January 23.

After months spent in picturesque parts of Western United States and on trails said to have never before been followed by motion picture players, the Santschi company has completed its cycle of intensely dramatic Western productions. "Beyond the Trail" was the first of the number finished and as such was selected to blaze the way for the series.

Robert North Bradbury directed "Beyond the Trail" as he did each succeeding production. His knowledge of picture values, his judgment of wonderful locations, his keen insight into drama, and the tastes of the picture-going public, are fully manifested in the first Santschi release, declares the Pathe statement.

Supporting Santschi in "Beyond the Trail" is a cast of popular players. Edward Hearn, who was prominently cast in the Jack Dempsey serial, "Daredevil Jack," which also was released by Pathe, will be seen as Bud, brother of Clem Martin, played by Santschi. Gertrude Claire portrays the mother, Patricia Palmer the "Girl," and Willys Galles the Indian.

"Everything that could be expected of a Tom Santschi picture is crowded into 'Beyond the Trail,'" declares Pathe in the statement just issued. "Staged in the most beautiful country ever pictured on the screen, this story relates the sacrifices of one brother to save the other from degradation and to defend the name of his mother.

"Stirringly dramatic, 'Beyond the Trail' will give the Santschi series an auspicious start. It offers exhibitors a production of sterling exploitation merit, and a star who for years has been one of the most popular players of the screen.

"Santschi is one of the few screen players who has retained his popularity at flood-tide throughout his entire career. Winning his way into public grace through his wholesome appearance, his good-natured characterizations, and in a large measure through a sturdy pair of arms that have won him many screen encounters, Santschi has always been upheld as a model of manliness. Always he has appeared in the strongest outdoor pictures, and in many respects he is synonymous with big Western productions.

"Arrangements for the release of the Santschi pictures of Pathe were made by Cyrus J. Williams through Arthur S. Kane. Mr. Williams has been in the producing field for nearly three years. He has one of the best equipped studios on the West Coast, and has made several of the biggest 'outdoor' pictures of recent years. Mitchell Lewis appeared in a series of outdoor dramas made under the supervision of Mr. Williams."

C. Alfred Karpen Enters Free-Lance Field

C. Alfred Karpen, formerly with Universal, Realart and Pathe, has entered the free lance field as an expert film editor and title writer. While with Pathe, Karpen prepared many foreign productions for the American market. Aside from his extensive studio and laboratory experience, he has had a broad training in the advertising and publicity field as well.

Vitagraph's Outlook for 1921

Albert E. Smith Predicts Biggest Year Ever

ALTHOUGH Vitagraph, through its increased facilities, has enjoyed the most successful year of its career and reached its highest point in both the quantity and quality of its productions, it announces that it proposes to permit no let-up in its activities during the coming year. Albert E. Smith, its president, who is in New York on a brief business trip from the West Coast studios, where he is speeding up Vitagraph productions during the winter months, said upon his arrival this week, that not only would the twelve regular companies now busy on Vitagraph feature productions, comedies, chapter-plays and special productions with all-star specially engaged casts be kept intact and urged to even greater efforts, but that additional special companies would be formed to increase the output of special productions.

During the past year four of these special productions were completed. The first, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," by James Oliver Curwood, and directed by David Smith, met with big success, and the succeeding special productions were equally popular. They were the first Tom Terriss Vitagraph production, "Trumpet Island," based on the story by Gouverneur Morris, and another Tom Terriss production, "Dead Men Tell No Tales," by E. W. Hornung, which is now being shown in the first run theatres. "Black Beauty," adapted by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester from the story by Anna Sewell, with Jean Paige in the stellar role, has just been completed at the West Coast studio under the direction of David Smith. It will have its premier early in the new year. A third Tom Terriss production, "The Heart of Maryland," with Catherine Calvert in the role created on the stage by Mrs. Leslie Carter, is now nearing completion. This will be followed by another stage success in which two prominent screen actors will appear as co-stars. The new year will also see active work on "The Son Wallingford," by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester. While Mr. Chester is the author of the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, his new story, which also will be published in novel form, is new in theme, introducing new characters, but retaining the notorious J. Rufus Wallingford and his equally famous partner Blackie Daw.

Early in the new year five of Vitagraph stars will have completed their first offerings of the new year. These will be Alice Joyce in "Her Lord and Master;" Corinne Griffith, in "It Isn't Being Done This Season;" Alice Calhoun, Vitagraph's newest star, in her first production, "Princess Jones;" Earle Williams in "Diamonds Adrift," and Antonio Moreno in "Three Sevens," his first feature production.

Larry Semon and Jimmie Aubrey will be particularly active during 1921. Both are now busily engaged on the preliminary work on new comedies which will be begun immediately after Christmas holidays.

Vitagraph's two serial companies, headed by William Duncan and Joe Ryan, respectively, are working under pressure at the West Coast studio keeping up with the demand for their pictures. Mr. Duncan, with Edith Johnson as co-star, is more than half through with "Fighting Fate," and Mr. Ryan in his first production as an individual star, is well into "The Purple Riders." In order that there may be no delay in their serial productions during the coming year, Mr. Smith, who writes the chapter-plays in collaboration with other authors, already has their new vehicles well under way.

The year 1921, Mr. Smith says, will be a banner one for Vitagraph.

Film Novelty Promised

A new era in art is about to be ushered in. Philip Van Loan is authority for the statement that he is at present engaged upon a vehicle which when completed should prove to be a big step forward in the motion picture industry.

It is generally conceded that no film attraction would be well received by an audience were there no musical accompaniment. Mr. Van Loan contends that as music is so essential to the proper presentation of even the greatest film spectacles, it is but fitting ha music should not be relegated to second place, but should be considered not only as of equal importance as the film but actually part and parcel of same. With this in view Mr. Van Loan promises to give, when completed, a visualization of music so that an audience may really see what they hear and hear what they see. Incidentally, Mr. Van Loan promises another distinct novelty in that the film presentation will not be interrupted by titles.

Will Exploit "The Devil"

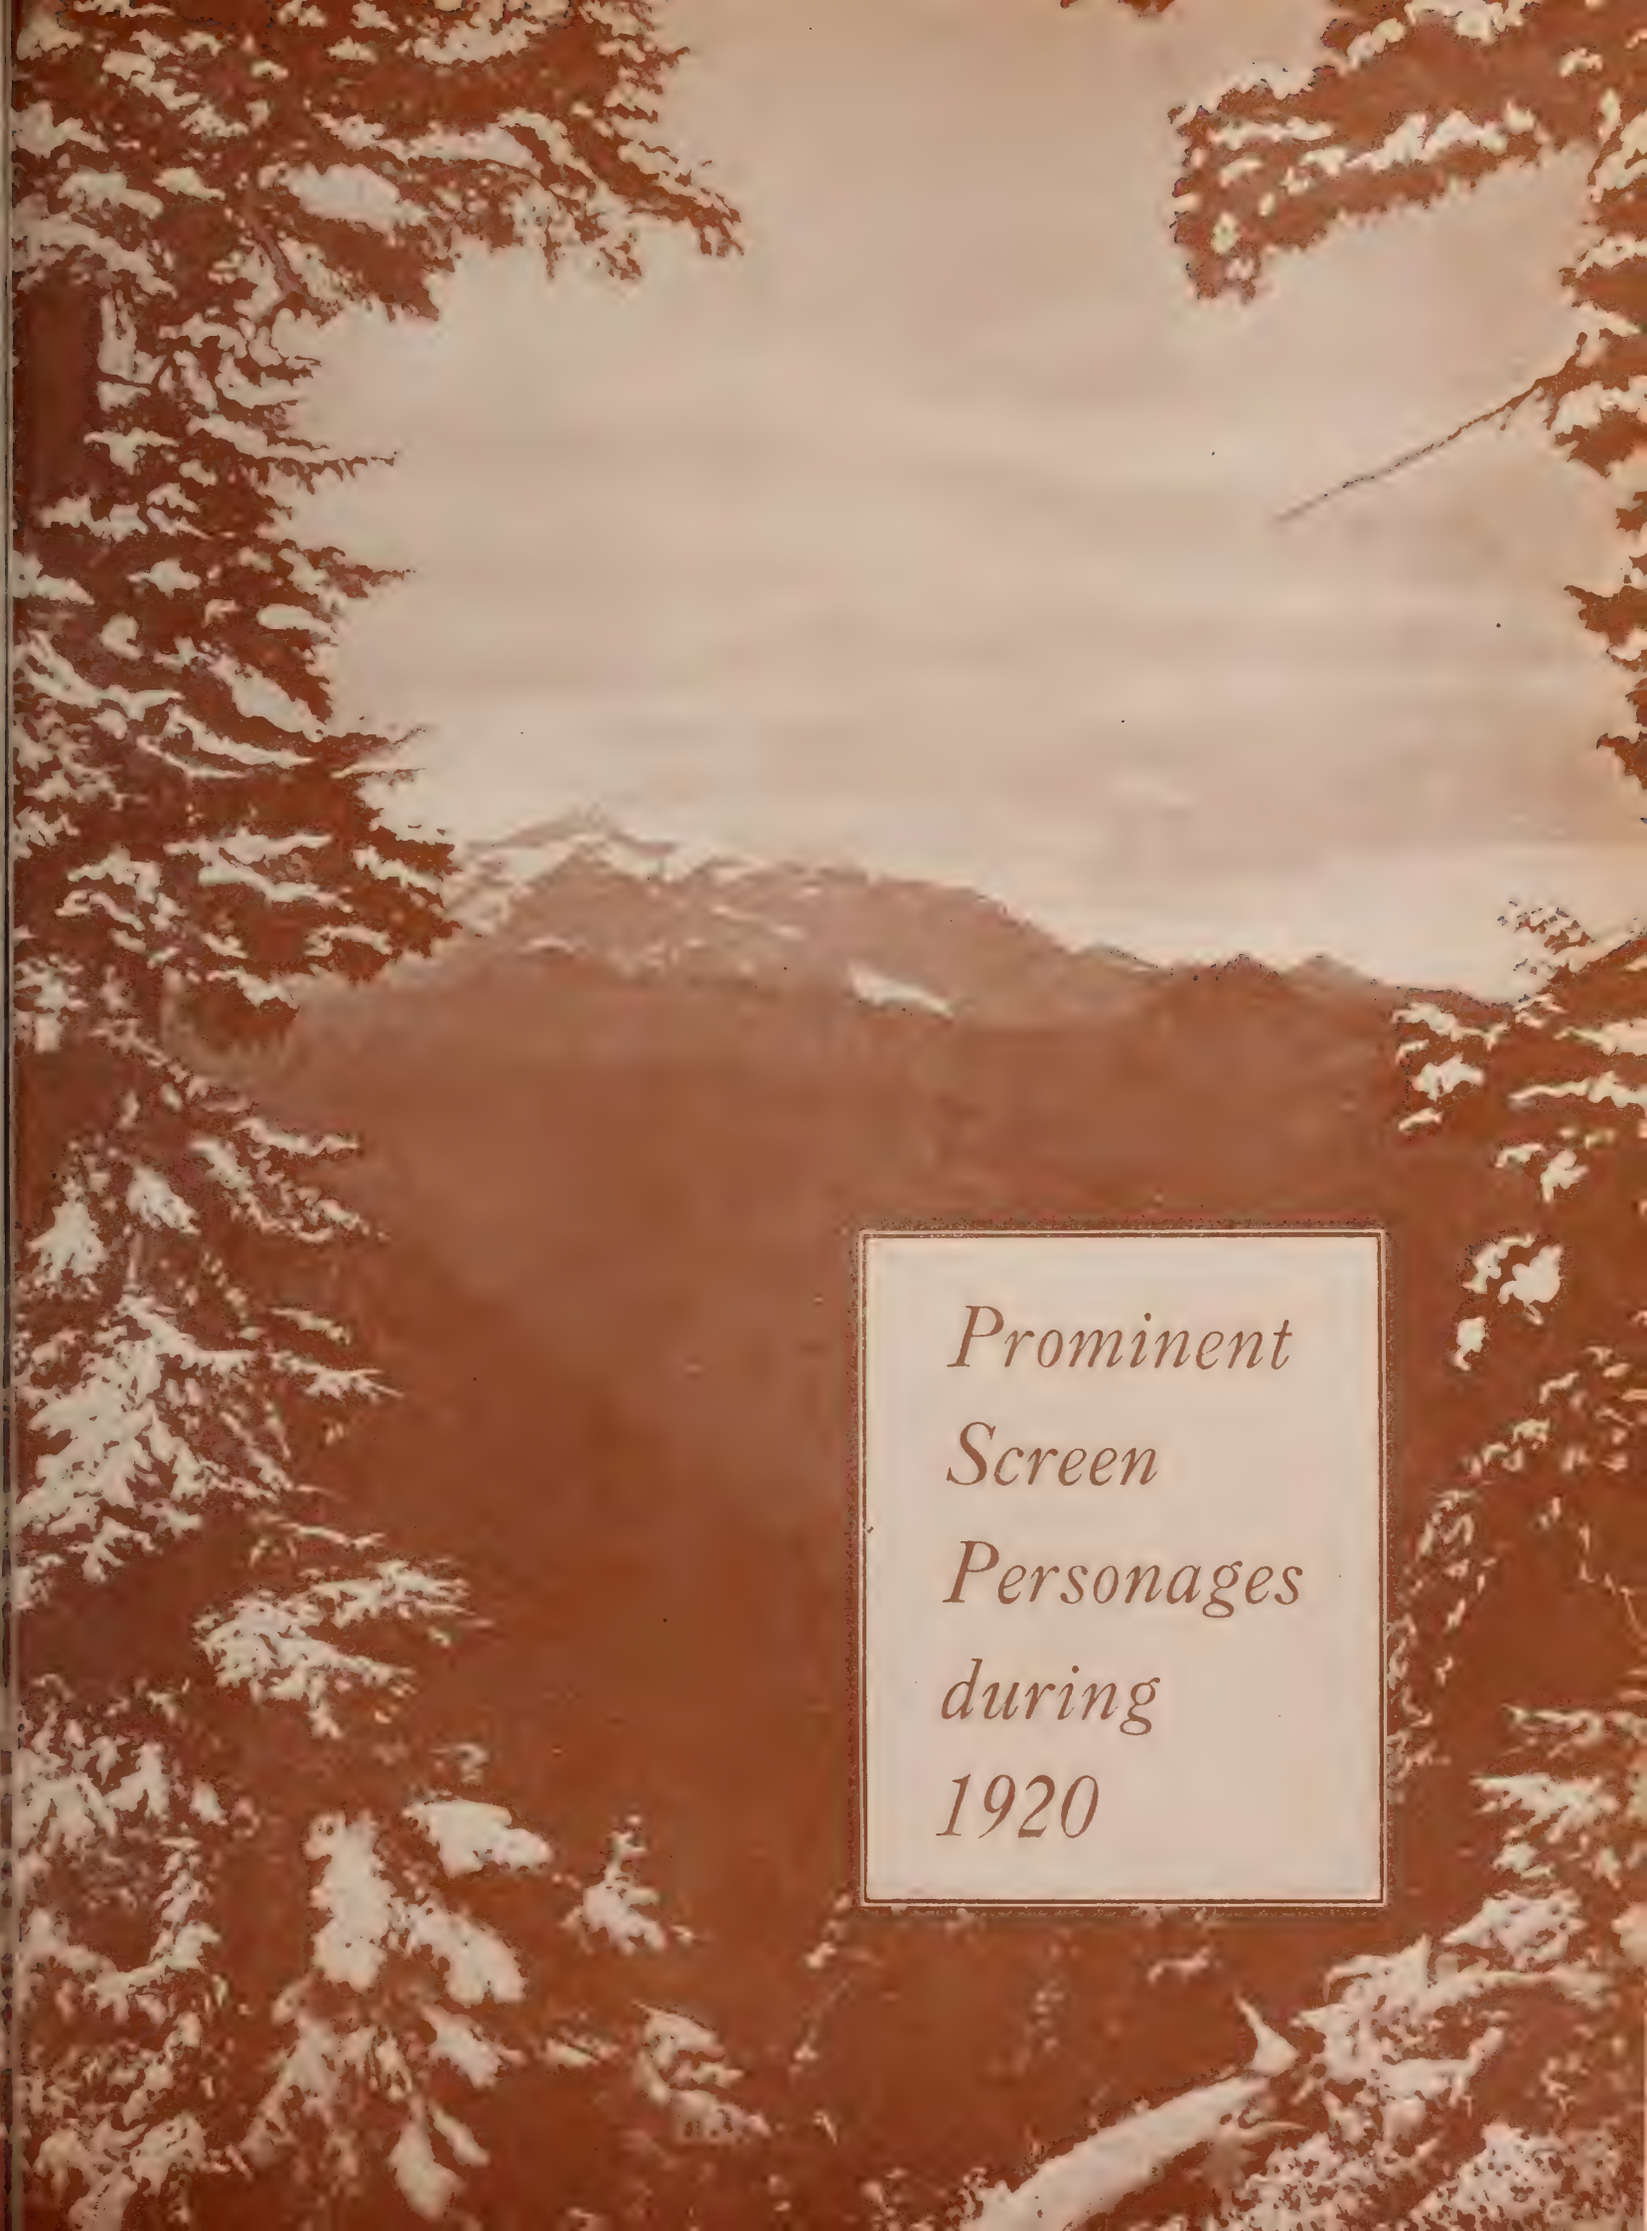
Pathe Announces "Most Sensational" Campaign Seen in New York

PLANS for probably the most sensational exploitation any motion picture has ever been accorded in New York or any other city, have been made for George Arliss's screen debut in "The Devil," another Associated Exhibitors' special, distributed through Pathe, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters.

While announcement of the theatre will be withheld until all details have been completed, one of the foremost of Broadway's screen palaces will stage "The Devil" soon after the New Year, and will give it one of the most remarkable presentations in motion picture annals, states Pathe.

Every effort will be made, it is declared, to make the motion picture version of Franz Molnar's wonderful play, more sensational than was its stage presentation here about a decade ago, when two companies played "The Devil" on Broadway at the same time. Incidentally, George Arliss starred in one, and received the unanimous indorsement of the Metropolitan critics.

Release date for "The Devil" has not been definitely determined upon by Associated Exhibitors and Pathe, but should be within the next week.



A Merry Christmas to All MOTION PICTURE NEWS

From The New York Globe

Dead Men's Tales.

"Dead Men Tell No Tales," the cryptic advertisement which has decorated the recent dailies in huge black splashes, is now revealed as a harmless, necessary movie at the Broadway this week. This will be a relief to those nervous souls who were startled by its sinister implication under pastry ads or patent medicine announcements. Our own Globe Trotter assures us that he even saw the notice of an excellent physician with the traditional "office hours from 11 to 2 and by appointment," and under it the laconic prophesy "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

But the picture is here and all is forgiven because it is an excellent example of a mystery melodrama of pirates and bottles of rum and beautiful Spanish women rescued at least six times for every reel. Most of the burden of these respues fall on Percy Marmount, as the dauntless hero. Catherine Calvert makes a vivid and flashing senorita, who is not too proud to be saved. The film is combined with the usual Broadway vaudeville bill, although it is quite strong enough to carry the programme alone.

Robert G. Vignola

BEFORE reaching young manhood, while but a boy in his teens, Robert G. Vignola, director of Robert G. Vignola productions for Cosmopolitan (Paramount-Artcraft), determined in his young mind to become an actor. Everything was done to dissuade him but to no avail. In desperation, finally, his father bargained with the son whom he had imported from Italy, at the age of three, and deposited in Albany, New York, where it was hoped and expected that said son would grow into a practical young man, adopt some profession or trade and become a "home-town fixture."

Without confidence in his son's ability to act—and devoid of any sympathy for his aspirations, the elder Signor Vignola agreed to furnish transportation to New York and return, with a meager allowance for living, meantime, but with the proviso that either "Bob" was to return, giving up all thought and reference to his wild "aspirazioni," or when the money gave out, rely solely upon himself and his beloved "art" for necessities of life.

At least it was a chance. Robert accepted, left for New York and did not return unto Albany until he was to appear in a play "at the opera house" the reward of a persistent son of doubting parents.

It did not impress the family ensemble nearly as much as it would impress those interested in theatrical activities that Mr. Vignola had the distinction of making his first appearance on the stage with two of the world's most-famed dramatic factors, Eleanor Robson and the late Kyrle Bellew, in "Romeo and Juliet." For the following seven years he played leading parts, and became widely and favorably known for his characterizations. One of his favorite assignments was to impersonate an old man, when he was but a boy himself. It has always been his preference to do the "unusual," and now, a director of acknowledged merit, he continues with "the unusual" for that is the least one may say about his photoplays. There is little room for adverse criticism, as reviews of his works will verify.

Having mastered his attempt to become a well-known and competent actor, Mr. Vignola followed the beckoning hand which led to direction of the motion picture. His first seven pictures were for Kalem Film Corporation, where he had started as an actor. Following these, he engaged upon a trip to Europe and spent many months abroad and as a result he has not only visited but played in nearly every country in Europe.

Some of the stars who have been directed before the camera by Robert G. Vignola are Constance Talmadge, Ethel Clayton, Tom and Owen Moore, Pauline Frederick, Jack Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Hazel Dawn, Alice Brady, Alice Joyce, Clara Kimball Young, Vivian Martin, Louise Huff, Alma Rubens and many players of noteworthy ability.

In the past year Cosmopolitan have released "The World and His Wife," one of the greatest successes of the year, in which Miss Rubens, Gaston Glass, Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordova and others were brought to the zenith of their talents. Ready for distribution are "Passionate Pilgrims," with a cast of unusual strength, "The Manifestations of Henry Ort," and under production "Redemption Cove," all stories which were placed, with utmost confidence in the hands of a director sure to make the best of good material.

"The World and His Wife," however, brought Robert G. Vignola altogether into his own. Greatly admired by all who come within the range of his cheerful, kindly and altogether dependable direction, Robert G. Vignola has won the admiration of the industry.

George Archainbaud

FOREMOST among earlier productions directed by George Archainbaud rank: "As Man Made Her," "The Brand of Satan," "A Maid of Belgium," "The Cross Bearer," "The Awakening," "The Stormy Petrel," "The Love Cheat," "A Damsel in Distress," and "Little Mother Hubbard."

His recent pictures include Elaine Hammerstein in "The Point of View," "The Pleasure Seekers" and Eugene O'Brien in "The Wonderful Chance," which won unanimous praise from the critics everywhere.

An angle on Mr. Archainbaud's splendid directorial ability is supplied with much pertinence in Wid's review of "The Wonderful Chance." In speaking of the star, Eugene O'Brien, Mr. Archainbaud's direction is paid a fitting tribute: "'The Wonderful Chance,' however, appears to be by all odds the best starring picture that Eugene O'Brien has had. Many elements enter into its success, the most prominent of which are the story, and the skilful direction. Archainbaud's direction has not only emphasized the high lights of the plot to a fine degree but has also been responsible to a great sense of the fine appearance made by the star. The double exposure is great—nothing has been seen like it before."

In addition to Wid's enthusiastic praise of Mr. Archainbaud's directorial skill, Motion Picture News attracted attention to the excellent points throughout the picture and said, among other things, "The picture is well directed and produced."

George Archainbaud was born in Paris, France, and it was there that he received his rudimentary education. His motion picture career started when he became an assistant director to the French master artist, Emile Chautard, then associated with the Eclaire Film Company of Paris. Arrived in America, there followed directorial engagements for the aspiring young Frenchman, with the Beacon Film Company, the American Cinema Corporation and Pathe. William A. Brady gave Mr. Archainbaud his first big opportunity to direct when he engaged young George to make "Man Made Her," starring Gail Kane.

Mr. Archainbaud is a man who devotes his entire energies and continued efforts to the art of the motion picture. Results emphasize his respect for detail and the injection of a vitally human element. His is possessed of a keenly observant mind—one that retains what it observes, and is registered through the channel of those fortunate to fall under his directorial skill.

The past year Mr. Archainbaud has directed for the Selznick Pictures Corporation and will continue his work indefinitely. His outlook upon the coming year is characteristically optimistic. He believes in making better pictures, as better and wider experience in choosing stories suitable for the screen, evolve. "Let us say less about better pictures and do more about it," is Mr. Archainbaud's recommendation. "My ambition is to be able to choose from stories written expressly for the screen, which can be dramatized with greater effectiveness than attempting to mould material which was not originally designed for the photoplay into celluloid entertainment."

To know George Archainbaud and the seriousness of his purpose is to visualize another year of achievement, in 1921, for this young French artist.

Chet Withey

CHET WITHEY, one of America's most distinguished directors of the motion picture, served a long and faithful apprenticeship as an actor and scenario writer and has studied every branch of his art with a completeness that has brought its ultimate reward—recognition as a director of unquestioned ability. In summing up his qualifications, a well-informed man recently said:

"Withey, unquestionably, has many things in his favor—but the one which stands out like a beacon light is his braininess. He knows the camera, as well as the technical side from A to Z. He knows stories and continuities. He knows stars. He knows "types"—ideas that can be used to advantage in pictures, the valuation of lighting effects. He knows scenic arrangements and locales. Much of this comes from study and direct association with things, big and little, that go to make a picture worth while."

In speaking of his accomplishments, Mr. Withey likens the progress of the motion picture with that of the development of the art of portraiture.

"In the early days" declares Mr. Withey, "painters frequently gave undue prominence to minute and unessential detail. Their backgrounds were overcrowded and resulted in a sense of confusion, making it difficult for the observer to focus his attention upon the central figure or group. But, when we stop to recall that drawing and painting were first used as a means of story telling, it is easy to understand this lack of artistic discrimination with its chaotic results. Painting and illustrating made rapid strides in those days, and it was not long before men arose to preach the gospel of simplicity. Elaborate landscape and unnecessary details were eliminated and instead of every detail being shown as heretofore, the artist was content to leave something to the spectator's imagination. I believe that motion picture directors and cameramen have much to learn from the lessons taught by the history of the development of art and at last we are beginning to take heed. Colorless characters that make no appeal to the imagination shall disappear from the screen as they have disappeared from the canvas. The public is already beginning to demand screen characters that are true to life and in the future, I believe that the demand for something better and more artistic in the way of photoplay productions, will increase. I, for one, am willing to devote my every effort toward the continuous betterment of the screen."

As a result of Mr. Withey's high ideals and painstaking endeavors, he has been called upon to direct such well-known stars as Norma Talmadge, Madge Kennedy, Billie Burke, John Barrymore, Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, Mae Marsh, the late Bobby Harron, Dorothy Gish, and Constance Talmadge.

The screen adaptation of Douglas Murry's play "The Man from Toronto," starring Constance Talmadge is one of two in which Chet Withey will direct the popular young star. The second "A Butterfly in Harness" is predicted as a worthy follower, being written especially for Miss Talmadge by Frederick and Fannie Hatton.

A few of the titles of pictures which Mr. Withey has directed from time to time, might serve to give some idea of the versatility which he has acquiired as a result of his early training. Among his many successful photoplays are "The Hun Within," "The Old Folks at Home," featuring Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, "On the Quiet," with John Barrymore, "She Loves and Lies" and "The New Moon," in which Norma Talmadge was starred. "Romance," in which Doris Keene played the leading role, will be remembered as the poetical picture, hailed as one of the artistic accomplishments of 1920.

Jerome Storm

IT is a series of notable achievements covering the past three years which led to Jerome Storm's recognition this year as one of the small group of star directors.

After directing Charles Ray in fourteen pictures, which established the star as a leader in popularity, and four of Enid Bennet's best box-office attractions, Mr. Storm's success had culmination this year in "Peaceful Valley."

"It is worthy of Griffith," commented Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune. "In this world where nothing is perfect one hates to say that the picture is perfect, but at least we could see no flaw in it. First, we wish to give credit to Jerome Storm. . . ."

"A sure winner and no mistakes," was the comment from Wid's. "Jerome Storm's faculty of doing the right thing at the right time makes 'Peaceful Vally' come about as close to perfection as anybody could want."

"The rich atmosphere, the quaint sketching of the star . . . and the admirable direction of Jerome Storm, who has an uncanny knack of making everything he touches real . . . these provide the values of 'Peaceful Valley,'" declared Lawrence Reid in the Motion Picture News. "Mr. Storm's backgrounds are fairly eloquent. One can almost catch the fragrant odors of the country."

"Storm is well qualified to be stamped as one of our best film directors through his work in this picture alone," said the Dramatic Mirror.

These are a few of the estimations of the last picture created by Mr. Storm before he assumed the direction of Lillian Gish in her first stellar venture since leaving D. W. Griffith's administration. That he is the one director best qualified to follow Mr. Griffith in guiding Lillian Gish along her triumphant way is indicated by the Tribune's declaration that the Storm masterpiece of 1921 is worthy of Griffith himself.

The Lillian Gish picture will be known as a Jerome Storm production and will bear the trade-mark of "Storm Pictures."

Although Mr. Storm declares he has no definite plans formulated subseuent to the completion of this picture, it has been authoritatively reported that he will institute work on the first of the "Storm pictures." He expects to leave for California some time in February or March to consummate his studio arrangements.

"The human picture with a theme for thought," is the Storm creed. Plays of an inspirational note fitted into a background vibrant with democratic life are the type which he seeks for his future work.

Mr. Storm has a wealth of ideas obtained from his varied experiences as an actor and director of stage productions for seven years, during which he covered virtually every town of the United States. For three years he was an actor in the Ince studio organization. Because of his fund of knowledge concerning all phases of picture production, he was elected by Thomas H. Ince to direct Enid Bennet. After making four pictures with that star, he became director for Charles Ray. "The Girl Dodger," "The Egg-Crate Wallop," "The Busher," "Paris Green" and "Peaceful Valley" are a few of the record-makers which resulted in that star's rise.

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL STARS

Hope Hampton

HOPE HAMPTON is one of the screen's most recent and most beautiful captures. Her latest pictures include "The Modern Salome," directed by Leonce Perret, "The Bait," a Maurice Tourneur Production, released only recently through Famous Players-Lasky, and "The Power of Love."

Hope Hampton hails from Dallas, Texas. She was educated at the Sophie Newcomb School in New Orleans, La. The furtherest thought from young Hope's mind was to embark into the "movies." So way down in Dallas lived the star and her latent talents.

And then, to bring Miss Hampton to the attention of producers, her jump from obscurity to fame is best indicated by the use of the three dots: A picture in a paper . . . instantaneous recognition . . . the Aladdin of sudden fame rubbed his highly polished lamp . . . and behold, the world is now possessed of what, heretofore, only the Lone Star State could boast.

A demand that refused to be quelled by "nos" brought eager-eyed Hope to New York. Producers became interested in her, in her beauty which was to everyone apparent, in her ability which was potential. She was advised to go to a Dramatic School. Training in every profession is wise; why except the theatrical? So decided Miss Hampton.

For six months she studied with unswerving seriousness at the Sargent School. At the expiration of that time she was urged to go on the Screen and there obtain, if nothing more, the apprenticeship of hard, practical experience.

This she did, after weighing the pros and cons with her usual care and thought.

Leonce Perret engaged her for "A Modern Salome." It was a difficult role, one to daunt even an actress wise in the ways of studio activities. But Miss Hampton went merrily on. Mr. Perret was filled with admiration: "Vraiment," he exclaimed, "she is mar-vell-ous!"

Hope saw the picture, scrutinized herself, and said, with a firm nod of her head: "I've got to do better than that!" Regardless of this caustic criticism, the picture was successful, Miss Hampton scoring a hit with the public.

But this sternness of judgment is characteristic of Miss Hampton. The result to the public is an interesting improvement in every picture the youthful star comes out in.

Miss Hampton's next appearance was in a Maurice Tourneur Production, "The Bait," by Sidney Toler, released through Famous Players-Lasky. This picture, too, is expected to be another box-office knockout.

Prior to working in this production, Miss Hampton decided to broaden her knowledge and see something of the world. She went to Monte Carlo, consorting there with Lily Langtry, known in America as "The Jersey Lily," and with Fannie Ward. It was pleasant to tour Italy and other places of interest and see something of the life of other peoples. This kind of experience is always of value in picture work, which knows no boundary.

After "The Bait," Miss Hampton went almost immediately into another production, "The Power of Love," directed by Jack Gilbert, formerly assistant to Maurice Tourneur. And in this production Miss Hampton feels, for the first time, that she has begun to know herself; to commandeer the histrionic powers that are hers.

Hope Hampton should be a shining light in the film firmament in the year 1921.

Madlaine Traverse

FOR some months past, the admirers of Madlaine Traverse have been mourning the absence of this splendid actress from the screen. Consequently it will be gratifying to learn that during 1921, Miss Traverse is to appear in a series of elaborate special productions, produced by her own company.

The first of these will be based on "The Ivory Disc," by the well known British novelist, Percy Brebner. This is a psychological drama of society which created a decided stir in England last season, where the book first appeared.

As a vehicle for Miss Traverse, the story offers the widest range for the display of those dramatic and emotional powers of expression which have brought her such a host of admirers.

This new Madlaine Traverse Production will afford the star, who ranks with the best dressed women on the screen, an opportunity to display the ultimate in artistic and modish dress as expressed in the newest Parisian creations which the star has ordered especially for this production—customs tax and all.

For several years Miss Traverse has been one of the best known emotional stars on both stage and screen.

She is a Boston girl, educated in Europe. At the age of twelve, Madlaine made her debut on the stage, appearing first in vaudeville, then in stock and on the road. Even at this early period in her career, there was a dramatic tensity and a subtlety about Miss Traverse's acting that created favorable comment among the critics and caused theatrical circles to "sit up and take notice."

Her initiation into motion picture production was in an Artcraft picture, entitled "The Poor Little Rich Girl" and with Ivan in "The Sins of Ambition."

William Fox was attracted by Miss Traverse's acting. The result was a series of Fox pictures, chief among which are "The Caillaux Case," "The Danger Zone," "The Love That Dares," "Gambling in Souls," "The Splendid Sin," "The Snares of Paris," "Lost Money," "The Hell Ship," "What Would You Do?" and others.

Last spring, when Miss Traverse terminated her contract with Fox, she had two definite ideas in view. The first was to seek a much needed rest and vacation, something which she had not enjoyed during two years of practically continuous work, and the second, to complete her plans for the making of Madlaine Traverse Photoplays on a suitable scale.

Hereafter Miss Traverse will be seen only in big attractions of a type best suited to her individual dramatic talents and of a quality which will meet the most exacting demands of her ever widening circle of admirers.

At least four Madlaine Traverse Photoplays will be produced during the 1921 season; the first of which will be "The Ivory Disc," probably will be retitled in the picture version. These super productions will be made by Trinity Productions, Inc., by special arrangements with the star.

It is needless to add that Miss Traverse's first screen offerinnging under her new arrangement will be awaited with the keenest anticipation by photoplay-goers both here and abroad.

Charles E. Whittaker

THERE are a great many things that might be said of pertinent interest regarding Charles E. Whittaker, he who with acknowledged skill prepares many stories we eventually see portrayed upon the screen. The way, however, to best perspective upon Mr. Whittaker's worthy activities is to quote him, for his own entertaining way of telling a story is beyond the pen of the ordinary mortal.

"Who am I," questions the wizard of the pen, "that in this season of peace and good will I shall talk of my doings? Let us be original, doing what nobody has ever yet done in the picture industry—let us 'pan' somebody for a change.

"Artistically the outstanding high lights of the year were the last reel of 'Way Down East,' the uncourageous exploitation of 'Earthbound,' 'Humoresque,' and 'Over the Hill'; Otis Skinner in 'Kismet' and the threat of Famous to give us better pictures. Of these factors of 1920, the last is most vital and significant. If it will result in weeding out a lot of incompetents, with which every department of the industry is cluttered up, sending them back to the farm and the shoe stores, Famous will have earned a crown of impenetrable glory. Concerning the five great pictures I have mentioned, I will fire a handsome present to any exhibitor who honestly and offhand will name the scenario writer responsible for the script of all five!"

One of the unanswerable questions Mr. Whittaker is fond of putting is:

"Why does every exhibitor say that pictures are all too long and then refuse to pay good, fat rentals to those ambitious enough to make serious and wonderful two reelers and three reel offerings?. If you pay a hundred dollars a night for a five-reel feature, would you pay sixty for a three-reeler? Reply: 'Not unless it were a "Shoulder Arms."'

"We are told that the industry is facing a crisis. Thank Heaven! It is always facing a crisis. This gives it nervous strength, which is the desired condition of the beautiful and strong, like a prize fighter's or Rockefeller's check book.

"To indulge in prophecy is futile; but so far as 1921 is concerned, it seems to me evident that we must resist manfully both Blue Laws and Blue Lagoon pictures. We shall have a wave, an epidemic of desert island 'stuff,' because desert islands are jolly places where there are no censors, no Blue Laws, no young ladies playing the Meditation from Thais; no re-issues and no bad carbons. Apart from this, Signor Ponzi, of Boston, will tell us that the 'steal business' is in its infancy; but the exhibitor knows that there is one variety of the 'steal business' that is old enough to have teeth and wear horn-rimmed glasses."

There are many adaptations and original screen plays, for which Charles E. Whittaker is responsible, among them (his first attempt) "The Whip," followed by "The Pride of the Clan," for Mary Pickford; "Arms and The Girl" for Billie Burke; "Here Comes the Bride" for John Barrymore; "Her Final Reckoning" for Pauline Frederick; "The Claw" and "Eyes of Youth" for Clara Kimball Young; "Partners of the Night" (Eminent Authors, Inc.), "Mothers of Men," Edward Jose; and for Maurice Tourneur "The White Heather," "The Life Line," and "The Broken Butterfly." The mention of "La Tosca," "Resurrection," "Fedora" and "The House of Glass" awaken fond memories of screen plays of yesterday, while the triumphant presentation of "Kismet," one of the most difficult adaptations ever made, was the acknowledged masterpiece of Mr. Whittaker.

Denison Clift

DENISON CLIFT, dramatist and director, well known for his stories for William S. Hart, Sessue Hayakawa, Henry B. Walthall, and other stars, is at present in London completing a super feature of Guy de Maupaussant's story of "The Diamond Necklace," for Ideal Films, Ltd.

Mr. Clift is a San Franciscan. He was educated at Stanford University. Then followed a career as a short story writer, novelist, and playwright. Scanning the "country" for more "prizes" to win, Mr. Clift decided to turn his skilled hand and creative mind to writing originals for the screen.

Accordingly, he began to write down ideas that had been clamoring for paper and typewriter for many a day. The result is a series of successful pictures of unusual rank. His important adaptations include "Wolves of the Rail," for William S. Hart; "The Midnight Patrol," Ince-Select special; "Wedlock" for Louise Glaum; "And a Still Small Voice," for Henry B. Walthall; "His Birthright," for Sessue Hayakawa. The following are original stories and continuities for Madlaine Traverse; "Rose of the West," "The Snares of Paris," "Lost Money," "The Hell Ship, and "What Would You Do?" In rapid succession came original stories for Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix, Peggy Hyland, and others.

It is not generally known, but at one time Mr. Clift was a feature writer at the Lasky, Ince, and Paralta studios. What is known, however, is his association with the Fox company as scenario editor of the West Coast Studios.

Last June, Mr. Clift severed his connection with the Fox company, at least temporarily, in order to go abroad, primarily to study production methods on the other side.

So in June, 1920, Mr. Clift left Los Angeles, thence to New York, and sailed a short time later. Not only has he been studying production activities abroad, but Mr. Clift has gained a first hand insight into the national customs and temperaments of the people.

He has visited France, Italy, Spain, Morocco, Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, and Great Britain. While in these countries, Mr. Clift studied in great detail the masterpieces of Art in the galleries of the larger cities—Paris, Rome, London, and Madrid.

In London, Mr. Clift accepted an offer to make a picture in a British studio. That the offer must have been an unusual one goes without saying, since Mr. Clift went abroad with intent to study and absorb life in all its complexities on the other side, not to work so "concretely."

He was engaged to direct the world famous, "Diamond Necklace," one of the greatest short stories ever written by that master of the art, Guy de Maupaussant.

The cast for this production is headed by Milton Bosmer and Jessie Winter, both ranking among the elite of English artists.

Mr. Clift prepared his own continuity. Indeed, a skillful technic would be called into being to adapt as it schould be adapted a story so subtle in its psychology and human delineation of character and the way circumstances makes puppets of "us mortals."

Speaking of British production, Mr. Clift says:

"While far behind us in technical equipment, there is a strong sense of ideals in British studios, and English pictures are improving rapidly. Since the close of the War, the work has received a strong impetus.

Gaston Glass

A YEAR AGO, the name Gaston Glass, identified a slender French youth who needed a job. Now it recalls "Humoresque," "The World and His Wife," and "Corporal Cameron of the Royal Mounted."

Gaston Glass was born in Paris in 1895 and educated there. He was a protege of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt and for five years played with Sarah, the divine, in both France and in the United States. Then began his screen career in Paris with Pathe Freres and Gaumont.

The World War brought his career to an abrupt intermismission, for Glass enlisted in the French aviation branch of the Army and saw continuous service. Here, too, his career was halted by severe wounds.

The boy came to America to recuperate, and while in New York attracted the attention of no less an authority than John Emerson. Glass was offered a small part in one of Mr. Emerson's productions, which was accepted with alacrity. It was his chance; he made good.

In rapid succession there followed numerous productions for Famous Players and other companies. He was attracting attention. He was considered the ideal type for the grown up son of poor, Russian Jewish parents, and accordingly, was cast for this role in "Humoresque." Previous to "Humoresque," Glass was "just a juvenile." But in this Cosmopolitan production, one of the season's four greatest pictures, he made his first big impression. His finished, delightful work as the gifted violinist has been subject of favorable comment throughout the United States and Canada.

Immediately after completing work in this production, he was engaged to portray the role of the dreamy poet in "The World and His Wife." This character was another "scalp" to Glass' rapidly increasing captures. No longer were producers asking "Who is Gaston Glass?" He had commanded a "name."

Following the release of "Humoresque" and "The World and His Wife" to the general exhibitor, the Glass boom reached a deafening pitch. There came many flattering offers from our foremost producers, material indication enough of his rapid rise to the near-top in picture circles.

He accepted that contract, however, which seemed the more desirable from the standpoint of proving that appeal does not depend upon personal appearance altogether, but upon flesh and blood ability to live a role.

It was for this reason that he decided to accept the offer of the title role in the first of the Ralph Connor stories to be filmed, "The Foreigner." It is the role of the youth in this picture of the great Northwest, delineated as only Ralph Connor can, and portrayed as only Gaston Glass can, that will to a great extent put "The Foreigner" across in a big, virile sort of way. Glass does not wear evening dress, nor the everyday apparel of easterners. He appears in the rough and serviceable outfit of a Russian peasant.

His success, evidenced by his re-engagement for another Connor picture, "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," is based upon his efforts in the first one. His salary has soared again, for the contract includes not only a clause to "feature" the young Frenchman but the aforementioned increase in salary.

Upon Gaston Glass' return to New York, about the end of December, 1920, it would seem that he will have made the best of the months passed into the abyss of Time and may anticipate even more fully another Happy and Successful New Year—the wish of his many and staunch friends both in and out of the industry.

Charles Hutchinson

HE is called the "King of Stuntmen." In these hectic days of dazzling deeds "King" is an aplomb of more than far-reaching merit.

Charles Hutchinson's strength, his undaunted nerve coupled with his ambition have led him to do many things that make the heart of the average person start racing with thunderous loudness and lightning rapidity.

Hutchinson was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and educated at the Western University. The "Smoky City" could not keep Hutchinson long; his ambition demanded more scope.

He went on the stage and played in several Broadway successes and in vaudeville. For eight years he was occupied with stage life. Then came his entrance into the field of the cinema.

He began with the Triumph Company, then went with Crystal, with Brenon, Solax, Vitagraph, and lastly with Pathé, with which company he is now "serialing" in great style.

Hutchinson is an excellent type. In addition to a robust personality, he is five feet ten and weighs about one hundred and sixty pounds, dark complexion, dark hair and dark eyes that are wont to sparkle and brim over with his excitement and interest in a special stunt.

He is ambitious and has always been so. It was his ambition that caused him to seek laurels as a leading man on the speaking stage, where he was in vaudeville as a head-liner for three years. For two years he was leading man for Frances Starr and Laura Hope Crews. For several years he was with the Murray Hill Stock Company, where his favorite roles were played in "Way Down East" and "The Bonnie Brier Bush."

His career before the camera has been a notable one, for it secured for him the name of "King of Stunt-men." This application was given him during the making of "The Great Gamble," a serial production in fifteen chapters. So well was it received by the trade, that Hutchinson was immediately re-engaged for additional serials. "The Double Adventure" was the second one taken up and it proved to be more than the title indicated, for in every episode there was action of a very adventurous nature. Scenes were laid in New York, South America, Mexico, and Southern California. The script provided every conceivable kind of work for Mr. Hutchinson.

Upon completion of the second serial Pathé had story and script ready for the third, which is titled "The Fortieth Door," and production work was started some months ago. It was halted during the first episode because of painful injuries sustained by the star, Mr. Hutchinson. This was due to defective appliances, which resulted in Hutchinson falling fifteen feet and suffering a dislocated elbow upward and backward of one arm and dislocation of wrist of the other arm. For several months it was necessary for him to give up his work. He is now back before the lens and will have his third serial ready for release at the specified time.

Mr. Hutchinson can attribute his success in cinema-land to his ability as an actor. In this respect he is considered one of the finished leading men of the screen, being an adept in the performance of "stunts" as the result of his athletic training which places him in a niche not occupied by other leading men who work before the camera.

Earle Williams

THE past year Earle Williams has starred in stories selected by him and officers of the Vitagraph Company from the works of the greatest authors of today, and a glance over the list of productions made, a number of which have been released, is like reviewing a list of the best sellers.

The first to be made was Winchell Smith's "The Fortune Hunter," and after this in the following order came "Captain Swift," by C. Haddon Chambers, the noted English novelist; "The Master Stroke," by Van Rensselaer Dey; "The Purple Cipher," by Will F. Jenkins; "The Romance Promoters," by L. W. Robbins, and the last to be completed was "Diamonds Adrift," by Frederick J. Jackson.

The greatest care is taken in the selection of stories for Mr. Williams by the Vitagraph Company, as is pointed out by the fact that at the time of this writing he has with the scenario organization been going over original screen stories and novels for four weeks in the hope of finding the one that has the pleasing combination of romance, light comedy, and drama, in which class Mr. Williams excels.

In addition to the long tenure of contract record made by Williams, he also enjoys another distinction—that of having had more leading women than any other screen star, to say nothing of the fact that he is the oldest player in the point of continuous service now with the Vitagraph Company.

In Williams' earlier releases he has been known to play both leads and heavies. The very fact that his delightful ability to enhance a character with the breath of REAL, not REEL, life elevated him to the rank of star is of moment to those interested in screen personages.

His releases of past years include: "The Grell Mystery," "The Hillman," "The Seal of Silence," "The Girl in His House," "An American Live Wire," "A Diplomatic Mission," "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," "The Highest Trump," "A Gentleman of Quality," "The Usurper," "A Rogue's Romance," "The Hornet's Nest," "The Wolf," "The Black Gate."

Indeed, Earle Williams, five feet eleven of virile manhood, possessing those qualities that charm, and possessed of a personality that "gets across" on the silver sheet with pleasing vigor, is a name among screen personalities.

Earle Williams is a name both to the producer and the fan. He is the original film industry record-breaker, enjoying the distinction of having remained longer with one producer and distributing company than any other actor, writer, or director of the film industry.

Ten years ago, Earle Williams played his first part for Vitagraph, and it appears that if President Albert E. Smith has his way, Williams will be starring for Vitagraph ten years from now. A record, in these days of frequent moves.

Williams comes from Sacramento, California. He was educated at the public and high schools in Oakland and at the Polytechnical College of California.

His stage career began with the Baldwin-Melville stock company, New Orleans, La., in 1901. Then he went with the Frederick Belasco Company in San Francisco and Portland and with the James Neill stock company. There followed engagements with Henry Dixey, Rose Stahl, Mary Mannering, Helen Ware, and George Beban.

His screen career began with Vitagraph ten years ago. And there he has been ever since.

Bryant Washburn

A GOOD friend of the public and the exhibitor—that's Bryant Washburn. The man who puts across the clean cut, sparkling kind of comedy, the usual Bryant Washburn production, and who is a box-office winner, is surely a friend of both the public and the exhibitor.

Accordingly considerable interest is evinced in this popular star's first independent production, "The Road to London," by David Skaats Foster.

Washburn is a Chicago-ite. There he was educated. His stage career began in 1907, approximately, with George Fawcett, with whom he appeared in several successes. Then he advanced and played the lead in Eugene Walters' "The Wolf" and followed this with an appearance in "The Remittance Man."

The old Essanay Company started out in business about this time, and Washburn soon became associated with them. He was a splendid screen type, abetted by sound technic. For six years he remained with Essanay. At the end of that time his name was affectionately known to every fan in the country.

There followed several pictures with Pathé, and from that company he migrated to Artcraft, then a company within itself. Here he made "Till I Come Back To You" and "The Way Of A Man With A Maid." It was about this time that Artcraft and Famous Players-Lasky consolidated, and for Paramount, Washburn made "A Very Good Young Man," "Love Insurance," "Why Smith Left Home," "Too Much Johnson," "It Pays To Advertise," "Six Best Cellars," and "Sick-a-Bed."

Upon the expiration of his Paramount contract, Washburn acted upon an ambition that had long been formulating into tangible thoughts—to organize his own company.

His ideas were more or less crystallized, since the plan had occupied him for several years. There was little loss of time, therefore, in completing the formation of the Bryant Washburn Productions, now known as Screenplays Productions, Inc., with offices in both New York and Los Angeles.

The picture rights to "The Road to London," a best seller in England, which was deemed suitable to Washburn's clever pantomine, were purchased. Mr. Washburn, his wife and little son with various members of the company sailed from New York for London, in and around which Metropolis the picture was taken.

An all-British cast was engaged, men and women who have made their names famous, Joan Morgan playing opposite Washburn. Indeed, this production has been called "a perfectly cast romance." It was picturized and directed by Eugene G. Mullin.

"The Road to London" perhaps may be said to establish something of a precedent, ranking with the first of the big American screen-plays to be made in England. Much interest has been aroused in that country in this new independent production of Mr. Washburn.

Bryant Washburn has done much to raise the standard of screen comedy to its present high standard. He would never consent to play in a picture that harped on vulgarity, knowing that these pictures are to be seen by children. The opprobrium of the censors or of specially formed Mothers' Clubs against pictures unsuitable for "young America" is not applicable to the Washburn pictures. Simply because this end of distribution as applied to production has been one of the salient factors upon which the star based his cinematic code.

Harry Millarde

"OVER THE HILL," the photoplay that made strong men weep, women sob and almost simultaneously brought forth roars of laughter. And the picture, too, that put Harry Millarde, its director, "Over the Top." Until a few months ago, "over the top" was used upon the slightest provocation to describe the net results of single or combined activities which brought about the realization of hope or ambition. Most adequately do they now describe the recognition attributed Harry Millarde for what is conceded to be one of the greatest picture plays of 1920. It might otherwise be described in the words supplying the title for a season's success of some years ago, "The Talk of New York," for "Over the Hill" created a furore of excitement which continued for many days after its premiere and has been the subject of editorials by many famed litterateurs.

One might gather from the constant reference to Mr. Millarde as having directed "Over the Hill" that this was his first success. Not, indeed. For many months he has been directing picture plays and has a number of box-office attractions to his credit. He played in and directed "Every Girl's Dream," for be it known Mr. Millarde is still young, of admirable physique and of the qualifications sought for in a leading man. "Miss U. S. A." and "Sunshine Maid," starring June Caprice were directed by Harry Millarde, as well as "Blue-Eyed Mary," "Miss Innocence," "Gambling in Souls," "Rose of the West," "Sacred Silence" and others.

When Fox Film Corporation signed Pearl White for feature productions, the first one was assigned Harry Millarde, which is a tribute to his ability. Obviously a great deal depended upon the production, Miss White's first starring vehicle in a feature subject, for a period of some time. "The White Moll" was well received and widely praised.

Then, after having searched for a story, Mr. Fox called upon Mr. Millarde to consider "Over the Hill to the Poor House." The old Carleton poem, handed down through ages, was to form the foundation for the script. It appeared, at the time, unsuitable material to the young director, until the enthusiasm of the executive aroused his interest and he began visualizing the picture version.

Right here, being the son of parents in moderate circumstances with many little mouths to feed and as many little lives to consider, supplied the tenderness of thought so visibly reflected through the channels of his players, the heart-strings of the youthful director. One would recognize immediately that the "man behind the gun" in this case knew something about home life, of the amusing, and sometimes pathetic misunderstandings between juvenile characters, of the thoughtless incidents of humiliating torture sent upon elders by their own flesh and blood. And, also, did his "small town" experience manifest itself, though one might think it was a smaller town, judging from the picture, than Springfield, Ohio.

Nevertheless, it was in Springfield that Harry Millarde was born. He has learned, through his own efforts to become successful from an artistic as well as a financial standpoint, what sacrifice, disappointment and final achievements mean. His stage career paved the way for his knowledge of technique and the effect hoped for in presenting a theme before an audience and the observations of a life of one twice his age, are reflected by the portrayals of characters who go to make up the personnel of the picture that put Harry Millarde "Over the Top," which is the great success "Over the Hill."

King Vidor

NO longer is it necessary to point to "The Turn in the Road," "Better Times, "Poor Relations," and other productions which have been directed by King Vidor in order to identify him. The mention of his name immediately suggests his work, and the far-famed "Jack Knife Man."

For like a rainbow, bringing in its wake sunshine and a promise of fairer weather, "The Turn in the Road," King Vidor's very first multiple reel film, ushered in a spiritual renaissance in cinema-dom, being followed by other productions, which fulfilled the promise of excellency prophesied by the artistic premier.

Where some pictures intrigued the senses and appealed to the love of physical action, Vidor's productions spoke directly to the soul. A gossamer whimsy which unbottled the more tender and gentle of human emotions and thoughts. Others sought for and found realism, King Vidor sponsored reality. And in this hazy distinction—hazy insofar as words express it, vivid insofar as pictures go—rests the difference between King Vidor productions and "productions."

King Vidor includes other artistic gems in his list: "Better Times," "The Other Half," "Poor Relations," "The Family Honor," and "The Jack Knife Man." Much of the lustre of these photoplays radiated from the poetical personality of Florence Vidor, cast in the leading feminine roles—a rare flower transplanted and blooming in plain, old fashioned gardens.

The Vidor photoplays have been spoken of as poems, poems that might have been conjured up from dream life into soft, distinct figures of reality; poems that James Whitcomb Riley and Eugene Field might have sponsored from the Oberon of their imaginations to the reality of life.

King Vidor has just completed filming "The Sky Pilot," from the well known novel by Ralph Connor, for the Catharine Curtis Corporation; and in this photodrama of the Canadian Rockies infuses, according to those fortunate enough to witness a private pre-view, an elemental strength, a native vigor, that conduces to a tonic quality symbolizing the wild, wide places, where man contacts the mountains, the great trees, the animal kingdom; and sleeps on the naked earth beneath the canopy of the sky. Man in God's country.

King Vidor is a son of the South, born in Galveston, Texas, twenty-six years ago. He was educated at some of the leading southern and eastern colleges.

Florence Vidor was born in Houston, Texas, and it was there she was educated at a convent and the high school. Her screen career embraces the following productions: "The Countess Charming," "The Bravest Way," "New Wives for Old," "Till I Come Back To You," "The Honor of His House," "The White Man's Law," and then follow the pictures with her husband, King Vidor: "The Turn in the Road," "Poor Relations," "The Other Half," "Better Times," and others.

Neither husband nor wife had ever had stage experience prior to adventuring into cinema realms.

The motion picture is King Vidor's religion. To him it is Nature's first adequate universal language, and the greatest force ever given to Man since Time began. He believes it will, through being universally circulated, ultimately create a deeper understanding between nations and races; that it will be the means of abolishing war and laying the foundation for a True Brotherhood of Man.

Rockliffe Fellowes

ROCKCLIFFE FELLOWES has something of a record among screen leading men in that he has never yet been cast in an unsuccessful picture. And as Mr. Fellowes for a period of more than six years has been a leading man and featured player in innumerable picture plays, it is a record worth noting.

Rockcliffe Fellowes was born in Ottawa, Canada. He studied at several of the leading colleges, expecting to become a banker, and for years toiled through a business career that failed to inspire him. Then came his advent onto the stage and abandonment of commercial business for once and for all. Fellowes played prominent roles with Ethel Barrymore, Cyril Scott and others.

His first venture in the realm of the silent drama was in the featured role of "Regeneration," one of the early Fox super specials which won for him tremendous popularity almost overnight among motion picture fans everywhere and secured him recognition as one of the ablest actors who had then forsaken the speaking stage for the celluloid drama.

Since that time, Mr. Fellowes has never been anything but a lead in most cases being featured and in every role always commanding the interest of picture players by his capable work.

His most recent production, which will not be released until sometime in 1921 was opposite Ethel Clayton in "The Price of Possession," produced by Hugh Ford for Famous Players-Lasky from the novel by Winifred Boggs.

Prior to this he had played opposite this star in several notable productions, all of which were tremendously popular, the combination being a most happy one.

Previously, Rockcliffe Fellowes played the part of the young doctor, the principal male role in Hugo Ballin's first independent production, "Pagan Love," which was produced with an all-star cast.

Among his other recent noteworthy successes was opposite Constance Talmadge in "In Search of a Sinner," Norma Talmadge in "Yes or No," and Elaine Hammerstein in "The Point of View."

Recently there was some talk of producing an all-Canadian picture in which the principal actors and actresses would be from the Dominion and Fellowes was selected for the featured male part.

Fellowes comes from a long line of noted Canadians, among them the famous Colonel MacNab, who possessed great estates in and near the city of Ottawa, Canada, and was prominent a generation ago in the politics of Upper Canada. Rockcliffe Park, from which Fellowes takes part of his name, originally formed a portion of his ancestor's great estate.

Fellowes was educated at Bishop's College and at Ashbury in Lower Canada. Originally a banking career was planned for him and it was with such a career in mind that he studied finance and other courses in banking. For several years he engaged in business pursuits. But his artistic impulses eventually overcame the opposition of his elders and he then abandoned business for the stage.

The stage presented new obstacles—obstacles which young Fellowes, business man, viewed with cheery mien and then proceeded to hurtle.

Chief among the celebrities he played with on the legitimate stage are Mrs. Fiske, Ethel Barrymore, Cyril Scott, Grace George, William Courteney, and many others. His excellent work in "Within The Law," and "Under Cover" are especially worthy of note, and will long be remembered in theatrical circles and by play-goers.

Gordon Standing

GORDON STANDING, fast becoming another actor of the large family of artists to command due recognition for his artistic work, has spent a busy year. His activities have not been confined altogether to pictures.

The Standings are to the stage of England what the Barrymores are to the American stage. The famous old family of stage celebrities consists of six brothers and Herbert Standing, the father. The brothers are Sir Guy Standing, Daryl Standing, Aubrey Standing, Wyndham Standing and the twins, Harold and Herbert, Jr. Gordon H. Standing is a nephew of Herbert, Sr., and a son of Frank Standing, known to the stage as Frank Celli.

An old English Quaker family of London is the source, and out of respect for the feelings of their elders, who objected to their ambitions to become actors, when Herbert and his brothers Frank and William went on the stage, they assumed other names. Herbert took the name of Herbert Crellin, Frank became Frank Celli, while William christened himself William T. Carleton.

All won laurels upon the lyric and dramatic stage. Since then Herbert, Sr., has resumed the family name and so, also, has his nephew, Gordon H. Standing. William T. Carleton's son is William P. Carleton, who has retained his father's professional name and is well known in motion pictures.

Two daughters of Herbert Standing, Sr., are also in the motion picture field. They are the Misses Joan and Grace Standing.

Faith Standing, a sister of Gordon H. Standing's, has retained her father's professional name and is known to the stage of England, alone, as Faith Celli.

This internationally famous family is planning a reunion for the coming summer in London or New York. Inasmuch as the greater percentage of the Standing family is on this side of the Atlantic, it is highly probable that the reunion will take place in New York.

Gordon Standing is a most versatile actor, as some of the roles he has portrayed during the past year will prove. In "Miss 139," he played a character heavy in a company headed by Diana Allen, and in "Man and Woman," with Miss Allen, again, played a juvenile lead. Followed his selection for the role of the Reverend Doctor Brown, in "The Foreigner." Anyone who has read Ralph Connor's thrilling story will recall with pleasure the beautiful character, which, in the screen version, it is said Mr. Standing has played to perfection.

Temporarily, at the end of 1920, Gordon Standing is forsaking the screen, only because of an opportunity to appear upon the Orpheum Circuit in vaudeville, in a sketch founded upon Sir James Barrie's "The Half Hour."

In addition to earning laurels upon the stage and screen, the Standing family have also won honorable place in the recent war's Hall of Fame. Four of them served with the Allied Armies, and Sir Guy Standing was Knighted for meritorious service with the British Army. Gordon H. Standing served with the Second Division of the United States Army, participating in the great operations of that Division, following which he spent five months in the Army of Occupation in Germany. What more could Gordon Standing wish for to satisfy his justly national and family pride?

Directors

JAMES VINCENT, Director of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, is possibly in a better position to offer a message of "Good Will," representing directors at large, than any man in the industry. This because of the unique position occupied by him as Chief Executive of the New York Lodge of M. P. D. A. As its President he calls upon himself and members on both coasts to be only the servants of the progress of art, now most conspicuously in the limelight. Mr. Vincent recently said:

"To the producer and distributor the director is his right hand man. True, he is a paid employee, but upon him rests the carrying out of the policy and quality of production which the producer presents. A better understanding between producer and director is most desirable and any concession by the producer should be repaid in his product. He knows of the demand of the market. His director must, in the final analysis, satisfy this demand. In the development of the story and the actual making of the picture there should be perfect understanding and to the many trying times in this progress the director should always have the backing and support of the producer who creates the opportunity. This has developed to a pleasing degree, let it continue to grow is the humble plea of the director. Let us spread it throughout the industry, for the making of truly great pictures, always set up standards which we may aim to surpass.

"The so-called efficiency expert has proven a failure in this industry in the past and has been the undoing of some of the largest companies, because his kind of efficiency has been in direct opposition to the essential points of picture making and in constant antagonism with the director. Has he figured time and light, or human element with which the director must constantly deal? True efficiency will come when approximate expenses are worked out on the law of average by the men of finance in conjunction with a practical director.

"A closer relationship is greatly desired by the director and the author. That which the author conceives in the mind is a mental picture. It must be translated to the screen by a director. He must perceive and feel the author's conception as the book pictures; it must be in vision before he can clothe it with proper action to be understood by an audience. The director is the actors' guide. There must be affiliation. For the actor is likened to a finely toned instrument which by interpretation the conception of the author through the meditation of the director gives entertainment to the spectator.

"We seek a closer tie to bind us to the exhibitor. Director and Exhibitor now need to work in harmony. Our aims are similar. One makes the picture the other presents it. The director from afar off attempts to get under the skin of the audience. The exhibitor is one with the public. We must got to know one another intimately and profit by each others' experiences.

"The Motion Picture Directors' Association, has been organized to maintain the honor and dignity of the profession of Motion Picture Directors and all persons connected with the Motion Picture business. To cultivate the usefulness and to exert every influence to improve the moral, social and intellectual standing of our members. In our councils all matters of vital interest to the various phases of the industry are taken under consideration in an organized manner and by the pooling of brains, conclusions are arrived at which benefit the work of the director and the industry in general.

"The M. P. D. A. interpretes a standard—one, by which all directors may profit—cooperation, exchange of ideas and brotherly love."

Cinematograph Society

BECAUSE a few cinematographers in the motion picture industry in Los Angeles were dissatisfied with existing organizations of cameramen, and because they dreamed of possibilities, they met to discuss the means of bringing about desired changes. Out of these earnest conferences grew the organization of the AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CINEMATOGRAPHERS, chartered under the State of California on the 8th day of January, 1919.

Their purpose was to bring into closer confederation and cooperation the leaders in the profession and thereby promote the interests and welfare and protect the rights of the members of the Society.

The fifteen charter members formed the first Board of Governors, and from this nucleus has grown a membership of seventy picked men. Membership can be secured only by invitation and each proposed member is judged solely upon his record and ability as an expert cinematographer, and his character and personal fitness for membership. It is their ideal to make membership in the Society a mark of honor and distinction based on merit.

This Society is not affiliated in any way with any other organization and is quietly devoting itself to the growth and development of their part of this great industry—making big pictures and studying the problems peculiar to the profession. The members realize the importance of the cameraman in recording a production and aim to be worthy of recognition from the producers. For years the cameraman has striven for recognition on the screen; in this effort the Society has assisted materially, for few good pictures are now shown without the name of the photographer on the screen. This is no more than his due for he is a very human individual and the sight of his name on a picture is a satisfaction and an incentive to new endeavor.

We do not suggest that photography is the only important element that enters into the making of a successful picture, but we can say that there have been many pictures sold on the merit of the photography, in which either the story or action was decidedly weak—and poor photography can ruin an otherwise strong picture!

Screen photography is the vehicle which carries to the audience the thoughts and the genius of author and director and the talent of the actor. It is thus one of the greatest factors in the success of a photoplay. The photoplay of today should be considered as an artistic entity and to secure the most satisfactory results, the cameraman should be a collaborator with the director in translating the original ideas of the author to the screen. It is useless to discuss the obvious advantage to the director when he has a cinematographer who can without suggestion or explanation carry out his ideas.

In the membership are several who have advanced from their position behind the camera and are now directing, among them being the well known student and cameraman, Mr. Hugh C. McClung. Mr. Edward Kull is directing at Universal City; Mr. George Hill is directing Louise Lovely at Fox Studio; Mr. Fred Leroy Granville has finished four pictures with Samuelson Productions at Isleworth, England; and our president, Mr. Philip E. Rosen, is now directing his own productions at Metro.

MR. CLIFT left Los Angeles June first for a six months' tour of the Continent and Great Britain, to gain an insight first hand into National customs and temperaments. France, Italy, Spain, Morocco, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Scotland, Ireland and England have been visited. The great Art masterpieces in the galleries of the Old World Capitals; the tragic gayety and fascination of Paris, Monte Carlo, Port Said, Ostend and Venice; the undercurrent of social revolution smouldering in the hearts of millions abroad; the changing thought of the European—all have contributed a wealth of fresh material for a series of powerful modern photoplays now in preparation for an international field.

"The Diamond Necklace"

A Powerful Modern Version of Guy de Maupassant's Famous Story

Thomas H. Ince

THE coming of a new year in motion picture history is accompanied by an announcement from Thomas H. Ince, which indicates that a new productional policy will be followed in the filming of Ince pictures for the coming twelve months, that an amount of effort even greater than was expended during the past year will be embodied in the series of specials to be released by the Associated Producers and the Douglas MacLean pictures, individual starring vehicles for this one Ince star, to be released through Paramount.

Mr. Ince believes that the exhibitor and the public have tired of the story built around the peculiar personalities of the stars. It is quite evident that the new era in pictures demands powerful drama with much vitality and scope of general appeal; that a story embodying all the elements of plot action, characterization, and idea, enacted by capable, experienced players, regardless of their name or its so-called fame, will win the favor of all.

The coming year, Mr. Ince states, will also see a marked improvement in the effect and artistry of direction and in photography and general productional care. Like a stage play which scores a hit overnight by virtue of its story and staging, regardless of the personnel of cast, so will the photoplay of 1921. Mr. Ince, who has always supervised the productions coming from his plant, will take an active hand in the direction of all his pictures for Associated Producers, Inc. Says Mr. Ince:

"Production at my studios is progressing to the fullest extent and conditions are more active than they have ever been in my career as a producer. I have completed my second Associated Producers release, "Lying Lips," which represented the biggest spectacle I have ever made and which embodies more time, effort, and money than half a dozen average program features.

"In addition to three Associated Producers specials, I have entered production as well on a Douglas MacLean production for Paramount release."

Following "Lying Lips" will come another Ince-Associated Producers special with a cast including Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, Niles Welch and Madge Bellamy. The title of the drama will be announced shortly.

The next feature, recently completed and set for early release, is "Mother," an original story with scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan, directed by Fred Niblo, with a cast including Lloyd Hughes, Betty Blythe, Joseph Kilgour, and others.

Thomas H. Ince personally directed a number of the most vital scenes in "Lying Lips," as well as cut and edited the many thousand feet of film which were exposed. He supervised the other productions, in accordance with his usual productional policy.

Relative to his plans for the coming year, Mr. Ince said:

"I am of the opinion that the motion picture industry is now in a state of readjustment commensurate with the present-day demands of both exhibitors and the public.

"While there is a prevalent idea that production is being diminished, I interpret this as meaning that it is only because the individual star, or program, series plan is being replaced by the all-star special production, which necessitates more time and money than the former program policy.

"I can see only benefit for exhibitors and their box-offices in the coming of the all-star special. I would like to impress exhibitors with the necessity of extending their runs and presenting a good picture as long as it will hold up."

Maurice Tourneur

MAURICE TOURNEUR, producer of the exquisite and perfect production of Stevenson's "Treasure Island," Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," "Prunella," "Victory," "The Whip," "Trilby," "Mother," "A Poor Little Rich Girl," and "The Bait," recently completed "The Last of the Mohicans," his stupendous picturization of Fenimore Cooper's famous novel.

Maurice Tourneur is a Frenchman who came to America quite by accident. One day he was seen reading an English magazine in the Eclair studio in Paris. Emile Chautard, then directing Tourneur in pictures, suggested that, since he could speak the language, he should go to the United States for American Eclair, which he soon did, arriving in New York in 1914. From his initial efforts his rise was meteoric.

It is the fruits of this ripe experience that Maurice Tourneur is putting specials on the screen today via the new Associated Producers organization, of which he is a part with George Loane Tucker, Thomas H. Ince, Allan Dwan, Mack Sennett, Marshall Neilan, and J. Parker Read, Jr.

Tourneur is a master of illusion, of atmosphere, of dreams and fantasies, conceded by critics and screen lovers the world over to be one of the most artistic directors. He rightly deserves the praise, for he has served his time learning the beautiful things that he gives to the eighth art, as the photoplay is called today:

Born in Paris, Tourneur spent most of his early life there. Neither of his French parents were professional, his father being a jeweler and his mother a devoted wife. At eighteen he was graduated from Lycee Condorcet. After finishing college, young Maurice became a designer and interior decorator, and has created illustrations for books and magazines, posters, curtain and fabric designs and beautiful stage settings.

He became associated with Auguste Rodin, the celebrated French sculptor, and later with the Parisian mural painter, Puvis de Chavannes, with whom he did much work on decorating the Boston library.

The next three years saw Tourneur an artillery officer in the French army.

After leaving the service in 1900 he felt a craze for acting and went on the Theatre Paris stage. He rose rapidly, receiving a road engagement for one night stands of four plays, in which he did nine characters.

Tourneur was then chosen by Mme. Rejane to make a world tour. They appeared in France, England, Italy, Portugal, Africa, and North and South American countries, Tourneur directing and playing in her support.

After his return to Paris, he joined Andre Antoine, assisting in the production of more than 400 plays in 7 years.

About this time his attention was drawn to the photoplay, which now was making itself heard. He visited his old friend, Emile Chautard, whom he had directed on the stage and who now headed Eclair, the principal film company of Paris. In 1910 they had exchanged places, Tourneur becoming an actor under Chautard's direction. His first film was "The Merry Widow." It did not take him long to understand pictures, and soon he directed for Eclair, being sent to Africa to make war pictures. Here he produced big features, including "The Fall of Constantine."

And then came Chautard's suggestion that he come to America. The rapid rise of this artistic director is one of the pleasantest bywords in production circles.

Charles Ray

THE year now closing has been easily the most memorable in the already notable career of Charles Ray. It has witnessed the formation of his own company and his debut as an independent producer, his affiliation with Arthur S. Kane, the carrying into effect of the contract for the release of his productions by First National, the building of his fine new studios, and the presentation of his greatest film triumphs up to the present.

The Charles Ray Productions, Inc., was chartered early in January, with the star's father, Charles T. Ray, as president; Richard Willis, first vice president and general manager; Albert A. Kidder, Jr., secretary, treasurer and assistant general manager; Gus Inglis, second vice president, and Charles Ray and Mr. Inglis, directors.

The union of forces with Mr. Kane was effected almost simultaneously with the organization of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation by the well known executive whose name it bears and who has been its president from the begining. Mr. Kane now presents Mr. Ray in all his new productions, while his company supervises all the star's New York activities, books, plays and other screen material purchased for his use being contracted for through the Kane offices.

At the beginning of his career as an independent producer the star determined to confine himself almost exclusively to pictures adapted from stage successes and popular stories by celebrated authors, a policy he is following with marked success. His initial attraction was a picturization of George M. Cohan's famous musical comedy hit, "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," in which Mr. Ray took the part of "Kid" Burns, the role the actor-composer had made famous. "I can think of no other man now in the films," said Mr. Cohan, "to whom I would rather entrust this stage character of my own creation, which has become, through long theatrical association, very dear to me." The author was quite as enthusiastic after seeing the film and "Forty-five" is proving as great a triumph on the screen as it was on the stage.

Mr. Ray's second independent production was "Peaceful Valley," the classic rural comedy drama which Edward E. Kidder wrote for the late Sol Smith Russell, and which formed the basis of the celebrated actor's fame and fortune.

In "Nineteen and Phyllis," a delightful comedy by Frederick Stowers, for release during holiday week, Mr. Ray promises to maintain the very high standard set in the two previous offerings. He recently completed the production of "The Old Swimmin' Hole," the picture rights to which, with three other James Whitcomb Riley poems—"The Girl I Loved," "Home Again," and "Out to Old Aunt Mary's"—he bought several months ago. He is now at work on "Scrap Iron," by the late Charles E. Van Loan.

Early in the summer Mr. Ray bought a group of fourteen of the Charles H. Hoyt comedies, each of them a play of genial warmth and sparkling humor. The list included: "A Black Sheep," "A Brass Monkey," "A Hole in the Ground," "A Midnight Bell," "A Milk White Flag," "A Rag Baby," "A Runaway Colt," "A Stranger in New York," "A Trip to Chinatown," "A Temperance Town," "A Contented Woman," "A Day and A Night," "A Dog in the Manger," and "A Texas Steer." Subsequently, he sold "A Contented Woman" to Joseph M. Schenck, for Constance Talmadge, and "A Texas Steer" to Samuel Rork.

Among other stories which Mr. Ray has acquired is "Ramsey Milholland," one of Booth Tarkington's boy tales.

Nigel Barrie

THIS is the leading man whose work as an actor pleases the leading women and the public, as indicated by the exceptional reports received at the office of the producers.

Mr. Barrie has had a number of exceptional releases during the years he has been in pictures, the number increasing in personality value as Nigel's art increased in power; especially is this true of 1920 and for the excellent productions in which Barrie is cast for 1921.

This popular lead was born in Calcutta, India. His mother came from Cork and his father from London. Young Nigel was educated in England, at Haileyburg College.

His stage career embraces a long series of successes and sojourns with the most brilliant figures in the theatrical world, including Sir Frank Benson, Sir Herbert Tree, Fred Terry and Julia Neilson, John Drew, and Grace George. He played leads—a real matinee idol with loads of ability—in "The Count of Luxemburg," "Gypsy Love," and "The Laughing Husband." Barrie was a professional dancer in vaudeville with Joan Sawyer.

Now follows the beginning of his screen career. Nigel made a hit from the start. His tall figure and clean-cut features scored heavily on the screen. He is six feet one, slender, black hair and brown eyes, and a way of deporting himself that elicits a gurgle of "mooned-eyed" worship from every girl and even causes the more sedate "mamas" to smile in a way that indicates "she had just such a handsome man paying court to her when she was young."

Barrie played in the "Bab" series with Marguerite Clark and also played opposite this star in "A Widow By Proxy." Other pictures include: "The Marionettes," "The Better Wife," "Joselyn's Wife," "Tangled Threads," "The Cinema Murder," "The Turning Point," and "The Honey Bee."

Among his most exceptional releases for 1920 are "Their Wonder Child," opposite Margarita Fisher and following this, "The Girl in the Web," opposite Blanche Sweet. In the First National release starring Katharine MacDonald, "The Notorious Miss Lisle," he played the lead and was opposite Pauline Frederick in "The Slave of Vanity," which special has just been released. Mr. Barrie's excellent work in it has won the praise of the fans and resulted in new laurels for him.

He is now working with Ora Carewe and Milton Sills, all three of whom have important roles, in an all-star Metro picture, "What's the Matter With Marriage." This play will introduce a new twist to the eternal triangle, in which there is no heavy, all parts being of the sympathetic nature.

It is Mr. Barrie's ambition to become a director. His past work and the concentration he always devotes to the work in hand certainly fits him for this new position in production. It is with this intention that he has booked passage on the Olympic to go to Europe in April or May. With the view of touring the Continent and acquainting himself with scenes and customs. Later he plans touring the Orient for the same purpose. It is because of this intention and the planned "Barrie travel tour" that Nigel has not been classed with the Real Estate buyers of the film colony. He believes it is to his advantage at this time to prepare for the work he wishes to take up later.

Louis Gasnier

"KISMET," the crowning glory of success, and the big achievement of Louis Gasnier, in 1920. Not that previous to the heralded special he had not had sufficient to carry him, with laurels, through the year, but with "Kismet" as his climax, he was sure to win.

Two years ago Mr. Gasnier organized his own producing company, under the name of the L. J. Gasnier productions. He produced a number of pictures released through Robertson-Cole including "The Beloved Cheater," "The Butterfly Man," and "Occasionally Yours," in which Lew Cody was starred. This brought Mr. Gasnier up to the beginning of his work on "Kismet."

Regardless of his previous successes, Mr. Gasnier has reached the topmost peak of artistic directing in "Kismet." Given a wonderful vehicle, he directed in a wonderful manner. There has been nothing on the silver sheet for many moons that compares with this photoplay from the standpoint of art and detail. Mr. Gasnier fully realized his task when he undertook it. In the first place, the picture had to be taken in California instead of the city of Bagdad, in old Turkey, where the story is placed. Here was the first obstacle which, although apparently as insurmountable as a mountain, Mr. Gasnier overcame through concentration and ability. The City of Bagdad, in the picture, is in reality a replica of the historic Oriental city and defies the eye of the most experienced traveler.

As a crowning tribute to the famous director, Otis Skinner, who is perhaps more familiar with "Kismet" than Edward Knoblock, the author, himself, has the following to say concerning the work of Mr. Gasnier.

"In the making of 'Kismet' for the screen, I was surrounded with every possible assistance. Magnificent mountings, gorgeous costumes and an exceptional cast, all of which was handled by Louis J. Gasnier, the director, in a masterly manner. I understand that Mr. Gasnier never saw the production upon the legitimate stage, and I marvel at his work. I looked for the tiny things that had helped make the original production such a success, and Mr. Gasnier had guessed them all. If I am permitted to do another production for the screen, I trust I will be surrounded by just such an organization, with Louis J. Gasnier, at the helm."

We must hark back many years to understand just when and how Louis J. Gasnier began the career which today finds him an expert in his line. Mr. Gasnier was born in Paris, France, and began his early dramatic training under the guiding hand of M. Antoine, of the Teatro Libre, who, at that time, was the acknowledged peer of stage directors in Paris. Mr. Gasnier had a penchant for the stage. At the age of sixteen he made his first public appearance, playing juvenile parts in repertoire at the Teatre Renaizzance.

Mr. Gasnier's rise on the stage was meteoric and it was not long before the ambitious young man was made stage manager. Under his direction, many of the French plays of the time were presented. It was while rehearsing his company in "The Wandering Jew" that Gasnier became interested in the photoplay drama.

It was in 1900 that Mr. Gasnier signed his first contract as a motion picture producer. For a number of years he had been production manager for foreign studios in Paris, Rome and Monte Carlo. In 1910 he came to America and began directing a number of celebrated artists in the new country. His efforts have justly won him distinction.

Nate C. Watt

DIRECTOR NATE WATT, well known as a director, is now at work filming "Peck's Bad Boy." The picturization of this popular story of a mischievous younster is creating a deal of favorable comment, for there is no doubt about it, the finished product will be a splendid box office attraction, especially as handled by Director Watt. Little Jackie Coogan, who plays a prominent part in "The Kid," Charlie Chaplin's new picture, is entrusted with the title role in "Peck's Bad Boy," and Nate expects to do big things with the talented little actor.

Watt is a young man, only twenty-nine. He has had a singularly uphill fight to become a full fledged director, but his years of experience will certainly prove of great value to him in his future work.

Starting in a minor capacity with Lois Weber nine years ago, Watt soon became assistant director for the company and was of great aid to Miss Weber in the making of some of her most famous productions. He assisted in filming "Hypocrites," "The Dumb Girl of Portici;" "Captain Courtesy," with Dustin Farnum in the leading role; and "Where Are My Children."

Mr. Watt then accepted a position as co-director with William Russell in a series of six features for the American Film Company. Next came an assistant director's berth with Robert Thornby in six productions starring Blanche Sweet.

Again came a well considered move. Mr. Watt went with Metro, assisting in several pictures starring Bert Lytell. He left that company to go with Director Chester Franklin, who was making the Sol Lesser special production, "What Women Love," starring Annette Kellerman. The director became ill, suddenly, and Watt was given his first real opportunity to direct. He stepped right in, taking charge in a highly efficient manner. He completed the picture, which proved to be a big success and is now barnstorming the country at a fine clip.

It was about this time that Irving Lesser decided to make a series of pictures of "Peck's Bad Boy." No one of better directorial mettle suggested himself to Mr. Lesser than Nate Watt. So he was engaged.

Jackie Coogan, "the Peck's Bad Boy" delineator for the screen, sustained a basilar fracture of the skull in an automobile accident. This, after the production was well on its way. For a time Director Watt feared Jackie could not continue in his role, and there was much mourning at the studio. But the boy recovered and the company has now resumed full production activities.

Nate Watt does not take the responsibility of putting a picture across without having carefully prepared himself for the task in hand. His years of apprenticeship as an assistant director can be translated into a first hand knowledge of production from every angle. Many of our leading directors advocate these gruelling years in service

Being an assistant director surely drills the aspirant in the rudiments of perfecting production plans, seeing that every detail is carried out to its proper end, and being responsible for the thousand and one units that go to make up production. Of course, work of this nature can become mechanical, mere routine, unless the man is of an ambitious nature. The latter is true of Nate Watt.

Following the completion of "Peck's Bad Boy," even bigger things may be expected of Mr. Watt.

Lyons and Moran

EDDIE LYONS and LEE MORAN—popular screen comedians, whose latest releases include: "Everything But the Truth," "La La Lucille," "Once A Plumber," and "Fixed By George," all of them of the five reel type. A new Lyons and Moran mirth provoker will be ready for release in January, 1921, entitled "A Shocking Night."

Both these fun makers were born in the same state—Illinois. They are both of Irish parentage. They both use their own names in their professional life and are both almost six feet tall and weigh respectively one hundred and thirty-five pounds.

Both began their stage careers in vaudeville. Lyons organized a "Newsboys' Quartette," and sang tenor in it, while Moran had a song and dance act of his own. Then, at practically the same time, they deserted the two-a-day for the alluring promises musical comedy offered.

In all their wanderings up to this period they had never met each other—in fact, their paths diverged as widely as those of any two ordinary mortals not destined to give to history another pair of names so closely linked as were those of Damon and Pythias.

The photoplay was the destiny that brought them together. After a short flier in stock, they learned what a one-night stand meant from actual experience. And the knowledge did not appeal particularly.

It was the contrast the photoplay offered to the one-night stand sort of existence that made the two first listen to the call of the cinema. Motion pictures at least do not go "skalivanting" all around the country as a daily habit.

So it was that Lyons and Moran found each other when they appeared in comedies together. After a brief career with Biograph, Lyons went with the Western Nestor Company, together with Lee Moran. Both were with the Imp company under the direction of Carl Laemmle. In June, 1912, they became Universalites.

For eight years they have turned out a short film comedy as regularly as Saturday night. During this time four hundred and sixty reels of laughs have been released.

They eventually reached a turning point in their career when they wearied of writing, acting, directing, titling, and cutting one and two reelers; they wanted something bigger to do—five reel comedies, for example. So they came East and "sold" President Laemmle of Universal on the idea. After spending a vacation in New York, the two of them went back West and started work at once on a five-reel comedy: "Everything But The Truth." This was a big success, and in rapid succession followed "La La Lucille," "Once A Plumber," and "Fixed By George."

In speaking of their dual work, Eddie Lyons says: "In our pictures we work on the theory that a man or woman is a grown-up child. The child sees only the obvious comedy, but a grown-up will laugh at the 'rough house' stuff and find amusement in situations that the child cannot grasp. I have sat in theatres where our own comedies as well as those made by other producers have been shown, and in every instance I have noticed that the men and women found more to amuse them than did the youngsters."

We all know what a clean cut brand of comedy these two cheery chaps produce. Their names guarantee merriment.

Moreno—Bennett

NO recent move on the part of Vitagraph has been hailed with greater endorsement than the return of Antonio Moreno to feature productions after two years in serials, which have established him in a premier position so far as world popularity is concerned. No better criterion of the drawing power and value of Moreno as a feature star can be offered than the unsolicited comments from editors of the principal motion picture magazines which are ever in touch with the genuine preferences of the public.

James R. Quirk, editor of Photplay magazine, in his review of the year indicates the tremendous power of Moreno by declaring him the king of serials, superior because of his ability as a romantic actor.

Frederick James Smith, editor of Shadowland and Motion Picture Classic, calls Moreno "the most picturesque personity of the screen" and predicts that as a feature star he will be numbered among the greatest in popularity.

Picture-Play magazine places Moreno alongside Douglas Fairbanks, Wallace Reid and John Barrymore as one of the ten most popular male stars of the coming year.

"Antonio Moreno via the serial route has built a world popularity comparable to that of Pearl White with whom he appeared at one time," says Picture-Play. "Yet Mr. Moreno excels as an actor of more human drama. He has distinction with his romantic fire and physical magnetism. With proper attention he might easily create a type on the plane with Hart, Ray and Chaplin."

Adele Whitely Fletcher, editor of Motion Picture magazine, says:

"It is good to know that the vivid Tony of the Moreno line is again to be cast in the feature production rather than the serial. Bringing to the screen as he does, old Spain with its unfulfilled dreams and its poetry and romance, he is one of the most colorful and interesting figures shadowed on the silver sheet."

The rise of Chester Bennett to prominence as a director was one of the most interesting things in picture during the year, as it demonstrated the limitless bounds of the industry for ambition and determination.

Three years ago Bennett was an assistant camera man, the lowest figure of a producing unit. Today he is an established director with many successful productions behind him. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has just selected him to direct the first Antonio Moreno feature, "Three Sevens," from the novel by Perley Poore Sheehan and it is likely that a producing team of this young star and young director will result.

Chester Bennett was a graduate lawyer and had just hung up his shingle three years ago when he was struck with the possibilities of the picture business. He felt that it offered wider opportunities than the law. So he applied by judgment.

From assistant camera man he soon became assistant director. He played some leads for a time to get acquainted with the acting side. Then he became assistant director to James Young and later director for Earle Williams. With Williams he made "When A Man Loves," "The Master Stroke," "The Purple Cipher," "The Romance Promoters," and "Diamonds Adrift." He also made the western scenes in Tom Terriss' production in New York of "Captain Swift."

His first production with Antonio Moreno will be one of Vitagraph's early releases of the year and "Three Sevens" is expected to fully meet the standard Bennett has set for himself with his 1920 productions.

Mahlon Hamilton

Neilan Productions

THE name of Marshall Neilan in front of the theatre is the public's guarantee of good entertainment. The American theatre-goer does not take long to appreciate merit and places his confidence in those responsible for merit. In one year motion picture devotees have come to realize that Marshall Neilan is the man who made "The River's End," "Go and Get It," "Don't Ever Marry," "Dinty," and "Not A Drum Was Heard." Their confidence has prompted them to see his newest effort as soon as released, and because they have realized each time that their confidence has not been misplaced, Marshall Neilan Productions draw capacity attendances—not because of the story, not because of a personality visualized before their eyes and not because of anything but the fact that Marshall Neilan is responsible for the production and because he has been responsibile for five of the best productions they have seen during the past year.

In the formation then of Marshall Neilan Productions, the organization, this director has won for himself a place in the hearts of the motion picture patrons that perhaps can be duplicated by no other producer today.

Prior to the event of Marshall Neilan Productions as such. Mr. Neilan—although responsible for such triumphs as "Daddy Long Legs," "The Unpardonable Sin" and "In Old Kentucky"—was merely the director whose name very often never reached the public. The exhibitor on the other hand was thoroughly "sold" on Marshall Neilan and his name proved a big factor in obtaining his booking.

This "selling" of Marshall Neilan to the public in a way that gave him the credit he deserved was only possible through such an arrangement as the formation of Marshall Neilan Productions. This was not a case of foistering on the public a name and then trying to meet the representations that name implied with a quality of product. Rather it was a matter of giving the public the information the exhibitors already possessed, information that was indeed in the nature of a service for it told the public what it wanted to know, giving it the name of a man upon whom it could depend in its search for quality motion picture entertainment.

Fundamentally, Mr. Neilan believes in organization. Most everyone does. But, unlike most everyone, Mr. Neilan believes in allowing each member of his organization the widest scope possible in the execution of his particular work and the creation of new ideas. It has been his policy to get the very best brains in the business, pay well for these brains and then allow them to function without obstacles. As further recognition of this work, the producer believes in giving his associates full credit publicly and otherwise, for any and all accomplishments.

The use of new facilities and the introduction of novel departures in motion picture productions figure among other reasons for Marshall Neilan's success. With the perspective, imagination and daring of youth, he is constantly exploring new fields in his endeavor to get away from what has been done before. He proved the novelty and excellence of taking scenes on the ground from a dirigible. He searched for locations by aeroplane—and found them.

The exceptional merit of Marshall Neilan Productions for the coming year is assured.

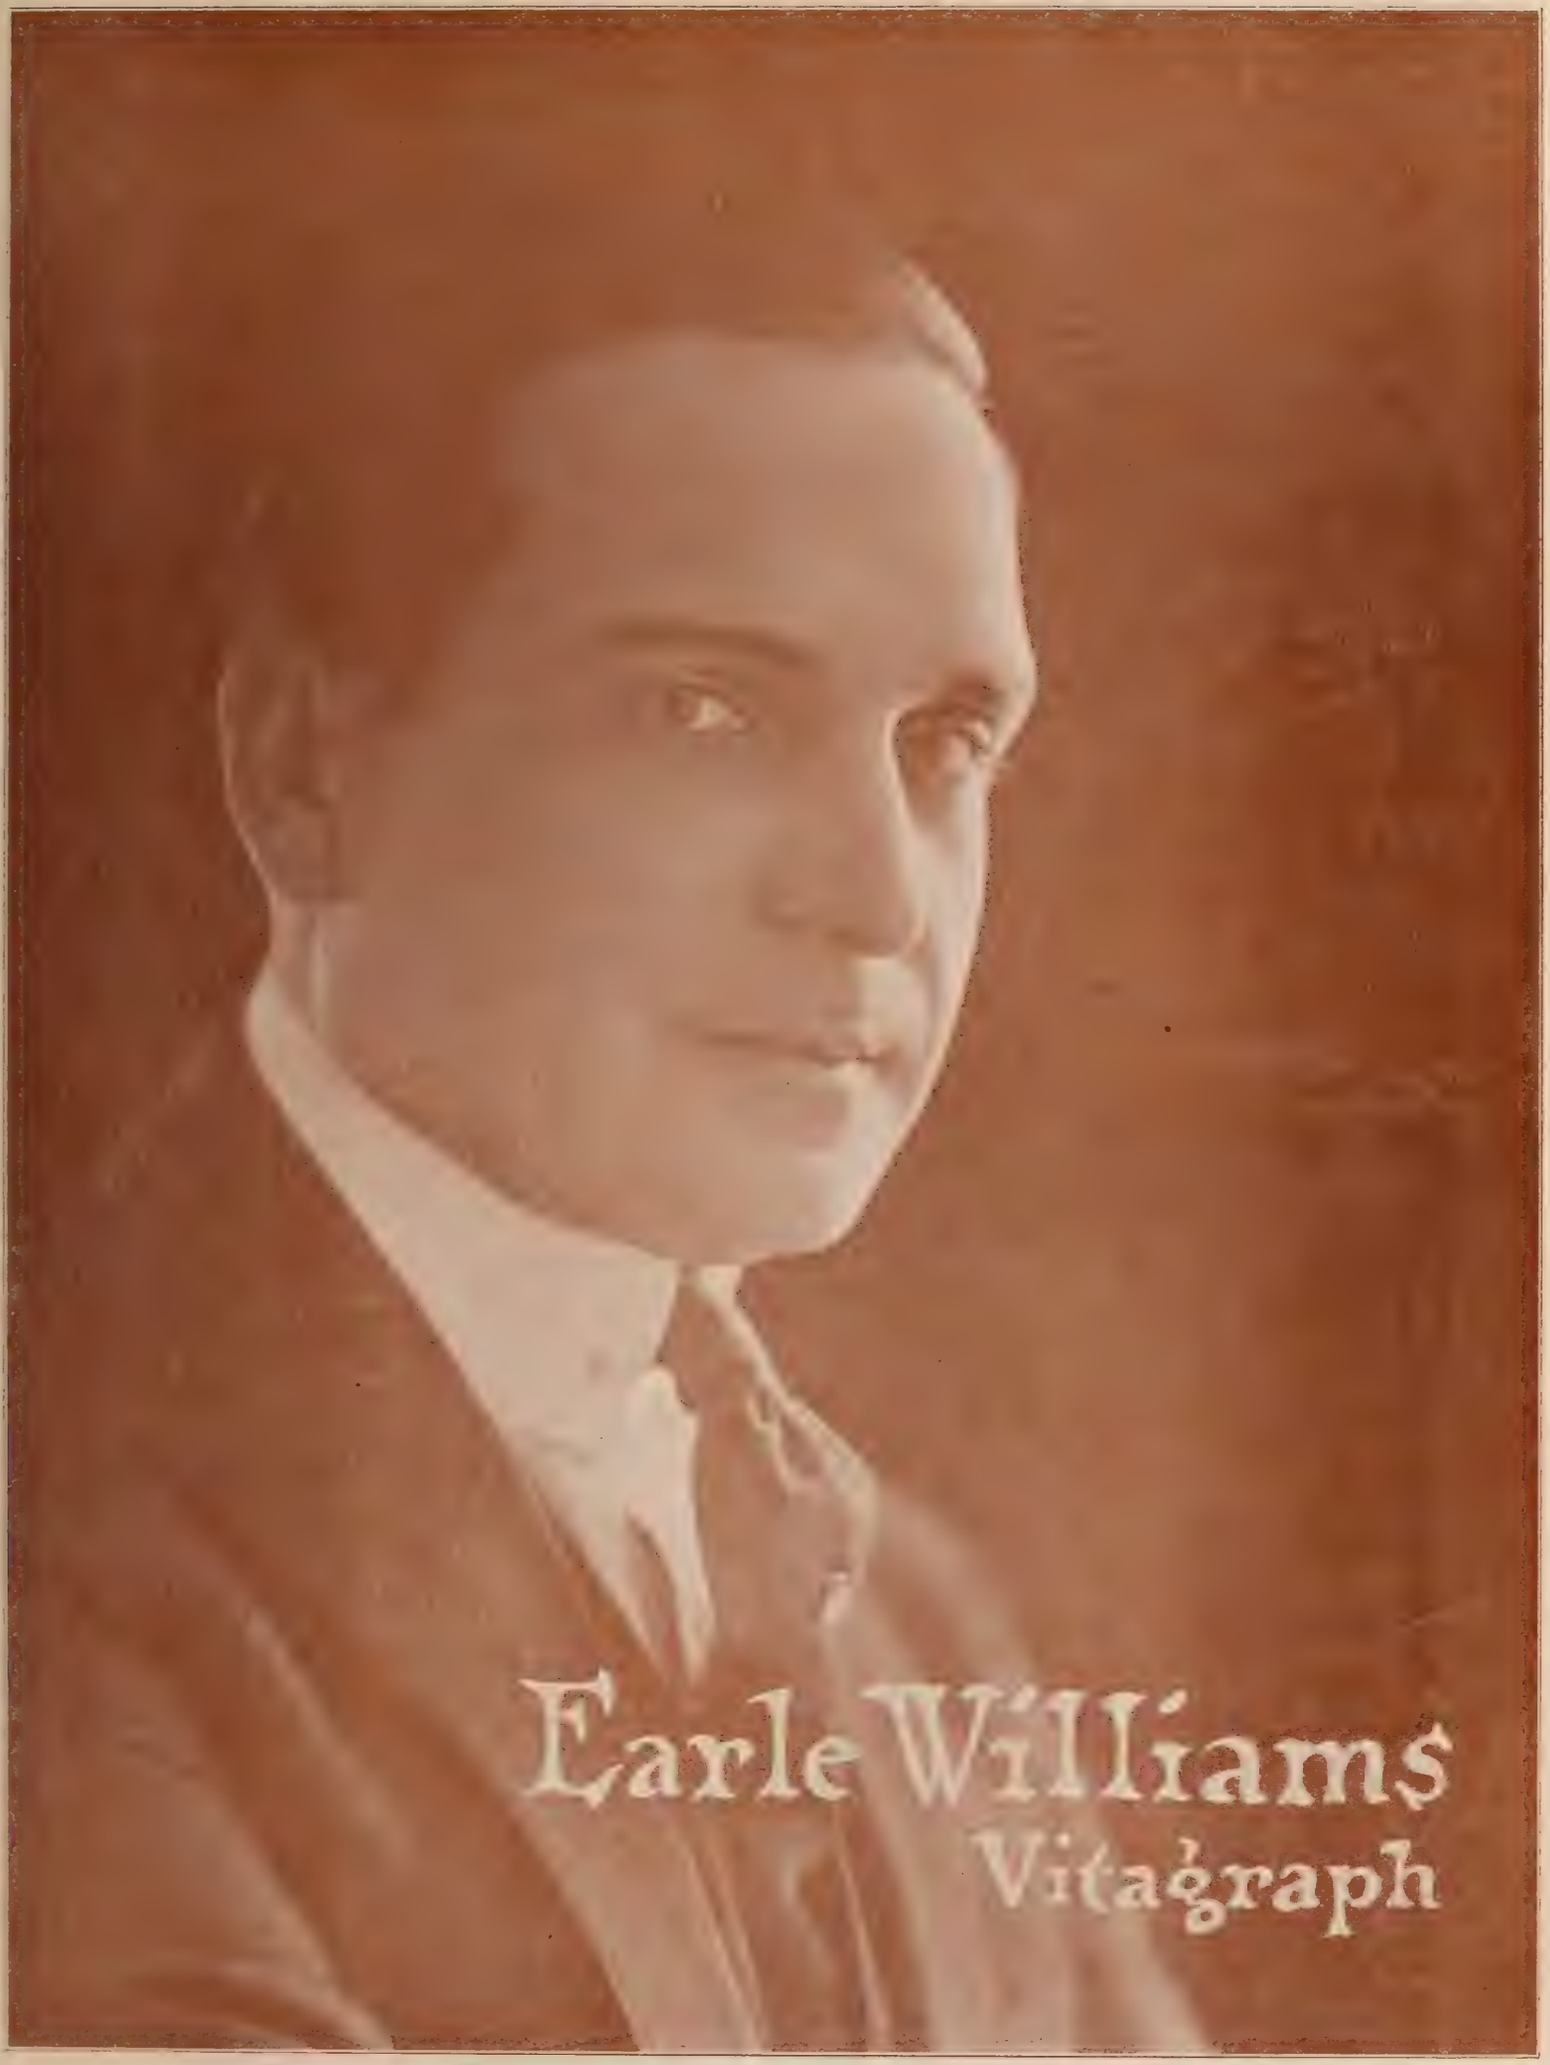
Stuart Paton

STUART PATON, well known director, put across Eva Novak in her first starring picture for Universal, "Wanted at Headquarters," adapted from the famous crook story by Edgar Wallace, entitled "Kate Plus Ten." He is now fast completing production work on Miss Novak's second starring vehicle, "The Torrent," adapted from "Out of the Sunset," by George Rix, to be released early in January, 1921.

Paton was born in Glasgow, Scotland. His earlier career was as a chemist. Later he became a stage painter. He developed a desire to become an actor. He soon gratified his ambition. For six years he played in London, performing at King's Way Theatre. He wasn't on the order of the strolling players in "Hamlet," but he did play before royalty, and the experience was not half bad. Paton played before the august eyes of King Edward and King George. His acting was higly praised.

About this time, Stuart decided to come to America. It was only a few months later that he became a leading figure in the Universal western plant, registering a decided hit as a capable Scenario Editor.

His directorial career began with "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." Other pictures he made with Frank Crane are "Peace At Any Price," "Like Wildfire," "The Green Seal," and "Beloved Jim." Then he returned to Universal to make "The Gray Ghost." The World company wanted him, so he came to them to make "The Devil's Trail." He directed Christy Mathewson, beloved "Big Six" of the diamond in special releases. Later he handled the megaphone for Jess Willard, the then heavyweight champion.



And now Paton has returned to Universal. He was given a rousing welcome upon his arrival. His first picture was "Wanted At Headquarter," with Eva Novak. This production is remarkable for its novel night photography, in which Paton's skilled hand is evident. "The Torrent," the picture he is now completing, is said to be an excellent piece of work, ranking among his most impressive successes.

Paton is one of those who believes: "he who hesitates is lost." And yet, like all true Scots, he makes sure exactly what he wants and then goes after it stubbornly. Which is synonimous to saying he "gets it."

Take his last release: "Wanted at Headquarters." The wonderful night scenes and the excellent railroad scenes were way out of the ordinary. And they certainly were not easy to get. "We're going to have them in this picture, just the same," avowed Director Paton. So everyone got together and cooperated in beautiful style in order that they be secured. No effort as spared. But the results are commensurate with the time and energy, the worry and the anxiety that went with getting them just the way Paton was determined to have them.

Nothing is too difficult, is another Paton maxim. He spares no labors and so contagious is this unquenchable vigor of his that every member of his production staff and members of the technical departments at the Studio bend every fibre to accomplishing the end in view.

Keying the star to a high emotional pitch, inspiring her with the thoughts and the actions of the character she is portraying and giving her efforts the best photographic and lighting co-operation is another phase of the Paton method of production. But he is not a gruelling worker. He is one of those enviable few who get great results without unnecessary waste of time and energy. The oncoming year should be another successful one for Mr. Paton.

Norma and Constance

NORMA AND CONSTANCE TALMADGE will spend even a merrier Christmas than usual this year, and are about to begin an extraordinary Happy and Prosperous New Year, because 1921 finds them in possession of a contract to continue under the First National Banner for another three years, under terms so remarkable that it is said to be the largest individual transaction in all film history to date. With a deal involving twenty million dollars, Mr. Schenck can naturally afford to give his stars bigger and better productions than ever before, and has already bought no less than eight successful Broadway productions, paying anywhere between forty and seventy-five thousand dollars each for the picture rights alone.

Another milestone which the past year marks for the talented Talmadges, is that for the first time in their lives, they took a three months' vacation abroad, the party consisting of Mrs. Talmadge, Mr. Schenck, Norma, Constance and Natalie, their chums Anne Pallette, Dorothy Gish and Mrs. Gish.

Both the girls are quite unconcerned about the eminence they have achieved, the high altitude from which they could look down upon the lesser lights. The same camaraderie which exists in the family exists in the studio. They are interested in the outside life of every member of their companies. They love people; they love good times. Best of all they have ideals, and do not attempt to conceal them. They believe in people; they believe in things; they even believe in Santa Claus and fairies!

When asked about their plans for the coming year, Norma said she wanted to play dramatic, emotional roles, which have in them something more than just the opportunity to act, which besides being true character portrayals, would at the same time be helpful. "I have turned down a number of good stories," she said, "because I am not satisfied to have people see in my pictures entertainment only. I want them to always feel an underlying psychology in what I do, and I like a story with a purpose, a story that gets somewhere, a story with some sort of new idea or an old ideal."

When Constance was asked what sort of stories she wanted to do next year, she said: "Although no less than sixty manuscripts are submitted to me every week, it is exceedingly difficult to get exactly the kind of comedy I especially want. I enjoy making people laugh, secondly, because this type of work comes easiest and most naturally to me. I am not a highly emotional type. My sister could cry real tears over two sofa cushions stuffed into a long dress and white lace cap, to look like a dead baby, and she would do it so convincingly that nine hundred people out front, would weep with her. That is real art, but my kind of talent would lead me to bounce that padded baby up and down my knee with absurd grimaces that would make the same nine hundred people roar with laughter. You see in my way, I take my work quite as seriously as my sister does hers,—I would be just as in earnest about making the baby seem ridiculous, as she would about making it seem real. That, I think, is the secret of being funny on the speaking stage, as well as on the screen. One has to be serious in one's levity.

They agree that one must leave a great deal to the imagination on the screen because in the span of one short hour, it is often necessary to develop a character from girlhood to womanhood through three marriages and two divorces, and perhaps travel half way round the world, besides.

It looks like a big year, next year, for Norma and Constance Talmadge!

Holubar and Phillips

THOUGH he has produced but a single picture during the last year no producer has been busier than Allen Holubar, who is soon to give to the picture world what promises to be the film sensation of a decade—"Man, Woman, Marriage," starring pretty Dorothy Phillips.

The story was adapted to the screen by Holubar, who collaborated with Olga Scholl in its preparation. More than six months were consumed in actual shooting of this great picture and another two months were added to the whole in cutting and titling. "Man, Woman, Marriage" is to be released exclusively through Associated First National and will be road-showed in the best theatres of the nation.

Eminent motion picture critics, who have been permitted to see this wonderful production in its editing stages, have declared it to be the most wonderful picture ever presented on the screen. While the story deals with the relationship of man and woman it is not presented in the superficial sex method, which has so deluged the screen during the last season or so.

Holubar has gone straight to the heart of the situation and has dealt with sex antagonism, rather than sex attraction. Aside from presenting a stirring modern story the photoplay has been impregnated with spectacular retrospective views illustrative of woman's relationship toward man since the human race first sprung into existence.

Years ago when Allen Holubar was directing for Universal it was freely predicted that time would see him in the forefront of the ranks of master directors. The entire fan world, as well as producers and exhibitors, will remember Holubar's "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness." Following these came "Once To Every Woman," one of the best pictures of recent releases. Working upon his first independent production Holubar spared neither time nor expense to place upon the screen a picture which will undoubtedly be looked upon as a milestone in the progress of the cinematographic art.

For two years he had been gathering data for the story later prepared by the scenarist. From the moment the camera started grinding on the first scene Holubar knew exactly what he wanted to place upon the screen and exactly how he wished to do it.

In the entire nine reels the master director never lost an opportunity to inject a thrilling story with the human details of life. The story is a masterpiece of fiction founded upon fact and is a condensed history of the human race and the humanities of life.

The entire histrionic field could not have afforded a better star for this great story than Dorothy Phillips—the woman who gave Allen Holubar the inspiration for its origin. Miss Phillips long ago endeared herself to America's millions by her faithful interpretations under the direction of her author-director husband. Her work in Holubar's films before the latter became an independent producer convinced the screen world that she was one of the most talented actresses of the shadow world.

Her work in "Man, Woman, Marriage" will undoubtedly place her well to the forefront in the screen's brightest constellation of stars.

"THREE SEVENS"

Tod Browning

TOD BROWNING, director, is now a name among artists. His excellent direction of "The Virgin of Stamboul," with Priscilla Dean, established him, without the semblance of a doubt, in the front rank. He is now busy directing Miss Dean in "Outside the Law," a gripping drama from his own pen.

Although "Outside the Law" must be categorized as a crook drama, its resemblance to the general run of underworld stories end with that classification. A tremendous wallop is delivered in the opening scenes, which show a gang fight in San Francisco's Chinatown. And from this point on the story speeds along with increasing suspense, the action sustaining the rapid star.

Browning does not exaggerate his situations. He does not have to. He is too much a student of life; too much the keen observer to have to resort to the amateurish weapon of the novice.

Tod is a man of many phases and varied talents. Only after years of experience did he consider himself capable, according to his own stringent standards, to assume the responsibilities going with "the megaphone." A director, Mr. Browning believes, is necessarily the master-mind of the play. He must draw from the star every bit of talent he or she may have. It is his skill and his ingenuity which often takes a poor theme, a mediocre actor, and binds them together so as to make the result a remarkable production.

Browning was born and educated in Louisville, Kentucky. He claims no relationship to Robert Browning—the poet!

Tod had a rather exciting sort of life in his early youth. He found the confines of home a trifle irksome, so at an early age he ran away and some time later became a ballyho-artist with the Manhattan Fair and Carnival company.

At the age of eighteen, the boy became a jockey, riding for Virginia Carroll, a prominent Southern turfman. At twenty-one he was an entertainer—singing, dancing and otherwise adding to the general gaiety in a "river show" on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. Two years later, he formed a partnership with Roy C. Jones, and the two became popular in vaudeville.

It was several years later that Tod was offered a position with the D. W. Griffith company, in the good old Biograph days. From an actor, he graduated to an assistant director, and then it was only a step to becoming a full fledged director.

He directed for Biograph, Majestic-Reliance, Fine Arts; Metro's "The House in the Mist;" Bluebird-Universal, "The Deciding Kiss," "The Brazen Beauty;" Universal, "The Wicked Darling," "An Exquisite Thief," "The Unpainted Woman," "Petal on the Current," "Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie," "The Beautiful Beggar," and "The Virgin of Stamboul," the last two starring Miss Dean. And now it is Browning's own pen that has provided a third starring vehicle for this young lady!—"Outside the Law."

Browning's varied experiences, his deep insight into and sympathetic knowledge of humanity is of great advantage to him in his work. He never inserts any cheap, or any amateurish comedy in his pictures. Stored away in his mind are countless photographic incidents of humorous things he has observed—right straight through a career starting as a ballyho artist and rising to a position of director artist with Universal.

There is much to be expected from Tod Browning, writer and director, and from the pictures he will produce, during the ensuing year of 1921.

Rollin Sturgeon

ROLLIN STURGEON has put across Carmel Myers in her last two successes: "In Folly's Trail" and "The Gilded Dream." He is now at work directing her in a third picture, "Cinderella Jane," by Marjorie Benton Cooke, which will be released late in January, 1921.

Sturgeon was one of the first scenario writers in the business, creating that position with Vitagraph. Then he began directing as well as writing.

Some of the stars he has been instrumental in making are Corinne Griffith, Jane Novak, Alma Rubens, Mary Anderson, and Florence Vidor. Mildred Harris Chaplin is another who received her start with Mr. Sturgeon.

Sturgeon directed the first of the great "out-of-doors" pictures, producing "God's Country and the Woman." He was pioneer in this type of the photoplay; since that time many have followed in his footsteps and many have been the beautiful pictures featuring Nature in all her quixotic glory.

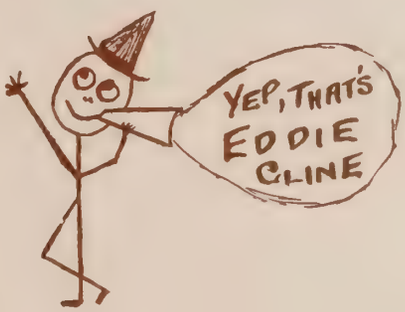
Other Vitagraph productions directed by him are "The Chalice of Courage" and "Through the Wall." For Lasky he successfully launched "The Petticoat Pilot."

Then commenced his very successful career with Universal. He directed "Destiny," with Dorothy Phillips; "Pretty Smooth" with Priscilla Dean, a picturization of Bayard Veiller's "The Chatterbox"; directed Monroe Salisbury in "Hugon the Mighty" and "Sundown Trail" put across Tsuri Aoki in "The Breath of the Gods." In succession there follow the last two Carmel Myers pictures: "In Folly's Trail" and "The Gilded Dream."

Sturgeon was born in Rock Island, Illinois. He attended the Northwestern University and Harvard University. He was trained for the law and worked in his father's office until 1909, when he was induced to enter pictures. That yielding to such an inducement was wise is indicated by the results of his highly commendable record, both as writer and director.

Sturgeon is a magnetic type of director—no excitement nor flurry where he is in charge. Those who have been fortunate enough to come under his direction are unanimous in their praise of his skill and his equanimity of temper! Sturgeon finds that a calm demeanor is usually more conducive to increased efforts than "hair tearing and black looks."

Despite the countless details that accompany directorial work and the hundreds of momentary slips that usually take place during the production of a picture, Sturgeon rarely, if ever, is delayed in going right ahead with a scene when he has called his players "to action."



This is an old-time complaint against directors—wasting time. Sturgeon has developed an economic time-saving system to a high point of efficiency. That is why a Sturgeon picture goes right through without jarring halts and long idle lapses, during which time the actors are forced to smother their impatience and keep a smile going overtime.

Perhaps this explains, too, the fact that Sturgeon always has his pictures ready on time. There is no speeding up at the last minute; keeping the players on the set from early morning to late night. He plans his scenes at the studio and at home. When he is on the set, the action already mapped out is rehearsed and "all set" is the pass word.

There is no doubt that in Rollin Sturgeon, Universal has one of the best directors in the field.

Bert Lytell

BERT LYTELL, athletic and handsome young Metro star, began his screen career in Herbert Brenon's "The Lone Wolf," scoring a big success as the clever crook. His Metro pictures, beginning with "The Trail to Yesterday" and ending with "Easy to Make Money," established him as a strong drawing card with ever-increasing followings, so that after his return from military, he was engaged by Metro to play in big special productions. The first of these was "Lombardi, Ltd.", based upon the stage success by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. Then followed "The Right of Way," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Price of Redemption," and "The Misleading Lady." Lytell is now busy completing, under Maxwell Karger's direction, "The Messenger from Mars," said to be one of the most aspiring of this popular star's pictures.

Lytell was born in New York City and, although some of his boyhood was spent in the West, he was raised in the atmosphere of the playhouse. Rightly so, for Lytell comes of a family of stage players. Both on his mother's and father's side this family have been prominent in the theatre; and even further back, Bert's grandfather, J. K. Mortimer, was one of Augustin Daly's most prominent players.

Lytell was educated at Upper Canada College, Toronto. Then he came to New York, eager to embark upon a dramatic career, and at the age of seventeen made his stage debut in Newark, New Jersey, in the old Civil War melodrama, "Cumberland '61."

Since then, Bert Lytell's stage experience has been extensive. He has had the leading role in practically every big play produced during his lifetime. He headed his own stock company in San Francisco and in Albany, New York, and has appeared with stock organizations in Rochester, New Orleans, Honolulu, Troy, Los Angeles, Portland, Mo., and Boston.

Mr. Lytell is one of the many prominent stage and screen folk who received training as members of the famous Alacazar Stock Company in San Francisco, under the management of Fred Belasco, brother of David Belasco. He played several seasons there as leading man, opposite Marjorie Rambeau, Evelyn Vaughan, and Bessie Barriscale. Subsequently, he appeared as a featured player in a number of New York stage successes. His most recent Broadway triumph was in "Mary's Ankle," in which production he was co-starred with Irene Fenwick.

Bert has a most impressive list of successes attached to his name—both on the stage and the screen. But it is on the screen that his most notable successes have lately occurred. The latest Kargar-Lytell production, "The Messenger from Mars," the London stage play in which Sir Charles Hawtrey starred, adapted for the screen by Arthur Zellner and Arthur Maude, is said to be one of biggest productions that have yet come from the Metro plant.

Indeed, Lytell is a star of the brightest magnitude and is unanimously declared a favorite by the fans. Because of his histrionic skill and the breadth of his abilities, he has been given stories that require the skill of the artist to sympathetically and accurately portray. Take "The Price of Redemption"; Bert runs the gamut of the emotions in this gripping drama. From a brave young officer, to a fashionable, drink-loving young Englishman, to a drug fiend living in a loathsome hut in India, and thence to a rejuvenated man, healthy and eventually wealthy—in love.

The coming year will, without any doubt at all, be a remarkable series of triumphs for him.

Mahlon Hamilton

MAHLON HAMILTON, the splendid artist who enacts one of the leading roles in "Earthbound," that spiritualistic motion picture now creating such a stir throughout the country, is now to be seen in the featured role of "Half A Chance," his first big release following "Earthbound."

Hamilton has a long list of successes to his credit, but the very near future will hold still bigger ones. He will be seen shortly opposite Blanche Sweet in "That Girl Montana," and then follows "The Truant Husband," featuring Betty Blythe and Mr. Hamilton.

Hamilton was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and educated there, and at Maryland Agriculture College.

His stage career includes such successes as "The Great Question," "Israel," "The Chaperon," and others.

Like many other well known stage actors, Hamilton was attracted by motion pictures. He left the stage. Now he is almost a confirmed "picturite," and, we wager, one soon to be regularly starred "on his own."

He co-starred in the Pathe serial, "The Hidden Hand;" played in "The Danger Mark," "The Death Dance;" in various Kitty Gordon productions; with Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs;" with Anita Stewart in "Kingdom in Dreams," "In Old Kentucky;" in "Ladies Must Live;" with Blanche Sweet in "The Deadlier Sex" and "That Girl Montana;" with the Brentwood Films in "The Third Generation." Lastly comes "Earthbound," in which Hamilton's acting was one of the high spots of the production; "Half A Chance," his latest feature picture; and "Truant Husbands," as co-star with Miss Blythe.

Mr. Hamilton is very well liked by the fans. He is a handsome type of man, with strong, sharply chiseled features. He is six foot, has light brown hair and blue eyes that are wont to glitter and gleam in response to his every emotion. The rest of his smooth shaven face can be inscrutable; but the expressive eyes are sure giveaways.

Hamilton is of that class of actor who fairly exhales breeding and poise. There is a powerful, yet quiet, forcé to his work that attracts. He fairly dominates a scene, not obtrusively nor violently; but with unassuming naturalness. This is true of his work in "Earthbound" and even of his leads opposite well known stars. He has never registered as "just a leading man." Always as a personality and an actor to be reckoned with. And his day is fast arriving, for now he is drilled in the workings of the screen and he knows camera angles and camera values. This knowledge reflects, visibly, upon the screen. At least it is to be seen in his every action; never does he appear in an awkward light; never is his makeup poor. It is these little things—little, insofar as the layman's understanding goes—that serves to make or ruin an actor.

In "Earthbound," Hamilton was chosen from the many whose names suggested themselves as possible for the role because of his histrionic skill and charm of personality. Many actors do not mean to be flurried and spasmodic. Yet they are. Hamilton is anything—has ever been anything—but this, and so Director T. Hayes Hunter felt absolute confidence in his masterly handling of a delicate role. Mahlon Hamilton should look forward to 1921 as one of his brightest years.

Mack Sennett

MACK SENNETT has practically completed "A Small Town Idol," which is to be his first Associated Producers release. It's another side-splitting Sennett comedy—a $1,000,000 one, with more than two reels of fun. The three featured players are Ben Turpin, that cross-eyed disciple of drollery, Marie Provost, Phyllis Haver, and Charley Murray. "It's a sure fire winner," chuckles Associated Producers.

Relative to his forthcoming activities as a producer of comedy Mr. Sennett says:

"My own devotion to romantic comedy and the dedication of the Sennett organization to the presentation of plots of authentic character is, I believe, sufficient evidence as to what I feel regarding screen literature.

"While I have no intention of abandoning hilarious comedy, I am certain that the picture plays the public is demanding of producers is a quality of story-telling not hitherto revealed to any great extent.

"Romantic comedy covered the field, providing legitimate impulses against which to place humor and extravagant fun. Picture plays in this respect then become akin to life, which is, as everybody knows, a sequence of smiles and tears. All smiles and no tears mean falsity; all tears and no smiles spell discussion. It is in the happy balance of these that romantic comedy will be maintained in public appeal."

Mr. Sennett's plans for 1921 are, we are given to understand, of the greatest interest to comedy producers, to exhibitors, and eventually, as usual, to fans. There will be a series of comedies for Associated Producers and also a series of two-reelers, for the time being at all events, for Famous Players-Lasky.

The first of the big Mack Sennett Associated Producers productions will be "A Small Town Idol," one of those delicious comedy mix-ups so characteristic of the clean-cut brand bearing Sennett's name.

Mack Sennett's screen career began with the old Biograph company, where he appeared in many comedies and dramas. He was recognized as a very able actor. In 1912 Mr. Sennett organized the Keystone Film Company, with the assistance of Ad. and Charles Kessel and Charles Baumann. He took his company to Los Angeles, establishing headquarters there, and there has been ever since.

Mack Sennett has been responsible for many stars, for the number is almost legion who have received their start and their "screen education" under his supervision. Mabel Normand and Gloria Swanson rank foremost among stars who began with Sennett.

He is now supervising two-reel comedies for Mack Sennett-Paramount release as well as two-reelers and five or more reelers for Sennett-Associated Producers.

Among the many hilarious Sennett releases of an early date are: "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin," "Back to the Kitchen," "Salome vs. Shenandoah," "His Last False Step," and many others.

Special productions include: "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," and "Down on the Farm," the last still holding its own as a "big timer" in comedy circles.

Those interested in comedy and its various phases turn as a matter of course to Mack Sennett, for he is the master hand who has fashioned and been largely instrumental in moulding comedy to its present high-class level.

The ensuing year will see many big special Mack Sennett-Associated Producers releases. This means an increase in chuckles and box-office receipts.

Wesley Ruggles

WESLEY RUGGLES, well known director, has among his most recent directorial successes: "Love," and "The Leopard Woman," starring Louise Glaum. Some of his other outstanding pictures for 1920 are: "The Winchester Woman," starring Alice Joyce; "Piccadilly Jim," "Sooner or Later," and "Desparate Hero," starring Owen Moore; and "Mother Love," with Alice Lake.

These pictures were made after Mr. Ruggles' return from France in the American Army, in which he served two years. To turn a hand to the megaphone after wielding the bayonet in "No Man's Land" was quite a jump, but Wesley did it—did it with artistic deftness. He is recognized now as one of the elite in the youthful band of directors forging to the front with increasing speed. Like the most ambitious and the ablest of his profession, Mr. Ruggles is working toward a set goal—to be the producer of his own pictures.

Not only does Wesley want to be the producer of his own pictures in thought, but he has negotiations under way now which may result in his becoming so in actuality.

Wesley Ruggles was born in Los Angeles. He has had rather extensive experience on the stage, having seen "active service" in musical comedy, stock, and repertoire.

About this time, he became interested in the screen and all its possibilities. He forsook the stage for the screen and connected with Keystone. He directed several Sydney Chaplin comedies, among them "Her Painted Hero." Then comes one of Charlie Chaplin's most interesting successes, also directed by Mr. Ruggles: His famous burlesque on "Carmen."

This picture not only put Mr. Chaplin across in great style, but it established young Wesley as a director. His next move was to go to Vitagraph. There he directed "For France," "The Agony Column," "The Winchester Woman," numerous O. Henry specials, and Bobby Conolly specials.

His directorial career was abruptly interrupted by the call to arms. Ruggles was absent from the studios two years, during which time he fought as only a red-blooded American can fight on the other side.

Returning to America, Ruggles started in to direct at once, making such pictures as "Piccadilly Jim," "Sooner or Later," "Desperate Hero," "Mother Love," "The Leopard Woman," and "Love," the last two starring Louise Glaum, being remarkable for the audacity of their lavishness, the realism of the character portrayals—the sure hand of Director Ruggles being seen throughout.

Here is a director who has made a name for himself with that unprepossessing quiet of the man who is sure of himself and of what he is doing, what he WILL do.

When the time comes for the release of the first Wesley Ruggles Production—and perhaps the time is not distant—the trade, and the exhibitor will know precisely what to expect in the way of high class pictures, excellent direction, beautiful sets and lightings, and highly skilled acting. The fans, too, will know, for in these days of the general magazine story about motion pictures and the doings of motion picture people the director is coming in for his share of credit on an increasingly larger scale. Wesley Ruggles' name has not appeared on a poor picture. We venture to say it never will.

Charles Giblyn

"TIGER'S CUB," "The Mountain Woman and "The Thief," directed by Charles Giblyn, with another feature production in preparation, the first year's work making photoplays for Fox Corporation, is fast approaching, although when the year of 1920 closes it will not mark twelve months since the name of Charles Giblyn was annexed to the representative list of Fox directors. It was in February of 1920 that the exteriors of "Tiger's Cub" were made—Mr. Giblyn's first picture for Fox—one that met with a warm reception everywhere despite the realistic "snowbound" country supplying the locale for filming of George Goodchild's gripping story. "Beautiful exterior scenes of the great, snow-covered hills of Alaska, with interiors of the rough cabins to match. Interest all the way through. Humor and pathos combine to hold an audience's attention," is a fitting tribute to the director and an accurate description of his initial Fox picture, starring Pearl White. Another pertinent comment points out "'Tiger's Cub' is expertly made, human in feeling and powerful in its melodramatic moments."

Of "Tiger's Cub" Wid's Daily was wont to say: "Direction—unusually capable. Inasmuch as Director Charles Giblyn always seems to come through with a picture replete with fine production values, the credit for this may well be his."

Upon the completion of "Tiger's Cub," Mr. Giblyn was not destined to proceed in the usual way of finishing one task entirely before beginning upon another. Instead, he was rushed off to more exterior locations, this time in and about Pineville, Kentucky, where he teamed the natural requisites of the story with the dramatic abilities of Pearl White, and produced what is said to be one of the greatest pictures of its kind, "The Mountain Woman." It was adapted from Charles Neville Buck's widely read novel, "Pagan of the Hills."

Before cutting "The Mountain Woman," and without any respite whatever, Mr. Giblyn found himself facing the grave responsibility of making the screen version of Henri Bernstein's "The Thief," the play which created a furore in Paris, London and New York, some years ago. Referring to the French play in screen form it has been truthfully said that "Mr. Giblyn retained good continuity with strong climaxes and well-handled suspense in a difficult undertaking."

Soon will "The Mountain Woman" take its place among Pearl White features, directed by Charles Giblyn. While he has been engaged completing final work upon "The Thief" and upon the story of the Kentucky mountaineers, Miss White has been under other direction, but it is understood Mr. Giblyn will direct another Pearl White starring vehicle in the near future.

Before joining the Fox organization, Mr. Giblyn has established an enviable reputation as a director, his distinctive methods having won him merited recognition. It is always safe to look for an artistic interpretation with Mr. Giblyn at the helm, since the years of devotion to his chosen profession has established him among the foremost directors of motion pictures. He has every faith, every belief in the continued growth of the industry, to which he has pledged his life's work. He was one of the founders of The Motion Picture Directors' Association, and his activities in the industry reflect his progress and echo praise of his accomplishment.

E. K. Lincoln

E. K. LINCOLN, a popular exemplar of cinematic art, appeared in three big 1920 successes, "Desert Gold," "The Inner Voice," and "What Is Love."

Mr. Lincoln says that his year's happenings can be summed up like this: "Work hard seven months and loaf harder the other five!"

Which is explained in terms of real estate. E. K. has a beautiful estate in the Berkshire Hills, located near Great Barrington, Mass. That is why he has never signed a yearly contract. After working very hard for seven months, he betakes himself and his belongings to his residence in the Berkshires and for five months puts dull care, Kliegs and all other studio paraphernalia behind him. "This is life as she should be lived."

Mr. Lincoln owns the Greenacre Kennels, his dogs having won in all the big eastern shows in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, New Haven, Fairfield, Danbury, Newark. He has a grand total of one hundred and twenty-eight dogs, including more champions than in any other United States kennel. He made a record of having over sixty dogs at a charity show in New York City.

E. K. also owns the Lincoln Studio at Grantwood, New Jersey. He has never worked in it, which is quite accidental and not purposeful exile.

Mr. Lincoln believes in cheery companionship. Thus it is not surprising to find him a member of every theatrical club in New York: The Players, Lambs, Friars, Green Room, Actors Fund, Equity, and Actors Order of Friendship.

E. K. Lincoln was born in Johnstown, Pa. His stage career includes four years in stock. Then come "The College Widow," "Strongheart," "The Squaw Man," "The Virginian," and "The Woman."

His screen career includes many notable productions, among them: "For the Freedom of the World," "Lafayette, We Come," and "Stars of Glory." He has been with World, Goldwyn, and Perret Productions. Among interesting releases distributed by Hodkinson are "Fighting Through," and "Desert Gold." His most recent, with S. L. Pictures are "Virtuous Men" and "The Inner Voice."

E. K. Lincoln is specially adept in interpreting western, society, and high class character roles. His is a splendid physique for such roles—"a six footer," black hair, hazel eyes, with strong, clean cut features.

Because Mr. Lincoln admits to spending five months in comparative idleness at his estate in the Berkshires, this statement should not be taken at its face value. A man of Lincoln's active inclinations cannot be idle. And the true woodsman learns much that is translatable into the language of the screen. Witness the inspirations that come with a clear mind, a strong body, and good health.

Lincoln has always been something of an out-of-doors man. The poignant sweetness of the woods, the purity of the air, the crunch of grass and brambles under foot—these are things which appeal to Lincoln, which harken to an instinctive something that is the echoing song of primitive man, the lurking whisper of days when all life depended upon the hunt and when the survival of the fittest lay in man's ability to wrest from the jungle-like wilderness nourishment sufficient to exist. This love for the Great Out-Doors is stronger in some than in others. It is very strong in Mr. Lincoln, and fortune favors him in granting him an estate as beautiful as that in the Berkshires.

The coming year will certainly see E. K. Lincoln in photoplays of interest and of the usual box office value. He is a favorite with the fans—rightly so, for there is quality in his acting and great charm radiating from his personality.

MARGARITA FISHER

The Season's Greetings

George L. Sargent

"THE BROADWAY BUBBLE," "The Whisper Market," and "The Prey," three pictures among Vitagraph fall releases announced, via the screen and exploitation, "Directed by George L. Sargent."

Another, soon to be ready for distribution, and predicted to surpass even the aforementioned successes, is "It Isn't Being Done This Season." It is the third in which Corinne Griffith has appeared, under Mr. Sargent's direction, "The Prey" being a starring vehicle for Alice Joyce.

What the critics have said about Mr. Sargent's achievements is indicative of what may be expected of him in the coming year. Some of the things said "right out in print" might well flatter a much older and more experienced director:

"The Prey belongs in the class of very good pictures," said the Moving Picture World and the Exhibitor's Trade Review opined that "George L. Sargent has preserved an unbroken continuity; delicate handling eliminates possible sex suggestion and the action is speedy throughout."

His second Vitagraph picture "The Whisper Market" fared comparatively as well, but in his third picture, and the second in which Corinne Griffith was the star of a Sargent directed picture, his work met with unanimous praise. "The Broadway Bubble" was a triumph for both star and director.

Wid's Daily commented "Direction very fine—shows considerable novelty in treatment. Variety paid the director a worth-while compliment in referring to his work by "Special credit goes to George L. Sargent for the solid competence with which he has handled it." And Photoplay remarked "George L. Sargent's direction is sensible and at times spirited."

So much for George Sargent, who had not been directing for some time, previous to his affiliation with Vitagraph, because:

Determined to return to the direction of pictures, George L. Sargent, upon his discharge from the army of the U. S. A. sought an engagement. Fortunately he is a rather far-seeing sort of man, and was not forced to accept any old "job" which presented, and a part of his determination anyway was to re-enter the profession with a new vigor, and let the months which had elapsed since he laid down the megaphone, prove that he had not forgotten the right means of using it. So he was at "liberty" long enough to become irksome, but one day came the opportunity awaited. He was engaged to direct Alice Joyce in "The Prey," his first picture for Vitagraph. He was then assigned the direction of Corinne Griffith with the result of "The Whisper Market" and the heralded "Broadway Bubble." Another will be among early 1921 releases, and when "It Isn't Being Done This Season" is ready for distribution, it is not yet known what Mr. Sargent's next activities will be, except that he will continue to direct pictures for Vitagraph.

What constitutes a director who can turn out the kind of work credited George Sargent? Sometimes it is fundamental training, coupled with a natural and cultivated ability. Mr. Sargent had had the kind of training that lasted through a war and through determination against accepting an assignment which he, in his own heart, did not believe he could do justice.

But returning to the "makings" of such a director, let us reflect upon his early days—even College days, where it really commenced when he became stage director of the amateur performances given by his class, and finally general director for College entertainments. Time was, thereafter, yet now faded into days gone by, when George Sargent was stage director for Cohan and Harris—their "The Fortune Hunter" numbering thereamong. And George L. Sargent also answers roll call as a member of M. P. D. A.

Albert Parker

LAST year, Albert Parker was recognized as a very good director. This year he is recognized as the producer of several Norma Talmadge successes and as the highly capable artist who will shortly prepare a special series of ALBERT PARKER PRODUCTIONS for Joseph Schenck.

Parker not only directs his pictures; he usually adapts them for the screen. "The Branded Woman," starring Norma Talmadge, directed by Mr. Parker, was adapted by Miss Anita Loos and Mr. Parker. "Playing the Game," the second Norma Talmadge picture which Mr. Parker has just competed editing, was adapted by Paul Anthony Kelly and Mr. Parker. This last production is said to be another, if not a better, picture, typifying the usual finished product coming from the Schenck studio and bearing the name of Norma Talmadge, star, and Albert Parker, director.

"In "Playing the Game," to be released in January, 1920, there is a happy mixture of humor and pathos. Mr. Parker excels in this sympathetic presentment of human beings in all the temperamental see-saws of their moods.

One of the first big pictures directed by Albert Parker was "Arizona," starring Douglas Fairbanks. To direct a man like Fairbanks in a picture of such rapid-firing action as "Arizona" is a test of any man's directorial abilities. Yet Parker's skill and his humorous touches sent this production over big. He was engaged to handle Fairbanks in his next production: "The Knickerbocker Bucaroo." Again Parker came through, and the picture appearing under the Albert Parker signature was one of the best Fairbanks has ever been seen in.

Mr. Parker's next picture was "The Eyes of Youth," with Clara Kimball Young. He adapted the screen version of this celebrated play, building his story with due attention to the star, the sets, and the locale.

About this time Mr. Schenck began to cock a thoughtful eye on this Albert Parker man. Knowing his own mind and being sure of his man, he engaged Mr. Parker to direct Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman."

Mr. Parker had now come to a decision regarding various things a director should do. One of them was to adapt his own pictures, or else collaborate in the adaptations.

"A director bears the brunt of a picture's success or failure," propounded Mr. Parker. "Adaptations have a great deal to do with this. Often do directors have to re-write the scripts prepared by continuity writers. After all, if anybody knows about the star's strong points and weak points, about sets, about action, it is the director. I am firmly convinced of the director's wisdom in preparing his own script.

So it is not surprising to note that Mr. Parker in collaboration with Paul Anthony Kelly prepared the script for "Playing the Game," the new Norma Talmadge picture.

Besides doing a special series of ALBERT PARKER PRODUCTIONS for Mr. Schenck, Mr. Parker will find time to direct Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through," Jane Cowl's memorable stage success.

Justine Johnstone

JUSTINE JOHNSTONE is the sixth Realart star—the unanimous choice of artists, writers, and executives of the Realart company. Previously she had been known only to theatre goers, with whom she was a great favorite—still is in fact, despite her prolonged absence in the realms of the silent drama.

So there is no wonder in the statement that 1920 has been a banner year for Justine Johnstone. She is declared "the most beautiful girl in America." If there be skeptics, let them but see Miss Johnstone, and they will capitulate without an iota of resistance.

Miss Johnstone has completed two pictures for Realart: "Blackbirds," which has already been released, and "Out of the Chorus," adapted from "Emergency House" by Sidney Morgan, which has not yet been released.

In her rendition of the internationally famous smuggler in "Blackbirds," Miss Johnstone has shown that she is an actress worthy of stardom.

In her second picture Miss Johnstone has the role of a famous Broadway dancer who does not realize that there is anything else in the world but bright lights and tinsel until she meets a young doctor who loves her. It is then she finds her heart and realizes that there is equally as much sorrow as joy in the world.

Miss Johnstone is anxious to make pictures with as varied roles as possible. She wants to portray the real American girl,—of the different types which America boasts. Realart will do all in its power to give Miss Johnstone the vehicles she wants. Realart officials feel that there is nobody more capable of portraying the American girl than Justine Johnstone herself, a typical American girl.

Justine Johnstone has reached stardom solely on her own merits and her desire to "make good." It wasn't so very long ago that her captivating smile peered out at you from magazines and newspapers as the most beautiful girl in the "Follies." During intervals in her "Follies" engagements, she supported the Castles at the New Amsterdam with Ed Wynn in "Over the Top," and appeared as a leading woman and star in several other stage successes. And just as she had reached the heights she decided that she really was not quite ready for stardom, so she left the bright lights for quiet and hard work with a neighborhod stock company. Here she stayed for almost a year, playing every part from Cinderella to Camille. When she returned to New York she felt she was fit and ready. It was then that Realart Pictures offered her a starring contract.

Miss Johnstone has often been called "the most beautiful girl in America" and she rightly deserves the appellation. Only this month, Paul Helleu, the famous French etcher who is now here to draw the most beautiful women in America, told Miss Johnstone that she was the most beautiful girl he had ever seen. Miss Johnstone will sit for M. Helleu very shortly.

The camera has proven itself quick to catch Miss Johnstone's exquisite beauty. With her talent, beautiful face and form, and sumptuous wardrobe, Miss Johnstone promises to be one of the screen's greatest successes.

Those who have been convertd to Justine Johnstone admirers anticipate with interest her forthcoming releases. A good lead for the exhibitor.

Margarita Fisher

IT is good news to learn that petite Margarita Fisher, she of American Film Co. fame, has left that concern to organize her own independent company. Miss Fisher is now in New York completing her plans, and work on the first Margarita Fisher Production will begin shortly.

Among Miss Fisher's recent pictures for American are: "Their Mutual Child," "The Week End," a clever Cosmo Hamilton story, and "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver." In all, she, as the star, received the usual commendatory compliments for her individual work.

Unfortunately, not all of Miss Fisher's stories have been on a par with her ability. From now on, however, Miss Fisher will devote much time to the careful selection of stories. We may look to see this capable star in pictures particularly suited to her charms and talents. There is a sweetness about Miss Fisher's work which endears her to the most blase of audiences; a gaiety, a cheeriness, a radiating "sunniness."

Margarita Fisher was born in Missouri Valley, Iowa. At the age of eight, she was perfectly at home on the stage and could lisp her part with as much pertness as the best of them. And also at this age Miss Margarita was given to outbursts of temperament which shamed the Divine Sarah at her best!

Miss Fisher has been with the American Film Company for several years. In fact, this was about the first company she was associated with. Among her very early pictures are: "The Quest," and "Miracle of Life." With Equitable: "The Dragon," and with Pollard Pictures Plays: "Pearl of Paradise," "Miss Jackie of the Navy," "The Little Girl Who Wouldn't Grow Up," "The Butterfly Girl," and "The Devil's Assistant." Her latest American Film Company releases are: "Their Mutual Child," "The Week End," and "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver."

Miss Fisher is unusual in many ways. The first one may be said to be her willingness to share the limelight with others. Often she has absolutely refused to go on with a scene if the director stubbornly insisted in carrying out the action planned. "Why should I stand upstage?" questioned brown-eyed Margarita, with something of a flash in their depths. "He's equally as important here as I am and I refuse to be a co-partner in any such high-handed doings as playing upstage all by myself." And she never was. And also at this age, Miss Margarita was given to outbursts. Which explains why so many leading men who played with Margarita Fisher received their first real chance to show "what was in them."

The cast for the initial Margarita Fisher Production will be chosen with a view to talent, as well as types. "I want people who can really act," asserted Miss Fisher. "I don't want those who are only capable of playing up to the star. Individuality on the screen has not been emphasized near enough. At least in the Margarita Fisher Productions it will be."

This means that not only will the stories be of unusual worth but the cast as well. "And direction is another important consideration," is another Margarita Fisher item. "I want for a director a man who is schooled in the fundamentals of directorial work, but also one who is creative, who can dilate on an original idea and make of it something really worth while. That's my idea of a director." And trust Miss Fisher to carry out her ideas.

John S. Robertson

AMONG the highest of the "high lights" of the motion picture year, has been the success of the screen version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which was produced by John S. Robertson, starring John Barrymore.

Mr. Robertson had already achieved distinction as a director of good taste, one who told his screen story with a directness, proving his sure sense of drama, but when "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" was released, John S. Robertson took his place among the foremost producers of the day.

Especially gratifying must have been the reception given Mr. Robertson's work, depicting Robert Louis Stevenson's story, in England. There it was hailed with the same tremendous success that it enjoyed in our own United States, there, where Englishmen are properly jealous of one of their greatest writers.

St. John Ervine, author of the recent stage successes "John Ferguson" and "Jane Clegg," commented upon the great ability with which this masterpiece of Stevenson's was produced, and added: "It was undoubtedly the most remarkable film I had ever seen projected on the screen."

In an interview given upon his arrival in New York, Henry Arthur Jones insisted that it was seeing "the screen classic," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," that convinced him of the value of the screen as a medium for a great story telling and induced him to enter the field of writers for the screen.

But a more practical reward for the director's work came when the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation gave him the opportunity of working out his ideas in special productions, the first of which is to be "Sentimental Tommy."

Material for the story was absorbed from Barrie's delightful fiction, "Sentimental Tommy" and "Tommy and Grizel," the adaptation for the film play being made by Josephine Lovett.

Barrie's story is unusual in its character development and human interest, and the "Barrie" touches are said by those who have seen the unfinished product of the screen version, to be carried out with characteristic appeal.

"This poor devil of a Tommy would always be noble and heroic," said Mr. Robertson in discussing the interpretation of the title role, "but it is only when flying on the wings of too vivid imagination that he can reach the heights and when the flight is ended, it is those he loves best, who suffer. But Tommy finds a way out." And recalling the story, it seems "Tommy" could always "find a wye."

"'Sentimental Tommy' is not blatant 'movie material,'" explained Mr. Robertson when talking of the play that is predicted to add many new laurels to his already large collection. "But to a director who enjoys subtlety and imagination it has infinite charm and possibilities, and to put 'Sentimental Tommy,' the most lovable, complex, and fascinating of Barrie's creations, on the screen, has been an undertaking worth while."

Mr. Robertson has almost completed the screen play, and what is more, he will cut it himself!

The titles will be taken from the books, for it is the director's ambition to make this a "Barrie film" throughout.

In speaking of his achievement of 1920 and the outlook upon 1921, Mr. Robertson said:

"Most helpful has been the degree of cooperation received from the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, first in regard to a cast, which took time to assemble, and then, in the building of the Scotch village, which in itself, was a gigantic undertaking. However, without that village, never could I have made the picture that I hope for in 'Sentimental Tommy,' for it supplied the proper atmosphere, and came the nearest to the realization of my ambitions in my career as a director."

Eddie Cline and Buster Keaton

EDDIE CLINE, director—Buster Keaton, star. An unbeatable combination. The four pictures thus far released through Metro prove it: "The Scarecrow," "Convict 13," "One Week," and "Neighbors." And Keaton has only started on his starring career.

Buster Keaton is famous in vaudeville as the son of the hilariously funny Keaton family act, comprising Keaton, pere; Keaton, mere, and Keaton, fils. Buster was the youngster who tumbled all over the place and caused gasps to mingle with laughs in dread anxiety for his innocent bones. But nothing ever happened, and the boy grew up still tumbling; he tumbled from the stage into pictures, and finally played with Fatty Arbuckle; then he tired of tumbling with somebody else, so he tumbled himself into a star, and his merry drolleries are knocking the blues back into abysmal depths for folk who are given to pull long faces.

George Ade, noted writer, was invited to see Buster Keaton in "One Week," which is something of a golf story. Mr. Ade went—not that he cares an iota about seeing screen comedies, but simply because he remembered that not so many years ago he chuckled mirthfully over the antics of one Buster Keaton. And so impressed was he with Keaton's appearance in "One Week," that he sat down and wrote a warm letter of praise to the Metro officials.

Keaton is not a comedy star who works along one track. Witness the variety of his four releases. Neither does he rely on acrobatic flopping about to put him over. He combines athletic skill with histrionic ability. The result is one varied performance after another. His sense of humor is another factor in his work. It is the sure fire sort. You can't help shrieking with laughter when Keaton, in his own inimitable way, commences to race through a picture and leads up to a side-splitting climax. Perhaps Buster Keaton's ability and his humor is "bred in de bone," for his father and mother were recognized laugh converters.

In Eddie Cline, Keaton has a director who understands comedy values as few directors do. Cline hails from Kenosha, Wisconsin. He was educated in Chicago. His screen career began with the old Keystone company.

Then the Keystone company, having lived a noble life, died a noble death, and the Mack Sennett-Paramount releases became famous. Eddie directed many of these successful comedies. Among some of his interesting motion picture collection of choicy titles are: "That Night," "The Kitchen Lady," "Those Athletic Girls," "A Bedroom Blunder," "Sheriff Nell's Comeback," "A School House Scandal," and "Training for Husbands."

About this time Buster Keaton decided to tumble to stardom, so he singled out Eddie Cline, and said: "Cum on," Eddie, "cum." And there was formed one of the memorable combinations of director and star—the combination that has given the exhibitor such highly satisfactory box office receipts; the fans such highly satisfactory laughs.

"Neighbors," the latest Keaton release, directed by Eddie Kline, is said to be clever both in story, in acting, and in direction. The first 1921 release of this pair is anticipated to remove, temporarily, the cares and anxieties of a Sultan.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS'

Christmas greetings to Justine Johnstone on her first star-release "Blackbirds"—which introduces a charming, accomplished new star in the person of Justine Johnstone.

Justine Johnstone's beauty is certainly brought out on the screen. In giving her "Blackbirds," Realart has provided her with a subject which is entirely appropriate to her interpretative ability. Judging from her portrayal here her forte is legitimate dramatic offerings. Her ingratiating personality and talent should establish an enthusiastic following.

& "SHELTERED DAUGHTERS"

William S. Campbell

WILLIAM S. CAMPBELL, director of the Chester Comedies, has just screened his latest production, "Four Times Foiled," which "sounds" up to Mr. Campbell's usual high-class comedy level.

Mr. Campbell is a pioneer of the motion picture industry, and in eighteen years devoted to the game he has done everything from ticket taking to acting. As a director he has been on the staffs of many of the biggest present-day organizations. He first conceived the idea of introducing to the camera the wild denizens of the jungle. Previously, animals had been attractions only in circus and vaudeville acts. Why not for screen work? pondered Mr. Campbell.

While on the staff of the William Fox organization, he originated and directed "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," a hilarious comedy that made an instantaneous hit, running steadily for four years. Even today there is a demand for it, and it may still be seen on the programs of small houses in the far corners of the country.

Shortly after this release there followed "Tame Lions and Wild Women." With this successful beginning, Mr. Campbell began to devote his attention almost entirely to trained animals for the screen. Today he is pre-eminent in his particular line, and few can boast of equal skill in handling animals and extracting the last giggle of comedy out of strange situations produced by the introduction of beasts of the jungle into the humdrum routine of domestic American life.

William S. Campbell's career began at the very bottom of the motion picture ladder. He broke into the profession as a boy. His first job was sweeping out four Los Angeles theatres and making himself useful in any kind of a way. From caretaker he was finally promoted to usher, and in this position he absorbed quite a bit of useful data concerning "us mortals," later used with humorous effect in his pictures. From usher he was promoted to operator, and then to doorman. At last he was entrusted with the management of a chain of theatres. While acting in this capacity he began writing scenarios. He was successful. So he abandoned the business end of the picture industry to join the production department. It was in 1908 that Mr. Campbell became identified with the Selig forces as a scenario writer. Here he had an opportunity to learn new angles of the business, for he tried his hand as cameraman, mastered the intricacies of developing and printing, and did his turn at cutting, editing, and title writing.

Campbell left Selig to go with the Sennett organization, where he worked for three years as a staff writer, and three more as a director.

He was with William Fox as a director in the early days of the Sunshine Comedies, and then went with Universal as a writer and director, originating the Joe Martin comedies and directing the first few of the series.

Mr. Campbell is now at the head of the Chester Studio busily engaged in turning out a new series of comedies built largely around Alexander, one of the most intelligent chimpanzees in captivity. Not only is he working with the chimpanzee, but also with trained lions, leopards, pumas, and monkeys. With his experience and skill in handling animals, he expects to make the new series of Chester productions real masterpieces of their kind.

The first of the Chester series, "Four Times Foiled," has already registered a pronounced hit, a second has been completed, and a third is well under way. Releases are planned for once a month during the coming year.

Hank Mann

ONE of the outstanding features of the past year in the comedy field, is the remarkable success of the Hank Mann Comedies, released by the Arrow Film Corporation.

These comedies consist of a series of twenty-six two-reel pictures, one of which is released every other week. Hank Mann and Al Santell, his director, share honors.

Hank Mann is New Yorker—born and bred, being a product of Morris High School, upon finishing which he continued life in a long stage and screen career. Previous to joining Mack Sennett forces he was in vaudeville, but forsaking the footlights for the Liegs, he found reward for his efforts and was featured in a number of comedies. Thereafter he went with Fox, and was featured in "Bon Bon Riot," and "His First Blow Out," following which he was engaged by Morris R. Schlank, producer, where he started with one-reel comedies and gradually built up a following, resulting in the two-reelers.

Al Santell, Mann's director came well recommended. Previous to entering the directorial field, Mr. Santell was a short-story author, besides being an architect. For the American, Mutual, Kalem, World, and Goldwyn he had directed, and among the featured players and stars in his pictures were Fay Tincher, Kathleen O'Connor, Neal Burns and Joan Hill. He also directed "Joe Martin," the human orang-otang when connected with Universal.

Now that these two experienced cinematicians have come together and are combining their years of work in a common effort to put across comedies of the rip-roaring variety, film fans are beginning to find it very enjoyable, indeed, to attend any theatre at which Hank Mann appears.

Santell and Mann work together with perfect cooperation. There are no "broils" of the out and out sort. Director and star know each other as it is given to few to know. They are great friends and it is not unusual for one of the two to hit upon a novel idea while away from the studio or while attending one of their own pictures at a local theatre.

"An idea," says Santell, "grows out of something else. That's why I like men about me who think individually; who don't hang upon me for every little word. The successful man is the man who sees a common, every-day occurrence, and builds something from it. He makes that incident the beginning instead of the end. There's the rub, you know. Knowing what is the beginning, what is the middle and what is the end.

"Perhaps many such occurrences that meet the eye of any pedestrian daily is the end of a series of events; the culmination of what has gone before. Now, if I am impressed with what I see, I take it as the idea. Oftentimes it is just the beginning. Then I build for the development of the story, or the middle, and from there to the end is a matter of sequences. This may meet with dubious head shakes, but figure it out for yourself. That's the surest way, in the long run, of routing doubt."

Hank Mann is a splendid type of comedian. He is well acquainted with every side of motion pictures, and his knowledge of how to put across comedy with the greatest effect is worthy of emulation. In fact, there are many today on the screen who have found Hank Mann one of the elite among the disciples of comedy.

The Hank Mann comedies are distributed by the Arrow Film Corporation—the people who "never go wrong" on the salability of a picture.

TOD BROWNING

DIRECTOR OF

"The Virgin of Stamboul"

AUTHOR AND DIRECTOR OF

"Outside the Law"

Vivienne Osborne

IT took several years, during which Vivienne Osborne was engaged in playing upon the legitimate stage, to lure the evident screen subject into pictures. Finally someone was successful and she was introduced into a new kind of work.

Needless to say she fell in rapidly, having many qualifications often lacking in aspiring young women, for Vivienne Osborne carries her attractiveness with ease and poise, is seemingly unspoiled and oblivious of her charms.

We first saw her in a feature under the direction of George Archainbaud known as "In Walked Mary," which was released by Pathe. In this, with a view to becoming thoroughly "screen broke," Miss Osborne accepted a part which required more acting than she will possibly have to do again, since it was the role of the "heavy" and she is as far from the "type" of one, as could be imagined. Yet, with the proper make-up and direction, she came through with laurels. It was during the run of "The Bonehead," a play of the legitimate stage, in which she was appearing that she was selected for the part in "In Walked Mary," and be it known that it was not the kind of "heavy role" which called upon Miss Osborne to get so far away from herself that she could not come back. Possibly it was a "light heavy."

Her next picture was in "The Restless Sex," in which her part stood out with unusual prominence, and then, when the Fox special "Over the Hill" started all New York talking of its brilliant success, we found Vivienne Osborne as one of the "girls" grown up and the one, and only one, for whom the audience has any sympathy.. In a picture like "Over the Hill" where the "mother" part predominates to such an extent, it is a compliment indeed, that the work of an ingenue, especially when the "family in the story" was a large one, stands out, as did Miss Orborne's. She was engaged many weeks upon this picture, and immediately following the showing was selected for the lead, opposite Gaston Glass in "Corporal Cameron of the Royal Mounted." Upon its release it is predicted that her career will begin with a beginning.

Miss Osborne, though not altogether willing to forsake the stage, has developed a startling interest in pictures. She studies them, studies the script, reads the story from which the adaptation is made, and thoroughly familiarizes herself with every detail, so that there will be no time lost in "getting into it," when the director is ready.

It is for this reason, that although a year ago she was offered a contract to "star," she refused it. Sounds almost unbelievable in these days of ambitious young ladies, aspiring to stardom. But it is true, nevertheless. Had it been an offer to star with one of the leading producing companies, Miss Osborne admits, it might have been different. She would have felt that if the work was with a director of great note, one who had his own business reputation to look after, she could take a chance upon his seeing that she qualified fully, but believing that there must be a firm foundation upon which to build, even for an actress of the screen, she preferred to work in smaller parts in big productions, absorbing all that came within her observation, laying that firm foundation for bigger, better parts, and finally, through gradual improvement becoming fitted to her own idea of what a star could be, believing the end will justify the means.

Vivienne Osborne is a "girl of the west," having spent most of her life in Spokane, Seattle and other cities of the State of Washington. Her stage career began there, where she played in stock in the two cities mentioned. She determined to reach New York some time, and finally gratified the desire via a circuit of vaudeville, which brought her east. An engagement upon the stage in a Broadway play followed, and the rest leave to 1921.

The R. Cecil Smiths

TWO eminent writers are known as the R. Cecil Smiths, Ella Stuart Carson, favorably identified as a writer for the screen herself, being Mrs. R. Cecil Smith. Therefore, this clever couple are signed individually and collectively, dating August, 1920, for a long term contract. It binds them to write exclusively for Selznick.

Says the erstwhile Miss Carson: "I think that we hold the record of a couple combining matrimony and business. We have been combining for fifteen years and are still living together—which is some record! Of course, we disagree, or rather, we fight. My name is Carson and Mr. Smith's grandfather's name was Jerry, and the Irish will out. But it is just a flash and then fade out.

"During the past year we have written twenty-four continuities, which is traveling some."

Indeed, there is no doubt about that. Furthermore, the kind of work coming from the pen of these writers is of a quality, with a capital "Q."

Ella Stuart Carson was born in Hebron, Indiana, educated at the University of Chicago and the Indiana State Normal School. Her early career embraces newspaper activities on the Chicago Tribune, the Chronicle, and the Albuquerque Journal. Miss Carson made her debut as a screen writer by adapting "Love Letters," and in rapid succession follow: "Mother's Boy," (Paramount); "The Wedding Ring," "The Yellow Back," "His World of Honor," "Keep Him Guessing," latest Selznick adaptations.

Seven years ago, R. Cecil Smith, although a recognized writer at the time, decided to learn just what was necessary to write successfully for the screen, and to do this he applied to Thomas H. Ince for a place in his organization, not as a writer, but as "atmosphere," or, as it was known on the lot in the old Inceville days, "bushwa." For several months, his life was a constant round of grease paint and crepe hair. But this was only a minor phase of his daily work, his main attention being devoted to keeping an eye on the directorial end, studying shots, lighting, grouping, and particularly the dramatic growth of a story.

After several months, Mr. Smith entered the scenario department in the capacity of reader. There he learned to distinguish between the good and the bad in picture construction, later acquiring the reputation of being one of the best judges of picture material in the business. From here it was only a step to the actual writing of stories, and Mr. Smith developed into one of the most versatile writers for the feature screen today.

In the past two years, Mr. Smith has had thirty-five produced feature pictures, among the best known being "Madcap Madge," the late Olive Thomas' first starring vehicle. Additional stories and adaptations are "The Price Mark," "Extravagance," ten stories for Dorothy Dalton, including numerous others for Charles Ray.

When Myron Selznick started to organize his scenario department for Selznick pictures, one of the first moves he made was to sign Mr. Smith and Miss Carson—the R. Cecil Smiths—to long term contracts. And this move has been one of far reaching advantage for Selznick, the R. Cecil Smiths' trademark being recommendation enough for a picture's merits.

Mildred Harris

"THE INFERIOR SEX," "Polly of the Storm Country," two pictures in which we have seen Mildred Harris, released via First National. These when Mildred Harris was starred under the name of Mildred Harris Chaplin. We will see the same Mildred Harris in "Habit" and in "The Woman in His House," both complete, awaiting also First National release.

If the latter two compare favorably with the first two, the year's work for Mildred Harris will speak for itself.

The career of this greatly admired star dates back some time when, judging from her present extreme youth, she must have played child parts, for while her introduction to the screen was in a Vitagraph production, it was followed by engagements with Reliance-Majestic and Fine Arts, long enough discontinued to have passed into motion picture history. Among the pictures in which she played in the earlier days are: "Old Folks at Home," "The Village Prodigal," "The Whim," "The Price of a Good Time," "The Men Who Dared God," "When a Girl Loves," "For Husbands Only," "Home," "Forbidden," which were previous to the four made for release via First National.

Diminutive and appealing is Mildred Harris, but in her determined little way she does not expect to allow anything to interfere with her career as an actress of the screen. She will soon be at work again after a lapse of considerable time.

Miss Harris is the sort of girl who makes the best of everything, leaving no opportunity to improve or develop her art unattended. Her eye for detail is noticeable in her selection of wardrobe. She is noted for good taste; she is identified with a style all her own.

While in a Canadian city early in the fall of 1920, Miss Harris was paid the most flattering attention by city officials and Dominion executives. Her popularity increased with every introduction.

Long before Mildred Harris won the recognition for ability that is hers today, newspapers and magazines devoted liberal space to predicting the achievements of what was then little more than a "little girl." More than two years ago one exhibitor stated: "Mildred Harris seems to be offering exhibitors, as a whole, more encouragement to advertise than any star now before the public. There have been many cases of uniformly good advertising that have resulted from the various pictures in which she is appearing, and it has been interesting to study the different twists that exhibitors in various sections of this part of the country have given the exploitation possibilities."

Upon the completion of her contract, calling for one more picture, Miss Harris is looking forward to the goal of the motion picture actress, her own company. This will all depend upon her power of resistance, since flattering offers for appearance upon the legitimate stage are at her refusal. It is believed, however, that she will continue in her work wherein she has earned the identity of one of the leading feminine players of the screen, even if at the same time she accepts an engagement on the stage.

Miss Harris, who has recently declared that she will no longer be called Mildred Harris Chaplin, states that she does not believe it can, for a moment, interfere with her progress. She was a star in her own right before she became Mrs. Chaplin. She feels she paved her own way to stardom upon the merits of her ability, and does not need the name of a male star to continue upon the same merit which won her professional recognition.

Emmett J. Flynn

EMMETT FLYNN, immediately after completing the editing of his production of Mark Twain's famous "Yankee in King Arthur's Court," commenced work on a new picture, a super-special entitled "Clung."

Mr. Flynn was the one director among many singled out to direct the screen version of "A Yankee in King Arthur's Court." And only after tirelessly weighing Mr. Flynn's abilities as compared with others did William Fox turn the stupendous task over to this skillful director. It required a deal of subtlety and a firm grasp of Mark Twain's fine satire to successfully put "The Yankee" on the screen.

"For that is what this medieval story really is," avers Director Flynn; "a satire on what the people of today consider the romance and the joy of the days when knights were bold. But Mark Twain shows that those days were not filled with romance and the knights not overly bold. Today is the day of romance, is the point the story brings out with such cleverness," continued Mr. Flynn.

"When a man in Washington can press a button and start three battleships on their way; when a man can talk via wireless to a person one thousand miles away—why, this is the day of romance. The knights of old lived in an age of discomfort, of tawdry display, of mock romance. Today is the age to revel in—not the age when 'King Arthur and his sturdy warriors ruled.' By putting a Yankee, accustomed to the luxuries of twentieth-century inventions, back into King Arthur's age and making him revolutionize the place into a twentieth-century affair—why, the contrast is brilliant, the satire glorious. But it required much thought to put it over on the screen."

Emmett Flynn, while a young man, is not a newcomer to the screen. He directed for First National, Goldwyn, American, and Fox. Chief among his earlier pictures are: "Alimony," "Racing Strain," "Bondage of Barbara," "A Bachelor's Wife," "Yvonne from Paris," "Other Side of Eden," "Eastward Ho," "The Lincoln Highwayman," and "Shod with Fire."

"A Yankee in King Arthur's Court" may be said to be the first really big production Flynn has made. It will be, in fact, one of the most important releases of 1921. And since Director Flynn has spent months in making it and pretty nearly all day and night in working out the action, great things may be expected of it, and of other productions bearing Emmett Flynn's name.

Robert Schable

FOREMOST among his 1920 releases, Robert Schable lists: "On With The Dance," his individual work in this production winning the applause of the critics; "The Romantic Adventurer," "The Stolen Kiss," "Paying the Piper," "Blind Wives," and "Temple Dusk."

Natural, easy; an actor who is a well known figure in both stage and screen circles. That's Robert Schable.

Mr. Schable began a successful stage career supporting some of the celebrities in well known successes. Then he became stage director for John Drew. For ten years he captained the Drew plays, making a name for himself as a director of excellence. There followed affiliations with Ethel Barrymore, Annie Russell, Marie Doro, George Fawcett, Nazimova, "Everywoman," and others.

Finally, Schable decided to leave the stage. Acting upon this decision, he taught for one year at the Sargent School of Dramatic Art. John S. Robertson, well known director, suggested that Schable enter motion pictures as an assistant director, eventually becoming, himself, a full fledge director.

Schable considered the suggestion a good one. He acted upon it favorably.

He was assistant director to Charles Maigne, Mr. Robertson, and other well known directors. Then came the suggestion to become an actor, thereby learning the fine points about directing.

Schable acted favorably upon this, also.

In rapid succession there followed, among many other pictures: "The Marriage Price," "World To Live In," "Red Head," "Test of Honor," "The Firing Line," and "Sinners."

There is a poise and a subtle something about Mr. Schable's characterizations that distinguish him in any cast. Humor and naturalism is the keynote of Robert Schable's histrionic skill. "Temple Dusk," shortly to be released will illustrate another of Schable's subtle characterizations.

Hugh Thompson

CAST for "Pike," American millionaire in "The Slim Princess," and expected to fulfill the requirements according to George Ade's description of the handsome tourist in Turkey, where the popular "string bean" type is looked upon in disgust and where fat ladies "eat and grow fatter." Hugh Thompson made a hurried trip to the Pacific coast some months since.

He of the megaphone, Victor Schertzinger, was the first to direct Hugh Thompson in a Goldwyn picture starring Mabel Normand in which Mr. Thompson scored success sufficient to create a demand for the newcomer's talents. This resulted in his next being cast for the leading masculine role in "Head Over Heels" and thereafter in "What Happened to Rosa," (Goldwyn).

From the beginning of Hugh Thompson's career he was more or less of a success since his six feet, two inches of well-proportioned physique, dark brown hair and dark lustrous eyes abetted by an ease and natural way of deporting himself before the camera registered decidedly well on the silver sheet.

There is scarcely a leading woman of note with whom Hugh Thompson has not played. His career dates back as far as the old Essanay days when since celebrated screen players were in the making.

Hugh Thompson was born in St. Louis, Missouri, the only son of a representative physician of that city, and while Dr. Thompson still exercises his paternal jurisdiction over his full-fledged actor son, Hugh is a mother's boy. He is one of those men who thinks of mother first, and remained in New York when tempting offers beckoned toward the Coast account of her presence there. Finally when the Goldwyn contract was negotiated, in the dead of winter, California became sufficiently alluring to command Mr. Thompson's westward ho! Having decided to remain there indefinitely, his mother and father recently joined him in Los Angeles.

Reminiscence accentuates vividly the versatility of Hugh Thompson, for in film plays of by-gone days he has played every different kind of role imaginable. His friends and fellow workers will remember: "Secret Strings," "Woman Under Oath," "False Gods," "Phil for Short," "Wit Wins," "Someone Must Pay," "Making Her His Wife," and "Cynthia of the Minute."

John Macfarlane

HE is an actor of twenty years experience, twelve of which were spent on the English stage, four on the American stage, and about three in pictures. During his motion picture engagements, he has won a place for himself by the exceptional delineations in such roles as the Lawyer in Roscoe Arbuckle's "Brewster Millions"; the sporting English barrister, a comedy part all through in "The Waif of the Wreck"; and as the Father in the Ince-Douglas MacLean subject, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home."

After a very notable career on the English stage, John MacFarlane came to America with no less a personage than Ellen Terry. He played with Frohman and other leading producers for a number of seasons, making a pronounced hit in each play. Indeed, his easy bearing, melodious intonation and histrionic powers placed him high in the favor of the theatre-going public.

When the War broke out he returned to England and enlisted. He saw active service right straight through those gloomy and tense years of strife and bloodshed. His tenure of service continued until the demobilization of the troops in March, 1919.

There followed, naturally enough, the reaction period. Getting back into the run of civilian life, the normal trend of everyday life. Every service man confesses to the difficulty of beginning life unchanged where he left off before enlisting. But Mr. MacFarlane had the stage and motion pictures before him, and he went back to his work with re-doubled vim and vigor.

He has been a member of the Los Angeles film colony for the past year, following a tour with John Kellerd in a repertoire of ten Shapespearean plays.

His years of stage work are of particular value to Mr. MacFarlane for his screen delineations. Then, too, his broad experiences in repertoire are highly valuable to him in his characterizations.

John MacFarlane is of the keenly observant type. The humor of everyday life excites his appreciation. Let life be your school, is Mr. MacFarlane's motto.

Fritzi Ridgeway

FRITZI RIDGEWAY has a long list of successes to her credit with Fox, Universal, Famous Players, and others.

She was born in Butte, Montana, and also educated there. It was at the School of Fine Arts in Chicago, Illinois, that Miss Ridgeway continued her studies.

Her stage career began in New York in stock. Then followed two years in vaudeville, all of which proved of great service to her in her screen work. Miss Ridgeway began with Essanay and from there to Triangle to appear in "Up or Down." Then comes the Fox success, "The Danger Zone;" Universal's "The Fire Flingers;" featured in "Winning a Bride," "Ranger of Pike's Peak," "Petal on the Current;" in the Famous Players' "Judy of Rogues' Harbor." She was featured in "The Fatal 30" a thrilling serial.

When cornered, the usual actress admits that she is capable of a correct interpretation of one or two characters in a certain line of work, and many seem content with this accomplishment.

It falls to the lot of Miss Ridgeway, however, to seek continually a new character to play and one which will require close application.

It is a source of anxiety to the scenario staff to find new characters for her to play, and she will not accept stories in which the ordinary character has to be portrayed. Why be just "ordinary" when it is possible, with a little thought, to be "out of the ordinary" figures Miss Ridgeway.

That she is right is evidenced by the versatility of her work, which is pronounced excellent. Miss Ridgeway is one of the youngest of the "comers" on the screen. She is eagerly alert, taking in lessons on the art of "emoting" from every source.

In a studio, with productions being made on every side, there is much to be learned by just observing, believes Miss Ridgeway. Then, too, there are opportunities of talking with the studio staff and the technical aides. Every one offers a different explanation to the same question. In other words, Miss Ridgeway assimilates knowledges from every source. That is, perhaps, one reason why she is considered one of the brightest actresses in her line of endeavor.

Wally Van

HAS Wally Van forsaken the megaphone for—something else? He has NOT!

Despite the fact, since supervising the serial, starring Bennie Leonard, he has not had occasion to tax the stability of his two good lungs. He laid the old megaphone on the shelf, for the while, but when he takes it up again—look out!

It is all because Wally Van has been doing something else. He has been negotiating plans, which, within the first of the coming new year, will be made public.

It is with no reflection upon his beloved and adopted profession that he has not devoted the past few months to directing pictures.

Anyway, he has directed enough in his time to "hold him for a while." And in his many years of experience he gathered a smattering knowledge of everything that has to do with picture making from the ground up, and down.

He is one of the few directors in the business who knows the production end of it from the time the film goes into the studio as a raw product, until the day a picture is released for the publisher's inspection.

Wally Van has gained this knowledge through years of close association with the motion picture industry. He became a director in the early days of picture making, graduating thereto from being an actor, and thereafter continuing to be a director.

Wally Van had his initiation into the world of cinema. His first engagement was one, more or less, to gratify his curiosity. The thing was a "farce" to him. "Can't be!" was his secret conclusion. But at least, he would find out for himself. As a result, first thing we knew there were scenarios by Wally Van, continuities by Wally Van and after a short time, there were pictures "Directed by Wally Van."

Through the years which have brought the motion picture to be looked upon as the most promising industry of the United States, and the envied industry of foreign lands, Wally Van has been directing pictures. And he will direct, but oh how different from his first one—"Love, Luck and Gasoline."

It would have been most fitting to announce the proposed activities at the Christmastide, and yet, why not leave an item or two for the "Happy New Year" wished for Wally Van, and which, in his characteristic reciprocal way, he wishes everybody!

Emerson and Loos

JOHN EMERSON and Anita Loos perpetuated the "let no man put asunder" collaboration back in 1919 when Miss Loos said "I will" and thenceforth became privately known as Mrs. John Emerson.

The marriage of this well-known team of scenario writers has resulted in a series of comedies, which they supervised, starring Constance Talmadge: "A Temperamental Wife," "The Virtuous Vamp," "In Search of a Sinner," "The Love Expert," "The Perfect Woman," "Dangerous Business" and "Mama's Affair," shortly to be released.

It was largely due to the highly clever collaborations of Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos that Douglas Fairbanks won such flattering commendation in "The Americano," "His Picture in the Paper," "In Again—Out Again," "Wild and Wooly," "Down to Earth," "Reaching for the Moon," and several other pictures for Paramount.. These pictures, too, were supervised by the clever couple.

The coming year, 1921, will see this notable pair devoting their skill and their powers to the developing of satirical comedy writing, for the screen, along new lines. A number of such stories are now ready, in which Constance Talmadge will star.

Anita Loos, than whom no more sparkling exemplar of comedy exists, is the daughter of a newspaper man who was a chum of Bill Nye, America's beloved humorist and devoted friend of James Whitcomb Riley. Miss Loos certainly has "atmospheric" cause for humor! At the age of fourteen, pert little Anita sold a story to her boss, D. W. Griffith, under whose direction she was emoting in numerous pictures. She has been writing ever since, and may be contradictorially known as "the oldest and the youngest" of screen writers.

Mr. Emerson, among other things, is President of the Actors Equity Association, elected spring of 1920.

Sidney Olcott

HIS vicissitudes of fortune are many. Yet he is the most traveled of the big directors in motion pictures. Sidney Olcott was born, reared, educated in Toronto, Canada. At the age of twenty-five he was a business man who had never ventured more than a hundred miles from his native city. But he was filled with an unconquerable restlessness—a feverish ambition to accomplish something "big."

Having been something of a local success in amateur entertainments, he decided to cultivate this latent talent—if it were one. So he entrained for New York.

Having once found the trail of theatrical locations, he haunted the managers' offices with untiring vigilance. Meantime, his reserve funds were dwindling with rapidity.

The father of Thomas Ince, at that time conducting a well-known agency, introduced Olcott to a manager of a road attraction. Engaged! The show lasted ten days. Olcott, keenly observant, made the most of his inside view. He capitalized this experience and secured another engagement that lasted almost twenty weeks. He learned with rapid avidity.

Consequently, next season found him touring the North American continent in "From Rags to Riches."

Sidney Olcott's bow in motion pictures was made in the studio where the careers of D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford and others, since famous, began.

Here Mr. Olcott met F. J. Marion, founder of the Kalem Company. Later he was engaged as a director in the Kalem organization. He was the first director to take a company away from New York to make pictures. He was the first director to take a company abroad. Olcott's "cinematic travels" embraced the British Isle, northern Europe and Palestine. Ranking foremost among his "foreign" pictures is "From the Manger to the Cross."

Shortly after the company's return to the United States, Olcott accepted an offer from Adolph Zukor. His first picture for Famous Players starred Mary Pickford in her first seven-reel production, "Poor Little Peppina," a tremendous success, and "Madame Butterfly."

His most recent success is his highly praised production, "Scratch My Back," by Rupert Hughes, a Goldwyn picture, which has been a big box-office winner because of its supremity.

1921 should be a gala year for Sidney Olcott.

George E. Marshall

GEORGE E. MARSHALL is the director who is putting the inspirational pep into Tom Mix' new picture, now being completed on the West Coast, entitled "Oh, You Tex," from the novel by William McLeod Maine, scenarized by Frank H. Clark.

Mr. Marshall claims Chicago as his old home town. He was educated at St. John's Military Academy and at the University of Chicago.

The screen, with all its promises of artistry and action, appealed to the young man. He went further West to carry out his desire to get into pictures and learn the business from the ground, having a definite idea even at that time to turn his hand to directing in the not distant future.

Eventually he connected with Universal, and for four years he remained with that company, directing, among other pictures, "Love's Lariat" and a serial called "Liberty."

From Universal Marshall went with the Ruth Roland company in a directorial capacity. He handled the megaphone for this daredevil of feminine serial stars, putting across that tremendous success, "The Adventures of Ruth," a whirlwind of action characterized by splendid settings and skilful directorial workmanship.

Mr. Marshall is now associated with the Fox Company. He made "Prairie Trails," starring Tom Mix, one of the most successful five reelers in which Mix has ever been starred.

Following this western thriller, Mr. Marshall was put in charge of one of Eileen Percy's first starring vehicles, "Why Trust Your Husband?" Marshall handled this picture with much deftness and the comedy touches were played up to splendid advantage. A veritable triumph for Mr. Marshall.

Aware of Marshall's ability from the beginning, the Fox Company were now so convinced of it and evidenced so much faith in the finished product bearing his name that they put him in charge of the new Tom Mix special, "Oh, You Tex," now being completed on the West Coast.

George E. Marshall is a serious, studious type of man, blessed with a whimsical sense of humor. His name will be one to conjure with during the forthcoming year.

Frank Lloyd

AMONG the big league producers of the year is noticed the name of a young man whose record has climbed steadily and rapidly. Frank Lloyd is the man, and although he has been heard from many times, it is predicted he will be heard from in the future in a far bigger way than ever.

His 1920 record is an envious one indeed, for Samuel Goldwyn can back up the truth when it is said that Frank Lloyd Productions have been big money makers.

The most salient point in his line-up for the year was that beautiful visualization of Alexandre Bisson's famous play "Madame X," with the sentient Pauline Frederick as Jacqueline Floriot. This exceptional production, after piling up box office records in the big first-runs, is still going strong. "Madame X" was called one of the greatest pictures of the year.

"Lloyd's initial Goldwyn production "The World and Its Woman," with Geraldline Farrar, did a tremendous business, and was called a super-feature. His next, "The Silver Horde," by Rex Beach, although a year old, is still working for many theatre owners to their keen delight. When "life" in a film is desired, Lloyd is the man to inject that substance.

Then came "The Woman in Room 13," and "Roads of Destiny," picturized from Channing Pollock's play after the O. Henry story. In both pictures Pauline Frederick scored.

The first "Frank Lloyd Production," under Lloyd's extended contract with Goldwyn, is "The Great Lover," at present making a national "hit." His second special is now in the making, "The Water Lily," from the story by Gouverneur Morris. This should carry double significance, being released as an Eminent Authors special and a Frank Lloyd Production. His "Les Miserables" with William Farnum, and other big pictures, "When A Man Sees Red," "The Rainbow Trail," "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "A Tale of Two Cities," have earned him the distinction of being an "ace director."

MARY PICKFORD FILM COMPANY

William Duncan

BETTER known as "the Vitagraph serial king," who is in the habit of putting across, usually directing as well as playing the star role, one successful serial after another. His latest is "The Silent Avenger," a breathless succession of rapid fire action and dramatic situations, handled by Mr. Duncan with much deftness.

"Screen banditry," says Mr. Duncan, "delivers an important message to the impressionable minds of youths. Talk of eliminating wicked characters from the screen is as sensible as talk of eliminating evil from the Bible. Good stands out in a more illuminating light when contrasted with evil."

This is Duncan's answer to F. C. Craven, Bostonian, who recently advocated the elimination of the vampire and banditry from the screen in a speech before the annual convention of the Humane Association at Omaha.

"Youngsters do not attempt to imitate the bad men of the screen," disavowed Mr. Duncan, "Instinct tells them to imitate the hero, who is always a man of virtue.

"If a screen hero had nothing to accomplish, he would have no place on the screen. Because he does overcome obstacles and eradicate crime, he is a hero in the minds of the movie audiences. No reputable producer screens crime as a virtue. Rather, he shows that crime does not pay and criminals always come to a bad end. Is it logical to believe that a boy, seeing the hero rewarded and the bandit punished; would choose to enter a career of crime?

"He might imagine himself a detective, policeman, ranger, or peace officer of some sort, but he could hardly be expected to imagine himself a desperado. When crime is rightfully pictured on the screen, it teaches a powerful lesson for good. The only banditry which should be eliminated is the sort repulsive to human intelligence and refinement, or crime wrongfully extolled as a virtue."

Bill Duncan ought to know of what he speaks. He has made a study of this special phase of production. More bad men have fallen victims to him on the screen than have ever fallen before the Texas Rangers or any other law-enforcing body outside the cinema. For years Duncan has filmed thrilling serials for Vitagraph; every one of them has contained one or more villains.

Thomas Fallon

THE words "moving pictures" give Thomas F. Fallon a nucleus for his themes. To succeed, he believes they must be literally and figuratively pictures that move of themselves while moving others by a natural and logical process, basically propelled by the underlying psychology of the life within them. Action and situation, otherwise, is merely a catchpenny physicality, without soul, which invigorates, sustains and humanizes it.

Mr. Fallon never writes about what he has not, at least to a small extent, experienced himself. Therein, probably, lies the gripping element characteristics of his original stories.

In "The Shark," a virile sea story, enjoyed, and still being enjoyed, an unusual success, both here and abroad, Mr. Fallon incorporated some of his own thrilling sea experiences.

"The Plunger," a Wall Street story, has recently been released. This depicts in a striking way, the true life and pitfalls of the "Street." Mr. Fallon spent several weeks studying the methods of the "Bulls and the Bears" in the office of a broker friend, before attempting to write this story.

Last summer he spent his vacation near a mining town in middle Pennsylvania, and when he returned he brought back the script of "Dynamite Allen," a mining story which is scheduled for early release.

His most recent work is a feature for Pearl White, on which he collaborated with Max Marcin and J. Searle Dawley.

Mr. Fallon's first serial collaboration was an adaptation of the colossal "Bride 13," now enjoying world wide popularity. He approached this colossal attempt with considerable trepidation, but the results proved this to be unfounded, and he feels that the serial of the future will be a medium of far reaching instruction, as well as entertainment.

"While New York Sleeps," the giant special of New York life, and on which he also collaborated, gave him opportunity to scour the Metropolis from the Battery to Harlem, a radius of eight miles. What he saw and absorbed, the country at large is seeing and absorbing at this moment.

Mr. Fallon ranks with the screen's foremost writers. His is the prolific type of mind, creative to the point of the expert. The year of 1921 contains big things for Thomas F. Fallon in keeping with his ability.

Montagu Love

MONTAGU LOVE'S 1920 releases number "A Place of Honeymoons," "The World and His Wife," "The Riddle: Woman," "The Wrong Woman," and "Satan's Paradise."

There is a quality about Love's acting that is peculiarly his own; a charming ease, a hint of powerful purpose, a cleverness of emotional expression.

Here is an actor of strong abilities who is interested in big, virile roles, such as those played by Tree, Mansfield, Dietrichstein, and Lackaye, on the stage. He believes there is an opportunity for a new kind of star part, and, what is more important, a new type of strong, appealing stories.

In one of his foremost 1920 successes, "The World and His Wife," a Robert G. Vignola Production for Paramount release, Mr. Love enacted a role which required as much dramatic ability as is ever necessary for an actor to summons. One false step might have ruined the portrayal. A bit of overacting or the slightest underacting would have had a definite effect upon the otherwise beautiful production. It was his perfection of character delineation which emphatically contributed to the acknowledged success of the finished product.

In "Satan's Paradise," Love's latest production with Norma Talmadge, he again puts into his role that strength of character and ease of movement that is identified with all the Love pictures.

Rumor has it that Mr. Love is carrying on negotiations which will result in an interesting development for 1921.

Montagu Love acknowledges Calcutta, India, his native home. He was educated in England. There, too, began his stage career, which overlaps to America.

He was under the management of Belasco, Joseph Brooks, the Shuberts, William A. Brady, and Cyril Maude. But he forsook the stage, attracted by the gigantic strides motion picture production was taking.

Notable among his past achievements are "Rasputin," "The Grouch," "The Roughneck," "The Cross Bearer," in all of which he played the title role, and the dominating role in "Bought and Paid For."

Lucy Cotton

A YOUNG southern girl, from Houston, Texas, equipped with a voice of rare sweetness, winning personality, and acknowledged charm, essayed to make a name for herself on Broadway—the street where Fame is King.

This was Lucy Cotton, demure, studious, but sparkling.

A desirable contrast.

It was only a few years ago that she came to New York and understudied Ina Claire in "The Quaker Girl." From musical comedy she swerved to the dramatic, and was admired for her work and appearance in "Polygamy" and in "Little Women." Thence, followed the successful farce, "Up in Mabel's Room." Miss Cotton's greatest success of the stage, however, was the long run of "Turn to the Right."

But the stage did not offer enough scope. She longed for a wider field of artistic endeavor.

Motion pictures was the natural solution.

For the past year, she has utterly forsaken her first love, the stage, to give her entire time and thought to pictures, contenting herself with small parts, at first.

Miss Cotton's studious concentration upon her work, her firm histrionic ability and pleasing attractiveness, soon won her a name. Wherefore, she was elevated from small parts to co-star in "The Prodigal Wife," to star in "Blind Love," and to be featured in "The Miracle of Love."

Other pictures followed, and upon completing "The Misleading Lady," Miss Cotton was chosen, the one among many, for the feminine role opposite George Arliss in "The Devil." Her rise in the past year from small bits to dominating roles stamps her as an artist of recognized capabilities, and is a momentous step in the career of one of filmland's brightest lights.

Van Dyke Brooks

VAN DYKE BROOKS is to the screen what Frank Bacon is to the stage,—now, since he has laid down the megaphone and again comes forth as an actor.

For many years, Van Dyke Brooks has been identified with the world of cinema. His career began when he wrote, directed, and played, as well, in his own productions. He was one of the first ten directors of America and for nine years made Vitagraph offerings.

Then his health forced a long, required rest, but within the past year he has returned to the motion picture industry, welcomed as an actor and missed as a director. He is one of the most recent members of the West Coast colony, where he was well acquainted from activities of days gone by and where, with brothers of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, he continues to devote his days to the progress of the motion picture. Since Mr. Brooks returned to the screen as an actor he has played the part of "the shadow" in J. Stuart Blackton's "The Moonshine Trail;" in support of Louise Huff, the part of the boy's father in "What Women Want." In the Vitagraph production, "The Fortune Hunter," Mr. Brooks played the part originated upon the legitimate stage by Frank Bacon and since its release has been called "the Frank Bacon of the screen."

In two coming Cosmopolitan productions, "The Passionate Pilgrims," in which he will appear as "old Hittie" and in "The Manifestations of Henry Ort," as Constable Whitcomb, it is predicted by the director, Robert G. Vignola, that Mr. Brooks will score heavily.

Since arriving upon the West Coast, Mr. Brooks has been in demand by companies desiring characterizations of such parts as so few actors are capable of delineating.

George Nicholls

AN actor, producing manager, director or writer all his life—that is George Nicholls, well known screen actor, who is now busy acting in Fox' "Queen of Sheba," that colossal production in the course of completion on the West Coast.

Mr. Nicholls is one of the most sought after character actors for the screen. He is a man who is good or bad; makes them laugh or cry; can be stern or kind; as humble or as proud as you want; as haughty as a kaiser. Anything the producer may want in character, and he is such a good actor that no one thinks he is acting, but only living in a natural sort of way.

For a number of years, George Nicholls has been on the screen, and all of his characterizations stand out. No one who saw "Mickey" can forget her guardian, the Blacksmith; or the oppressive factory owner reformed by a child in "A Turn of the Road."

In the past year he has played in a number of excellent productions:—"The Honor of the Family," for King Vidor; in "The Orphan," with William Farnum; he was the sea captain in Maurice Tourneur's "Deep Water;" from this type he turned right about face to play a comedy part in "Nineteen and Phyllis," with Charles Ray.

You disliked him as the stern father in "The Iron Riders," with William Russell; you despised him as a villain in Griffith's "The Greatest Question."

And now, in "The Queen of Sheba," he is going to be seen as the grandfather of the Queen and also as David, the father of Solomon.

There is no line of demarcation in the George Nicholls array of character delineations. He runs the gamut of the emotions with remarkable ease.

Clyde Fillmore

A LEADING man worthy of the title, which was proven in Erich Von Stroheim's "The Devil's Pass Key," and opposite Ethel Clayton in "The City Sparrow."

The peculiar fascination responsible for having lured many clever actors of the legitimate stage to the screen must have suddenly settled upon Clyde Fillmore, for after a career of which he may well be proud the screen claimed him, and now it appears that he expects to remain a screen actor.

A career of four years upon the stage in such plays as in which Mr. Fillmore appeared would render most any likely chap eligible, however, and perhaps the screen was not presented as a "lure," but a sound, and more "climatic" convenience, since California has claimed him, as well.

Some of the plays referred to are "It Pays to Advertise," "The House of Glass," "He and She," "The Little Teacher," "The Very Idea," "Cfvilian Clothes," and other plays which won favorable Broadway repute and sallied forth with a Broadway endorsement. It is a recommendation in itself for an actor to have been one of the company playing as many representative plays, those, which upon the strength of their success, afterward sold for staggering amounts for screen rights.

His screen career began at Universal, and includes "Millionaire Pirates," "Fire Fingers," "Sundown Trail," "His Great Success." Since the production of these we have heard of Mr. Fillmore in "When Fate Decides," and many others. He is always busy. A satisfactory answer.

Alfred Green

ALFRED GREEN is the youthful director who, having won his spurs as one of the foremost in his line of endeavor, has been wielding the megaphone for those productions starring Jack Pickford, the last three of which, "Double Dyed Deceiver," by O. Henry; "The Man Who Had Everything," by Ben Ames Williams, and "Just Out of College," by George Ade.

Green is blessed with a whimsical sense of humor—the sort that stops the tears just as they commence to threaten to splash down otherwise respectable cheeks. He seems to have an understanding of the greatest possibilities of his players. Thus in the instance of Jack Pickford. Jack has been more successful in his last three pictures under Green's skillful direction, than he has been in some time.

Word comes from the Coast that Alfred Green is now affiliated with the Mary Pickford Film Company. The Pickfords certainly know how to keep a good "bet" in the family!

Mr. Green comes from Perris, California. He enjoyed a stage career in various productions. The stage was all right for some, but not for others, believed Alfred. So he bade it good-by and cast his lot with pictures

Almost his first engagement was as assistant director to that master artist, Marshall Neilan. He assisted Neilan in making "In Old Kentucky," "The Unpardonable Sin," and "Daddy Long Legs."

It is not every one who can rise from assistant director to director. But Alfred Green did! From Neilan he went to direct Peggy Hyland in "Right After Brason." Then he directed House Peters in "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives."

Upon completion of this last picture, Green directed Clara Kimball Young.

Just about this time Goldwyn commenced to scout around for really capable men to handle their stars. Not necessarily older directors with years and years of experience. But young men with achievements to their credit and the best years of their career before them. Who else but Alfred Green? His past work and his years of apprenticeship were in his favor; his thorough knowledge of picture values and of human nature were others. So he was engaged. We have the productions starring Jack Pickford, which speak for themselves. Now comes the affiliation with Mary Pickford. 1921 looks promising for Alfred Green.

Gladys Walton

GLADYS WALTON is the charming star recently discovered in Universal's firmament. Her latest starring releases are "Pink Tights" and "Risky Business," a highly dramatic story by John Colton and Douglas Doty, directed by Harry B. Harris. In it this youthful star does some of the best work of her career. "Risky Business" establishes Miss Walton, not only as a star of brilliance, but as an actress of genuine ability.

Gladys Walton's current releases are "La La Lucille," "The Watchmaker," and "Out of the Sky." In all she scored a personal triumph, in spite of the fact that she was not supposed to take too much of the limelight!

She is a serious worker who has a deal of versatility. One of the outstanding factors about Miss Walton's work is her ability to live her part in an easy, natural sort of way that reminds a spectator of "some one just like that who lives down in—oh, you know, that place in Maine somewhere."

Gladys is a striking illustration of what is termed realistic character portrayal on the screen. She puts the spark of life into her pantomime; makes each gesture, each bit of action count for its fullest. In other words, economically and efficiently saves herself and gives only what is supposed to be given. The critics have a tendency to comment caustically on the way many screen players fling themselves about—without apparent rhyme or reason. Sometimes this is due to inadequate direction. But it is a star's responsibility to know whether she is creating a poor effect. She can't be sure of the little things, but she can be aware of the "tout ensemble."

And in this Gladys Walton is mistress of her art. She has been fortunate in having good direction. But many are the conferences she has been an active participant in when the director prepared to shoot a scene. No rabid curiosity here; no display of the so-called "woman's feverish search for the reason, the reason for it all." Only a serious girl's desire to know of what "she speaks" in pantomime, before going ahead and doing it. This, too, may partly explain Miss Walton's ease and her naturalness; a thorough knowledge of what she is going to do and why she is going to do it.

Universal is proud of her new star—Gladys Walton.

Doris Schroeder

DORIS SCHROEDER, one of the best known continuity writers in motion pictures, has three recent releases from her pen: "The Adorable Savage," with Edith Roberts; "In Folly's Trail," with Carmel Meyers, and "The Gilded Dream," also with Miss Meyers. All three pictures are Universal releases.

Miss Schroeder was born in Long Island, New York, and educated at the Brooklyn Girls' High School. Her screen career embraces nine years of picture work, her adaptations including: "My Fighting Gentleman," "Charity Castle," for American; "Price of Applause," Love's Pay Day," for Triangle; "The Little Boss," for Vitagraph; "My Unmarried Wife," "The Trembling Hour," "Under Suspicion," "Pals," and "Jewel," previous Universal Pictures.

There is a human knack about Miss Schroeder's adaptations which mark her as one or the leading scanarists in picture circles. There have been complaints aired, of late, concerning directors ire against the slovenly continuity writer who sails along with a story, without any regard for the director, the cameraman, or the star, picturing impossible scenes and impossible situations.

The result has been that many directors have had to rewrite or revamp such continuities, a woeful number of which are said to be constantly being written in these days of intelligent writers for the cinema.

This complaint cannot be registered against Doris Schroeder. The "Schroeder" trademark is an indication of high quality, of much intelligence, and of real down-to-date common sense. This may explain why Universal have given so many of their most important stories to Miss Schroeder to be scenarized.

Edmund Goulding

AMONG the latest adaptations credited the pen of Edmund Goulding are "The Sin That Was His," starring William Faversham, and "The Devil," starring George Arliss, two masterpieces of Mr. Goulding's art, the assignment of which tells the tale of his acknowledged ability.

Edmund Goulding, who commenced his career on the stage at the age of fifteen, and was one of the best known young actors of London, played with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree for several seasons and in practically every London theatre.

Mr. Goulding's first play, "Ellen Young," was written in collaboration with Gabriel Enthoven, and was successfully produced in the Savoy Theatre, London, in 1914. At that time six of his one-act plays were to be found playing in different parts of the United Kingdom.

Heading from France to this counrty at the conclusion of the war, Mr. Goulding wrote several features for Famous Players, also "The Ordeal of Rosetta," for Alice Brady. Thereafter he wrote and adapted a series of features for Selznick, and later "The Daughter of Two Worlds," for Norma Talmadge.

Expecting to spend several months in his native land, in the summer of 1920 Mr. Goulding sailed for London. Scarcely had he arrived there when he was called by cable, to return. The assignment which necessitated his presence in America was adapting "The Devil," made popular by George Arliss a number of years ago.

Since Mr. Goulding has already had practical experience in the direction of pictures, it is rumored he expects to combine his gift of adaptation and original compilations with his pronounced ability in the directorial end of motion pictures.

Orrin Denny

FEW people of the film industry have had the strange experiences that have befallen Orrin Denny during the past year. Early in 1920 he was sent by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, because of his unusual qualifications, to join the Universal-Smithsonian Institution expedition in Africa. For such a position he was better qualified, perhaps, than many others, being an expert technician in all departments of cinema photography.

Shortly after joining the expedition he was appointed Manager by his employers and by the American Consul in Nairobi, British East Africa, and since that time he has performed both the executive and the artistic duties of this office in the most creditable and satisfactory manner.

In Africa Mr. Denny's experiences have been as varied and as exciting as the most vivid imagination could picture. He has hiked through thick, bramble-torn wild places, heretofore unexplored by the white race. Wild animals of the jungle infest this country and are a constant menace to life. Then there is the contact with the semi-civilized and wholly uncivilized natives. They may be friendly disposed toward Mr. Denny; again, they may take a deep dislike to him. In which latter event the country may scarcely be said to be exactly comfortable.

For the last ten years Mr. Denny has been identified with the film industry, serving as laboratory superintendent where some most remarkable photographic products were made.

Hermann FilmHas Four Curwood Stories

E. P. Hermann, president of the Hermann Film Corporation of Santa Monica, Cal., announces that he has secured the rights to four of James Oliver Curwood's books, which will be used as vehicles for big special features to be produced during the coming year.

Entering the motion picture field a short time ago, the Hermann company made a hit with its first production, "That Something," featuring Margery Wilson and Charles Meredith. Distributed through Irving M. Lesser, general manager of the Western Pictures Exploitation Company, "That Something" has been booked throughout the United States. It received the endorsement of the Rotary clubs of America at the annual convention recently held in Atlantic City, and was written by W. W. Woodbridge.

Mr. Hermann has built an ideal studio, the only one in Santa Monica, Cal. It is situated on Wilshire boulevard, the main automobile road between Los Angeles and Santa Monica. During the coming year the Hermann Film Corporation's studio will be available for lease by big producing companies.

Kleber Joins Baumer

Chester C. Kleber, secretary of the Harry Levey Service Corporation and formerly with the Universal Industrial Dept., has resigned his office with Levey to accept a position as manager of distribution for the Baumer Films, Inc., specialists in industrial-education films.

No Pessimism in Russell

"IN keeping with the general prosperity of the industry for the past year, the Capital Film Company has finished the most prosperous year of its existence. Not only has it successfully marketed a number of series of money-making products, but it has prepared for augmented production, which will insure its place next year among the foremost independent distributing organizations.

"It is with pride that we can point to our Lester Cuneo five-reel Western productions which are being released at the rate of one a month, two-reel Fritzi Ridgeway Westerns released bi-monthly, single-reel Tusun comedies released weekly and our completed series of two-reel railroad stories with Helen Gibson, two-reel Western pictures with Al Jennings and two-reel Western subjects with Neal Hart.

"We have just announced our forthcoming release, Frank King's 'Gasoline Alley' cartoon, which is destined to lead its particular field in the fan's popularity.

"We have unbounded faith in the continued prosperity of the industry, and are laying our plans for continued production.

"We extend cordial greetings to our customers and other members of the industry."

Co-operative Plan Needed

New Buying Policy Essential for Foreign Market Says F. Luporini

THE need of a change in policy with respect to the purchase of American-made motion pictures by foreign buyers is again emphasized by Ferdinando Luporini, Managing Director of Luporini Brothers, in a special statement issued to the trade press this week.

Mr. Luporini's statement follows:

"For a long time, there has been depression in the foreign market, what with the depreciated foreign exchange and the obvious retrenchment on the part of producers and foreign buyers alike to curtail production and to cease buying pictures respectively. This period of depression has led to a state in inactivity that is almost lethargy; and if permitted to continue, will undoubtedly lead to serious consequences in the foreign film market.

"We cannot permit such a condition to be tolerated much longer. If nothing is done to combat it, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor in this country will eventually suffer from it.

"With this idea foremost in mind I formulated plans with a number of prominent foreign buyers to use our combined efforts in effecting the purchase of the foreign rights to many American productions. By reposing full confidence in the firm of Luporini Brothers, the group of foreign buyers now associated with me, are enabled to economize not only in time and energy, but in money as well.

"To undertake the magnitude of this task, I have placed the firm of Luporini Brothers at the disposal of foreign buyers associated with me in my new enterprise."

"Souls of Men," G.-J. Production, Ready for Western Pictures Co.

"SOULS OF MEN," a psychological drama featuring Will Jeffries, has been completed by the G. and J. Photoplays Corporation, and will be distributed by the Western Pictures Exploitation Company, according to an announcement by Irving M. Lesser, general manager.

This production is the first of a series of six to be produced by G. and J. Photoplays Corporation with Will Jefferies the featured player. Isador Grodzins, former Chicago capitalist, who came to Southern California to live a life of retirement, became interested in the motion picture industry, and is president of the company.

Park Frame directed "Souls of Men," and the cast of players, headed by Will Jeffries, includes Lucille Young, Yvette Mitchell, T. E. Duncan, Walter Perkins, Ernest Pasque, James B. Long, Claude Lampman and Frank Stockdale.

Grand to Exploit West Comedies in N. E.

As a result of purchase of the twelve two-reel Billy West comedies released to the state right market by Joan, Sam Grand, who conducts the Federated Film Exchange at Boston, will inaugurate a campaign of advertising and publicity of the Joan comedian that is new to his territory, which includes Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

The first approach will consist of advance publicity for Billy West through the newspapers. Sam Grand does not contemplate releasing the comedies before the first of the next year, so that he will have a few weeks in which to prepare the public for the Joan comedian's advent to the screen.

Leroy Scott Completes Continuity of Play

Leroy Scott, of Eminent Authors Pictures, who went to the Goldwyn studio in Culver City a few weeks ago, has just finished the continuity of his play, "No. 13 Washington Square," which is to go into production at once. He will stay at the studio while it is being filmed and also for another picture of his, which is the first he has written directly for the screen.

"Jazz and Jesters" is the title of the first Celebrated Comedy, which will be released December 27 by Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago.

Success Up to the Exchanges

Producers Will Come Through in 1921 Says Eckels

"THE growth and development of the independent field is limited by only one thing—the growth of the independent exchanges themselves!"

This was the answer of Eddy Eckels to the question as to just what 1921 held for the independent branch of the film business. Eckels has long been regarded as one of the most active and best informed men in the state right field of production and distribution. During the past year he organized the Independent Films Association, of which he is now president and general manager.

"If the men who head the state right exchanges of the country make progress in proportion to their opportunities," continued Mr. Eckels, "you are going to see developments during the forthcoming year that will startle you.

"There is one thing that is almost imperative for the independent exchanges to do for their own welfare and prosperity. They must put themselves in a position financially to handle bigger and better productions than they have ever handled before. The time is long past when a state right exchange can operate profitably on a shoestring.

"The state right market must cease regarding itself as a market for cheap pictures. Exhibitors are demanding productions of genuine box office value—productions with foremost stars and made by capable directors from the right sort of story material. Pictures of this description are the kind the theatres want—the kind they are willing to pay real money for.

"Unless the independent exchange men can supply this sort of product, he must expect to be crowded out of the field.

"These facts are plain. Anyone but a blind man can see them. And the big majority of independent exchanges throughout the country are at this moment in a state of preparedness financially for the truly big pictures which they know are going to be offered to them during 1921.

"There are some exchanges that have not yet seen the handwriting on the wall and to these I would utter a word of earnest warning.

"For the big pictures are really coming.

"So I say that the possibilities of the independent field depend absolutely on the exchanges—and I'd like to hammer this thought home in every state right exchange in the country.

A Statement from Federated

By Jos. L. Friedman

THE FEDERATED FILM EXCHANGES OF AMERICA, INC., is a national organization of Independent State Right men, blanketing the entire United States, created, primarily, for the purpose of concentrated buying power.

The members of the Federated act as a unit in contracting with producers for National rights, instead of, as formerly, bidding against various competitors for State Rights, thus artificially creating higher prices, and because of the fact that each member in his own territory is his own manager, it is apparent that the Federated Film Exchanges of America is the most logical method of distribution in the motion picture industry.

It is obvious that no organization in the motion picture industry could possibly have the interest of the exhibitor at heart the same as the Federated Film Exchanges. It is the one organization in the industry that is independent in every sense of the word, and by reason of its charter will remain independent for all time to come.

The members of the organization are as follows:

D. J. Chatkin, San Francisco, Cal.; H. Charnas, Cleveland, O.; B. Amsterdam, Philadelphia, Pa.; H. Lande, Pittsburgh, Pa.; S. V. Grand, Boston, Mass.; J. L. Friedman, Chicago, Ill.; A. Kahn, Kansas City, Mo.; Merit Film Corp., Minneapolis, Minn.; M. J. Frisch, Des Moines, Ia.; H. A. Kyler, Denver, Colo.; P. Oletsky, Baltimore, Md.; W. G. Underwood, Dallas, Tex.; S. Werner, St. Louis, Mo.; R. Wettstein, Milwaukee, Wis.; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans, La.; A. G. Whyte, New York City, N. Y.

It is understood that announcements of great import, regarding new contracts entered into by the Federated, will be made in a very short time, which will bear out most forcibly the contention made that the Federated is the most logical method of distribution in the United States.

Good Prospect for Good Film

By Charles Urban

EVEN though I have always borne the reputation of being an optimist, I have always looked facts in the face. I have never tried to persuade myself that an outlook or a proposition was good, unless it looked good to me from every angle.

So it is with a full realization of what many leaders in the motion picture industry are saying and what many more are thinking, that I say emphatically: 1921 should be a banner year for the high quality man. The producer, the distributor, the exhibitor who handle the best products will have a very successful year. I am not interested in those who handle the medicore product. They progress to a point in times when money is plentiful, but not so well when money is tight; when people are more careful with their money.

From my own personal angle, I believe that 1921 is going to be the most productive year I have ever had. In predicting this, I reflect on the entire period of 24 years during which my energies were devoted to the uplift of motion pictures. That takes me clear back to 1896.

These years were devoted principally to commercializing my efforts for purposes of creating sufficient finance with which to carry on the costly experiment in evolving an efficient and practical Natural Color Process, on which I have been engaged during 17 years; an economic and safe device and picture service for the masses at home and the creating of a permanent Motion Picture Encyclopedia of Instructive Subjects for schools, churches, technical colleges and industrial institutions.

The reason I was compelled to finance these projects alone during the past 20 years was due to the lack of faith of most men in the future of the Educational Motion Picture and their lack of vision as to the limitless uses to which the Motion Picture in the inexpensive disc form as well as the general adaptation of a practical color process by the existing Trade and Exhibitor, could be utilized. I had that faith and vision and have brought these latter two distinct innovations "to a head." They are no longer dreams or ideas on paper, but have been worked out in metal and have passed the severest tests. The results have far exceeded my utmost expectations. I believe I have done something useful and am entitled to my reward.

The coming year will see the launching of the two big projects which have been acquired by the Urban Motion Picture Industries.

The one which will interest the exhibitors particularly is the natural color process. There are many of you, of course, who remember Kinemacolor.

An entire evening's entertainment of Kinemacolor ran at the Scala theatre in London for twenty-four consecutive months at $2.50—and that was ten years ago when $2.50 was a big price for any theatre seat. The new color process is such an improvement over Kinemacolor as perfection always is over experiment.

I can safely promise the exhibi-

Paul Cromelin Speaks on Importation

THAT the importation of foreign-made films into this country will play an important role in settling the problem of international exchange and do a great deal towards establishing commercial reciprocity, is the belief held by Paul H. Cromelin, president and general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation. Furthermore, Mr. Cromelin believes that the American trade's endorsement of such a policy will lead to an internationalization of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Cromelin's statement, reprinted verbatim, follows:

"The importation of foreign-made films into this country will be a real step towards the internationalization of the motion picture industry. Commonly regarded as 'the universal language,' the motion picture should by all means be made universal in scope.

"Importing productions made abroad into America will promote reciprocity and assist in settling the problem of international exchange. Exporting films turned out in the United States serves to create a favorable impression about our country everywhere. American love, homes, ideals and characteristics depicted aid in making this land appear a desirable haven to the foreign and favorably influences an influx of visitors and immigrants.

"Producers abroad cannot hope to compete seriously with American-made films here as yet, because few pictures made there are consistent with American ideas and ideals. There are some, however, that are up to the mark and these should prove marketable and welcomed in the United States. Our standards are rapidly being recognized as the criterion and the hope for the foreign producer who wishes an American market is to emulate us."

Urban's Predictions

tor that before 1921 is out, there will be available in quantity feature pictures in natural color.

The other big project will be the Spirograph, the home motion picture projector which uses a flat disc instead of roll-film. This will take movies into the home and school and commercial field. It will not act as a competitor to the theatre; on the contrary, it will help the theatre as the Victrola has helped the concert hall.

Our "Popular Classics," which include the Movie Chats, the Kineto Review and the Science Series, will, of course, keep expanding.

I am satisfied that all motion picture men who have more than a mere monetary interest in their work, will prosper well in 1921. There are many of them. In such a large industry as ours the idealists are not always heard, because they have not the knack of making as much noise as some others, but there are pretty many of them just the same; enough to carry the industry steadily forward on the road of progress and higher ideals.

American Film Adapts Popular Story

The American Film Company announces that a number of large houses have booked "The Blue Moon," a "Flying A" production of David Anderson's book of the same title. The popularity of the book is expected to pave the way for the success of the screen version. Grosset and Dunlay, publishers, have issued what is called an American popular edition of the book illustrated by "stills" from the drama.

"The Blue Moon" is only one of the recent picturizations of popular stories made by the American Film. Others of this class are: "The House of Toys," written by Henry Russell Miller; "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin; "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," by Albert Payson Terhune; and "The Week End," by Cosmo Hamilton."

ComedyDemand Causes Advance Showings

Demand for its new single reel comedies, the Vanity and Gaiety series, is so great Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., reports, that several theatres have been granted permission for special advance showings. Since prints were sent to exchanges several weeks ago this was possible.

Among the houses showing them at advance showings last week were the Strand, Louisville, which played "Ain't Love Grand?", the first Gayety, and the Liberty, Seattle, where "Tea for Two" gave the first glimpse of one of the Vanity series.

"Ranger and the Law" Nears Completion

According to a wire received from Bernard D. Russell, of Russell-Grevier-Russell, the next Lester Cuneo production, "The Ranger and the Law," is rapidly approaching completion.

Francelia Billington is playing opposite Cuneo. The supporting cast has been well chosen. The scenario was written by Henry McCarty and Leo Meehan. Meehan is editor of the Photo Playwright Magazine for screen writers published in Los Angeles.

Projector for "Death House" at Sing Sing

As a token of appreciation of help and co-operation of Sing Sing officials during the filming of scenes at the prison for "The Quarry," Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, Tom Forman, director, has given the prison a motion picture projection machine for use in the "death house."

Albert Nathan Now at Pittsburgh Office

Albert S. Nathan, formerly attached to the Buffalo exploitation force of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been transferred to the Western Pennsylvania territory as exploitation representative with headquarters at the Pittsburgh exchange.

Quality—Not Quantity In 1921

By Joe Lee

WITH 1921 waiting just outside the door even now it is evident that it is going to be a year in which many changes in the picture business will take place.

About this time post season predictions break out along with winter colds and icy feet. Last year at this period the cry was fewer and better pictures. Did it do any good? Look around and note that the market is glutted with films and you have your answer. One of the most representative trade papers last week listed sixty-five releases that were offered the trade for the month of December. An exhibitor couldn't take care of them if he worked double time and played two bills a show.

With this oversupply the wise exhibitor has been doing some shopping. He has enough to pick and choose from and under such conditions merit counts heavily in making the ultimate sale. Now if the producer who overloaded the market last year in the fact of what should have been the natural trend has the sense of a burned baby he is not going to hit that error on the nose twice with the same fist. He'll trim to quality, knowing that he must have fewer and better goods if he is to corral the shopping money of the exhibitor.

Mr. Exhibitor has not had a monopoly on shopping. He finds that his public are wise to the conditions and they come up before the ticket shifters with an eye on what they want and an intention to get it.

An element which is looming larger every month on the movie calendar is the matter of proper exploitation of features. Everywhere about us there is evidence that with an intensive campaign of information long runs can be mapped out for pictures just as readily as for a show hit. The illustrations are so apparent it would be useless to cite them. Special exploitation by forces that have made a study of this sort of thing is going to be a more important factor than ever and in some well organized concerns it now ranks next to director, star, story and primal distribution. Keen and intelligent exploitation opens up so many avenues. Newspapers generally are devoting more space and care to picture subjects than ever before. Department stores are ever alive to co-operate with a clever stunt in boosting a picture and the other ramifications are such that the field becomes quite the biggest thing in the game once the show is set and ready for release. There is nothing particularly new about this. The Bible long ago mentioned something about not letting your light shine under a bushel.

Many a production having merit, through over confidence by both producer and exhibitor, has lost much of its value at the box office. The producer remarks, "This is a big expensive picture. I know it is good, so there is no need of spending any extra money in the trade papers." The exhibitor's mind, running in this same channel, does not increase his newspaper space. The bigger and more expensive and the more merit a production contains the larger should the advertising appropriation be. If you keep a good production a secret it cannot be a success, and when you do advertise tell something about your goods to the public. They are interested in your wares,—nothing else.

The day of easy money is over, and the idea of running theatres on the old shooting gallery basis is past, but hard work and clean methods will make money.

Just tab it down that 1921 is going to be long on quality and many real big specials will be offered to the exhibitors, which will have sufficient merit to warrant them long and successful runs, and the public will pay just what these pictures are worth to see them.

"Happiest New Year Ever!"

By Joe Brandt

THE Independents should have a Merry Christmas in view of the developments of the past year, and particularly during its last six months, and if those engaged in this branch of the motion picture industry "watch their step" they are destined for the Happiest New Year they have had in the history of the industry or in their connection with it.

Many of the difficulties surrounding the Independent or State Rights field have been surmounted and problems solved and the improvement in the quality of the productions handled by the Independent Exchange is showing gradual but positive growth and the critics of the independent movement have not the opportunities to designate the independent exchangs as junk shops for the disposal of cheap pictures that would not be handled by others.

This improvement in productions, with star, story and directoral value increased and upon a par with the offerings of the program producers is already showing its effects and I can be pardoned for directing attention to the many appeals made in the past by myself and the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of which I am president, to the State Right buyers to give more attention to quality rather than to the cheapness of price when buying pictures whether features or short stuff.

While I have offered nothing but meritorious and box office value pictures myself and have had many a heated argument over price because some buyers could not see that quality was worth more in the long run, I feel one of my greatest personal achievements in the interest of the independent market during the past year was in prevailing upon George H. Davis to place his James Oliver Curwood production, "Isobel or the Trail's End," directed by Edwin Carewe in this field and the sensation caused by this picture needs no comment from me.

In all our offerings we look further ahead than the particular picture we are turning into cash. If it lacks picture value we will not offer it in the first place. We take but a nominal percentage of the productions that are shown to us for handling in the independent market, and we have tried to make it known, not by advertising or by idle claims, but by actual results that we are sincerely interested in the future of the independent market and will never offer a picture that lacks the quality to aid the development of that market and convince the exhibitors that the independent exchange can give him money making pictures.

We have proven this in our six-reel feature, "The Victim," in our Hallroom Boys Comedies, in "Screen Snapshots" in our Star Ranch Westerns and will continue to do so in our forthcoming super Western feature, "Dangerous Love" and a lengthy list of new short stuff and features we will have in the New Year.

In conclusion I want to repeat my constantly reiterated advice to the State Rights Buyers to acquire and handle only pictures with genuine box office value and not stuff because it is cheap. The better quality productions may cost more at the start, but they will not only make more money themselves but they will build a foundation for you.

"Big Year Ahead"—Greiver

"SIX months ago Russell-Greiver-Russell opened its office at 8 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, to act as distributing agents for film producers. During this period we have expanded rapidly, and now our activities embrace productions, supervision of one of the large studios on the Coast, as well as supervision of a national distributing organization.

"We are grateful to the industry for so kindly receiving our initial efforts, the Fritzi Ridgeway two-reel Westerns, the single-reel Tusun comedies, five-reel Cuneo Westerns and 'Gasoline Alley' animated cartoon.

"We now have under consideration numerous propositions for the production of film suitable for our requirements, which are very precise and exact. They must be the very finest of their kind before we will give them consideration.

"Indications point to an unusually active and prosperous forthcoming year for the industry, to all members of which we extend cordial greetings."

The Jans Policy Is "Show' Em!"

HERMAN F. JANS, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, interviewed on his return from Toronto, Canada, expresses himself rather forcibly as to the lack of nerve displayed by Independent State Right buyers at the present time. He states that although all critics agreed that his big production, "Madonnas and Men," was one of the coming successes of the year that he found the state right buyers very slow in paying the prices for their territory which would leave rim a legitimate profit.

"Consequently," says Mr. Jans, "I was compelled to take the 'bull' by the horns and show the state right buyers the possibilities in "Madonnas and Men." This I did through the medium of the Madison theatre in Detroit where I placed the production for a week. So big was the business there that the engagement was continued for another week — something entirely contrary to the policy of the Madison. Several state right buyers were convinced by this showing, but were then compelled to pay more for their territory, on account of the competition induced, than I had originally offered.

"I found some difficulty in selling the Canadian state rights and accordingly I put the production on at Toronto for a week. Here also it was continued for a second week and during this week which is just concluding, so great was the success of "Madonnas and Men" that time was offered me for thirty continuous weeks playing the legitimate theatres in Canada, starting at Montreal and going through to Vancouver, British Columbia. As these contracts carried guarantees of first money, I, of course, immediately accepted them and attached my signature. After I had consummated this deal, the Allan Bros. of Canada immediately purchased the rights for Canada so that in addition to the money for the territory which I had originally asked I am getting the receipts from the thirty weeks' run.

"Similar offers for city engagements have been made me in the states and it is my plan to route the production wherever the buyers prove hesitant in purchasing at the figure offered. It is hard for me to understand the reason for Independent buyers, operating as they are now compelled to in an overcrowded market, preferring to buy so-called special features simply because they are cheap when it is a known and proven fact that the real big special compels more business by far than five ordinary so-called specials would bring in to the box office.

"The state right buyers have had this experience time and again and it seems to me they should be guided by their experience. If, however, it is their intention to continue their attitude of insisting upon being shown, I will continue to follow my present policy of showing them, because I have proven that I have the production that will get the biggest business possible in any theatre."

1921 to See Stabilization

Easing of Tension to Influence Industry States Goldstein

"THE trade conditions for the coming year in the motion picture field," prophesied Joseph M. Goldstein, treasurer of Canyon Pictures Corporation, will be governed entirely upon the developments which are now transpiring in the financial affairs of the country. It is said to say that as soon as stocks and other securities become stabilized, the present period of depression in mercantile fields will be relieved, which will have a direct influence upon the amusement enterprises.

"With capital accessible, many undertakings both in theatre construction and in production which are now being held in abeyance, will be brought to a rapid conclusion. In the meantime, the market will be given an opportunity to work off the great excess of unreleased merchandise and within the next year productions will be an absolute necessity if theatres are to be supplied with new subjects." The new administration in Washington will also have a great influence upon the picture industry.

"One of the outstanding facts in the reviews of the motion picture industry for the last year has been the neglect of the producers at large to realize that theatre construction has not kept pace with the rapid production of pictures; with the result that many excellent photoplays are either being held on the shelf or being sacrificed because there is not enough theatres in the country to afford a profitable showing to all of them.

"Another important phase which will present many interesting developments for the coming year will be the contest between the independent and the so-called trust interests of the industry. The present indications are that the independents are more than holding their own; and so long as Wall Street money can not control or buy all the best brains in the business, that the independent will remain a large factor in the realms of the American motion picture."

Does Over-Production Exist?

By Harry A. Sherman

WHAT of 1921?

This is the question, which every one in the industry, especially in the independent field, is asking just now.

Calamity howlers, of whom there are always more than a few in the motion picture business, are proclaiming from the housetops that we are entering on an era of "bad business," that conditions are steadily growing worse throughout the industry and that we are doomed to a long period of "slump."

Old Over Production, as usual, is blamed in part for the trouble.

This is always the cry, when inferior pictures fail to get the fancy prices expected for them by their owners, which happens when there are sufficient attractions available at fair figures of real box office quality.

This is the situation now. There are a large number of productions on the market and the independent exchange and exhibitors are able to exercise a choice and, of course, are doing it at the expense of the poor picture.

This condition will exist until the natural processes of elimination become effective and the producer of inferior pictures turns his talents into some other field of endeavor. Then we shall hear no more of this particular type of calamity howler.

In my opinion 1921 is going to be a record year in the independent field. Producer, distributor and exhibitor alike will prosper as they never have before.

It probably will be a bad one for pikers and pessimists, just as every year in the history of the motion picture industry has been, but for the forward-looking, progressive independent it is big with possibilities.

I look for a year in which all the manifold possibilities for mutual co-operation between the independent producer, distributor and exhibitor, shall be developed as never before, with picture costs stabilized and equitably distributed and the quality of productions standardized and maintained at a consistently high point.

The poor picture is going to lose out, in the independent field at least.

The independent exchangeman and exhibitor today are exercising more and more care in selecting attractions for distribution or booking and will take only productions of merit and real box office value.

There will never be any difficulty, however, in finding a ready market for the good picture.

For the theatre itself, 1921 promises to be a bigger year than any yet seen in the industry. Other business may be affected by the wave of retrenchment now sweeping the country for a long time to come, but the motion picture house will, if anything, do better than it would under normal conditions.

And as long as the theatres can depend on the public to come if they have a good attraction to offer, there will always be room for another good photoplay.

Arrow's New Comedies

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces that they have arranged to distribute on the States Rights market a series of thirteen Romayne Comedies which are now being produced at Culver City, California, in the studio of the Romayne Company.

The first ten of these comedies have been produced and Charles Avery is now at work on the eleventh, which will be entitled "Rhinestone and Robbers," and which should be completed within a week. Production will immediately be started on the next Romayne comedy entitled, "Daffy House."

These comedies are two reels in length and are of the slapstick variety. One of the most principal comediennes in the series is Dot Farley, who has often been called the female Ben Turpin of the screen, due to her ability to cross her eyes at will. The ten comedies already completed are: "Hicksville," "Beachnuts," "Peaceful Valley," "Keyhole Reporter," "Stale Eggs and Sweethearts," "The Villain Still Pursued Her," "Shot in the Kitchen," "Underground Romeo," "Twenty Legs Under the Sea," and "Sewerside."

Friedman Screens His Latest Purchase

"The Servant in the House" was screened for the first time in Chicago at the Film Exchange Building last week by J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, which independent exchange has just purchased the rights for the Central West territory.

Mr. Friedman is preparing an elaborate advertising and exploitation campaign for the picture, and if will have its premiere at a loop theatre.

"The Servant in the House" was produced by H. O. Davis for the Film Booking Office. The story was adapted from a stage play written by Charles Rann Kennedy. The play contains an appeal and the author has not been guilty of preachment, yet there is a remarkable moral back of it. Hugh Ryan Conway directed it and besides Jean Hershalt, Jack Curtis, Claire Anderson, Clara Horton, Edward Pial, John Gilbert and Harvey Clark appear in the cast.

Paul Gilmore to Start Florida Film City

Paul Gilmore is making extensive plans to establish a new film city on the Anna Maria key in Florida. The construction of a large studio and the widening of some of the streets on the island are included in Mr. Gilmore plans. The main thoroughfare is to be made one of the most attractive streets in any film city, it is stated. Mr. Gilmore recently visited the prospective producing center with an engineer, and preliminary plans for the subject were discussed. Mr. Gilmore from his headquarters in Tampa, Fla., announces the completion of the production, "The Isle of Destiny." Reports from the laboratory in New York describe the "photography as great" and the "scenery wonderful."

There has been such a demand in the foreign field for the Ford Educational Weekly that the films are now titled in eleven different languages.

The Ford Motion Picture laboratories have met this demand and have installed every necessary facility to deliver these films to the foreign market in a high-class manner.

In America the Ford Educational Weekly now enjoys one of the largest circulations of any weekly product and is a typical Ford success. With the films in eleven different languages it is undoubtedly going to repeat that success abroad.

First Run in Chicago for "Honeymoon Ranch"

A first run in Chicago and two more sales on "Honeymoon Ranch" are reported by Bert Lubin, who is now on the road visiting independent exchanges relative to the marketing of his future releases.

Lubin sold "Honeymoon Ranch" Illinois rights to the Doll-Van Film Corporation, who immediately booked the five-reel Western for a first run at the Alcazar theatre. It is expected that the Doll-Van Film Corp. will also handle Lubin's second picture, "Crossed Trails," which is now in the cutting.

The other sale announced by Lubin was to the First National Exhibitors Exchange of Minneapolis, who bought the Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota rights for the picture.

"Crossed Trails," Lubin's second release, will in all probability be ready about January 1.

Rockett to Do Series for Hodkinson

The Rockett Film Company, producers of "The Truant Husband," starring Mahlon Hamilton, Francelia Billington and Betty Blythe, are to make a series of productions for release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. "The Truant Husband" was written by Albert Payson Terhune and appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Editor-in-Chief Al. Rockett announces that stories of the calibre of "The Truant Husband" are greatly in need, and a call for more of such screen material has gone forth to the press from the office of Mr. Rockett.

Al. Walker in Chicago

Alfred Walker, director general of the World Motion Picture Corp., was in Chicago the first part of the week of December 12. He was scheduled to close contracts for the distribution of the weekly pictorial section for newspapers as issued by the World. Other matters relative to distribution and sales were taken up with some of the prominent film executives and exchangemen of Chicago.

75 Per Cent Increase Over 1920

By W. E. Shallenberger

THE prevailing question in the motion picture industry seems to me to be today. "What will be the status of the independent producer, distributor and exhibitor during the coming year?"

A careful analysis of the situation convinces me that conditions never were more favorable to the independent than they are at the present time. In fact so firm is my belief in this that the Arrow Film Corporation has laid out a campaign to handle the business far in excess of anything we have heretofore done. We are planning on at least a 75 per cent increase in our activities over 1921 and 1920 was the greatest year in the history of our organization.

I have just returned from a trip through the West and conditions there which have come under my personal observation fully bare out my statements.

Everywhere exhibitors are booking pictures on the open market and booking the best attractions it is possible to get. They are looking more and more to the independent exchanges and producers for these attractions.

Producers are turning to the independent field as a distributing medium as they have never done before. More and better picturs are offered for release on the independent market today than at any time in the history of the motion picture business, and these production compare favorably with any on the market today. One has only to look over a list of features offered in the independent field today to verify this statement.

A remark frequently heard is that the market is over crowded with pictures and that therefore business is going to be bad. The only one who is going to suffer from this is the producer or distributor of an inferior picture. This is a condition that I think is extremely beneficial to the motion picture industry as a whole, for it means an increased interest in the quality of pictures turned out for both producer and distributor is made to realize that "any old thing" will not do. A picture must possess quality, it must have a good story, the best of direction and settings, and must be enacted by a capable cast. Where an exhibitor has a large number of pictures to choose from, more pictures in the field in fact than he can possibly plan in a year's time, the result will naturally be that he will be more careful in his selection and will book only those pictures which are the best. Producers realizing this are making better features and the result is bound to prove advantageous to the industry in general.

I believe also that there will be an improvement in the advertising by motion picture companies and by motion picture exhibitors. The industry has grown out of the class where the cheap ten, twenty and thirty type of advertising will pay. It is a big business in which a vast number of people are engaged, a business which furnishes entertainment to millions of people daily and a business to which many of the best minds in the world are bringing their best efforts to improve and nothing can hurt that business more than the cheap advertising, the salacious titles and suggestive paper.

This type of advertising is not needed to sell motion pictures, it is a mistaken idea to think that it is, and if I had my way I would have this type of advertising absolutely barred from every newspaper, magazine or periodical in the country. What we need is a censorship of advertising more than a censorship of pictures.

I believe that one of the principal factors of the success of the distributors will be service. Too much stress cannot be laid on this point. The exchangeman who renders the best service from every point of view to the exhibitors will be the man who does not meet profitable business. Part of that service, and a very large part of it, must consist of not misrepresenting his product to the exhibitors. Today there is no necessity for an exhibitor playing an inferior picture. It is just as possible for him to get as good pictures as there are in the market from the independent exchangeman, in fact, I believe there are better pictures offered on the independent market today than can be found on any program but the distributor must convince the exhibitor that he has good pictures and when he represents a picture to be a certain class of picture it must be what he represents it. He must establish exhibitors confidence and his success is assured.

Today it is not only possible to get the best pictures on the independent market but it is possible to get them at a far better price than it would be to secure the same picture from a National distributing organization. The reason for this is obvious. The independent exchangeman has no New York "home office" expense to bear. He is not paying a lot of fancy salaries to executives back in New York who are unfamiliar with his territory and conditions therein but nevertheless dictate to him the price he must get for his product. Nor is he burdened with a number of efficiency men sent out by the "home office" who often times cost more confusion, waste and down right loss of money than they can ever hope to make for their company. Quite the contrary, he has an exchange in which his own money is invested, and he has a vital interest in making that exchange pay, and he knows that by taking a picture and supplying it to his exhibitors at a fair price and at the same time allowing him a margin of profit which will permit him to turn over his stock, pay his salaries and put a little money in the bank he is conducting a business which is profitable to both the exhibitor and himself.

Reelcraft's Plans for 1921

High Class Short Subjects Promised by R. C. Cropper

NINETEEN-TWENTY - ONE is to be a banner year for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, according to the announcement of President R. C. Cropper.

"Nineteen-twenty-one is to be a big year for Reelcraft," says Cropper, "starting January first we will release a new series of releases for each week in that month. First will come the series of Al Christie produced single-reel comedies, featuring Betty Compson and Billy Rhodes, made for the Mutual program and now re-issued by Reelcraft. The following week, the Reelcraft Scenic Nature Beautiful series will start on a weekly release schedule; this series has been nearly a year in the making, cameramen have covered nearly every part of the United States, and many thousand feet of film made in foreign countries has been received; each release is to picture the beauty spots of nature with a thread of continuity throughout that will maintain the interest, for instance "The Spirit of the Trapper.' 'Wind Goddess' and 'Crater Lake,' all have a cast of players in the scenic views.

"The third week brings to the Exhibitors our long promised series of single-reel comedies featuring little Bud Duncan in his 'Bud and His Buddies' comedies. It has taken six months to arrange and perfect this series, but we believe the public will decide that the time and money were wisely and well spent. We expect this series to be a record breaker.

The last week in January will introduce our new comedian, George Clarke, in a series of fifty-two single-reel slap-stick Paragon Comedies. Slap-stick is to be the rule throughout, and of the broadest kind. There has been a demand from our distributors for real slap-stick and Clarke surely is delivering the goods.

"All of the above represent our beginning for the new year. For February we have two more series of two-reel comedies now being prepared. March will also introduce additional product to the Reelcraft program.

"Our distributing organization will also be increased considerably during the coming year, and more offices opened to care for our rapidly increasing business. All in all we plan to make it a real successful year for all theatres playing our service, improving our product and cementing the friendships already formed between exhibitors, our distributors and producers."

Olmsted Joins World

E. F. Olmsted has been appointed director of sales of the newspaper service department of the World Motion Picture Corp. He will act as one of the assistants to David A. Murphy, general director of the department. He is now on a trip and before returning to New York will visit many of his former newspaper acquaintances. He will call on the Metropolitan newspaper publishers which the World has already contracted with for service.

Celebrated Books Four Serials at One Time

Under a new plan inaugurated by Celebrated Players Film Corporation, that company is now booking four serials at one time. This new sales plan gives the exhibitor a continuous flow of chaptered stories for fifty weeks.

The four serials to be furnished under the Celebrated plan are "The Vanishing Trails," "The Lurking Peril," "In the Clutches of the Hindu," and "The Veiled Mystery," pictures which have met with praise at both the hands of exhibitors and the reviewers at special showings.

The Celebrated Players Film Corporation has outlined an extensive advertising campaign to back up this fifty weeks' advance booking. This plan not only reduces the concern's selling cost about one-fourth of what it would ordinarily cost to book each serial separately, but also makes it easier for the theatreman as well as cheaper.

To Film Screen Drama in Borneo

The "Wild Man of Borneo" will come to town in real truth, according to arrangements just completed by the Dutch-American Syndicate of St. Louis.

An expedition is to sail shortly after the first of the year for the purpose of transferring the "Wild Man of Borneo" from real life in his native lair to a strip of celluloid. The present expedition will comprise two cameramen, a director and a complete cast of players for a proposed drama to be filmed in the environment of the island.

The Dutch-American Syndicate has arranged to release all of its Borneo films through the Independent Films Association of Chicago.

Reelcraft Salesmen to Have Selling Drive

The salesmen of the New York Exchange of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation have set aside the coming month as "Singer Month" in the territory of Greater New York and Northern New Jersey, and are endeavoring to secure a hundred per cent representation of the four new series offered by Reelcraft during the month of January in every theatre now showing Reelcraft service. This effort has been planned by the salesmen themselves as a testimonial to Mr. Julius Singer, manager of the New York Exchange.

C. B. C. Super-Feature Adapted From Novel

"Dangerous Love," the Western super-feature now being offered the Independent Market by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York and which was adapted from the novel "Ben Warman" by Charles E. Winter and directed by Charles E. Bartlett from a screen version by Hal Hoadley, is said to be a picture of thrilling action, of love and sentiment, of hate and jealousy, and portrayed in that section of the country where a man's strength is tested to the uttermost if he wants to make good.

Publicity on the Increase

Chicago Firm Reports Demand for Publicity is Growing Fast

AMONG the Chicago advertising and publicity people, the Master-Advertisers, who are handling accounts for several nationally known producers, say they are particularly able to affirm that the promoters of the cinema now regard publicity as second only in importance to quality of production. A large amount of work has been coming into this firm, necessitating increase in working force and office facilities.

One of the late efforts of the firm, from which good response has been noted, is the sixteen-page press book of the production, "For the Freedom of Ireland," by Creation Films, Inc. The press books for the first Independent Films Association Neal Hart picture—"Hell's Oasis," also was the work of the Master Advertisers. They are now planning the advance publicity for the next Hart film play, "Sky Fire," a tale of the North.

The Capital Film Company, sponsoring Fritzi Ridgeway in a series of two-reel Westerns, has placed the publicity of the series in the hands of the Master Advertisers. They are now engaged on a press-book exploiting the entire series. On completion of this work a sixteen-page press book for a forthcoming production, starring Lester Cuneo, will be started.

Emile De Recat, producer of Chicago Summer Park Revues, who is now producing two-reel moving picture comedies at the Essanay studio of Chicago's north side, will depend on the Master Advertisers for the publicity, heralding the series of laugh provokers he has underway, starring Mary Jane Blair.

While not neglecting other lines, the Master Advertisers announce they will specialize in the preparation of press books. The addition of Matt E. Simon, formerly of the Chicago Daily News, to their staff in the capacity of assistant to Manager Sam Gold and Harold Bement, artist, formerly of Charles Everett Johnson, was one of their recent steps taken to widen their scope so as to render greater service to the film trade.

Broadway Favorite in Star Ranch Western

"A Dangerous Tenderfoot," which is the title of the third release of the "Star Ranch Westerns," now being offered the State Rights market by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, is said to be a picture of the rugged and primitive West with a woman of that great out-of-doors who by circumstances lives in an environment of hardened men, winning out.

The cast includes such players as Jack Halliday, now leading man for Margaret Anglin in "The Woman of Bronze," now playing the Frazee theatre, New York, and Eva Lang. Otis B. Thayer has done good directing in this Western thrilling two-reeler.

Proctor Managers Will Exploit "County Fair"

On Tuesday, December 14, General Manager Hart of the Proctor Enterprises assembled the entire managerial staff of the Proctor theatres, twenty managers in all, at the Simplex Projection Room, New York, where they obtained their first view of "The County Fair." After the screening a general discussion and exchange of ideas took place. Addresses on Practical Exploitation were given by Manager Hart and S. Barrett McCormick, who gave the managers a detailed account of how they put over the Tourneur Special in Toledo.

The Keith Offices have set aside a certain amount of cash awards to be competed for by the various managers of the Keith, Proctor and B. S. Moss theatres in Greater New York. It is purely an exploitation competition. But as Manager Hart states, "with the keen and friendly rivalry which now long before the competition starts is existing, I can see nothing but smashed box-office records in all our theatres during the run of Maurice Tourneur's 'The County Fair.'"

Inter-ocean Reports Brisk Trading

Despite the fact that there is what some local motion picture exporters decry as "a period of inactivity in the foreign market," the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, well known exporters, specializing in the distribution of American-made films in foreign film markets, report a decided briskness in trade. In a statement issued to the trade press the early part of this week, Gus Schlessinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, makes mention of the fact that the company has disposed of numerous productions for many choice foreign territories. Prominent among the sales listed is the disposition of the series of Black Diamond Comedies, twenty-four in number, to one of the largest film renters operating in China for physical distribution throughout the Chinese Republic. This sale, it is said, involves a very large cash consideration. What makes it unusual, however, is the fact that very few motion picture sales are being made to film renters in China at the present time.

Many Advertising Aids for "Cowboy Jazz"

"Cowboy Jazz," the special two-reel production which S. & E. Enterprises is at present distributing on the State Rights market, has been provided with a large amount of advertising supplies to assist the exhibitor in exploiting this novelty film. This picture was made under the ausnices of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and presents the champion cowboys of the world in a series of remarkable stunts, including riding, roping, steer throwing, etc. All of the advertising supplies have been prepared to bring out the tieup with the various Elk lodges as prominently as possible, and the slides, posters, lobby display, etc., carry an appeal to the members of the different lodges throughout the country.

Christmas Prologue Is Arranged by Equity

The exploitation staff of Equity pictures announce a Christmas prologue for its Conway Tearle feature, "Whispering Devils," in conjunction with the New York Concert League. The musical element, for which Nathaniel Finston, formerly conductor of the Rialto and musical director the Capitol, New York, and now with the New York Concert League, is responsible, embraces a variety of appropriate songs and orchestral numbers.

The reading matter allows the exhibitor choice between "Human Frailty," Bryant's famous poem; Tennyson's "Ring Out Wild Bells," and selections from Dickens's "Christmas Carol." The stage settings call for an impressive Christmas scene. One of the settings is in a nursery, with Christmas-tree, toys, fireplace, stockings, etc. Another setting suggested has more of the church-like atmosphere with a background of arched windows with colored art-glass, a pulpit, etc. The lighting is from rim to blue flood, which reveals a man, in ministerial garb, sitting pensively in a high back chair. For exhibitors whose equipment would not permit any elaborate settings, this prologue is modest and inexpensive enough for general use.

The Christmas prologue on "Whispering Devils" will be distributed to the exhibitors through the state-right buyers of Equity's Conway Tearle feature.

Washburn's Convincing Kissing Scene

Bryant Washburn, who has just completed David Foster's play, "The Road to London," in England, has found a new manner of keeping down production costs. Foster's play demanded that the American hero kiss the petite French maid, and Washburn was resolved to make the picture closely follow the original. The answer was simple. Mrs. Washburn played the maid, and as a result there is a thoroughly convincing kissing scene.

The point of the lower production costs is that the kiss constituted payment for all professional services rendered. In speaking of which Mrs. Washburn said, "Nothing could be fairer."

"The Road to London" is Mr. Washburn's first picture for Screenplays Production.

Texas Guinan Returns to New York

Texas Guinan, who will be starred by Victor Kremer in a series of Western society features, has returned to New York, ready to begin work on her first production. She has been touring the country for the past two months as a member of the Marcus Loew party which visited the new theatres under construction.

S-E Markets Comedies

In addition to its feature subjects, the new Shenfield-Ennis organization announces a series of eight two-part Midget Comedies. These pictures will be sold on the series plan only.

Joan Aims Blow at Blue Laws

Smashing Idea to Aid Industry in Fight Against Reformers

THE JOAN FILM SALES CO. this week steps to the front with a plan to combat the threatening Blue-Law bigotry, fostered by the self-styled sponsors of Sunday saintliness, the Lord's Day Association. By means of an ingenious combination of the sword and the olive-branch, the exploitation staff of Joan, headed by Nat Rothstein, advertising manager, has found a way of making capital out of the "Sour Sunday" agitation, and adding profit to its propaganda against the anti-entertainment mania.

The Joan plan is surprisingly simple. Briefly, it will mean that instead of the motion-picture industry suffering from the Blue-Law campaign, it will benefit thereby. In a nutshell, the Joan scheme enlists the public—the motion-picture fans—on the side of the exhibitor and the film industry in general, and makes the local theatre the headquarters of popular sentiment against the Sour Sunday zealots. It transforms the motion-picture house into an unofficial court of justice and promotes the exhibitor to the rank of Public Defender. It goes further—it adds to the patronage of the theatre by interesting those who seldom attend the movies on Sunday. All lovers of Sunday pleasure will be obliged to register their protest at the local motion-picture theatre, for want of any other medium, for the exhibitor will be the representative of the recreation-loving public in general, as well as the film fans.

In brief, this plan provides for the use of the press-book, poster, slide, herald, circular and every other advertising and publicity accessory accompanying every Joan release, as a means of popularizing the Blue Law protest. Every device of advertising and exploitation used by the exhibitor to promote the patronage of a Joan picture is forged into a weapon against the Puritanical propagators of the "Solemn Sunday" obsession.

The first gun that the exhibitor fires against the "No-Fun-On-Sunday" movement is through his mailing list. The patron is informed of the "Blue Law danger, and is asked to declare his resentment in joint assembly at the local theatre on a certain night. Heralds follow this up and are distributed in stores, at legitimate theatres, clubs, etc. They are headed "To Our Citizens" and ask them pointedly whether they want their personal liberties to be overruled by a fanatical minority. On the back of this announcement is one giving the details of the protest meeting, the time it is called for, and asking every liberty-loving citizen to register his protest by signing the Protest-Register in the lobby of the theatre. The last line of the herald is an announcement of the showing of "The Hardest Way," the Joan feature, after the meeting. Prominent public men are scheduled to address the audience at the indignation meeting.

An all-embracing tie-up with the other agencies affected by the Blue Law madness is also suggested. The most effective of all powers in this class is of course, the newspaper. Among the intended victims of the "Lord's Day" agitation is the Sunday newspaper, it will be remembered. Co-operation between the exhibitor and the newspaper for their common defense, is a foregone certainty. The power of the press in swinging public opinion against the "Sour Sunday" possibility, and incidentally increasing the patronage at motion-picture theatres, is part of the plan outlined by the Joan exploitation forces. By this arrangement, the theatre will secure, free of cost, an amount of publicity and support that could not be bought for money. In this particular case, the press and the exhibitor are allied in interest, and the motion-picture industry as a whole could find no stronger champion than the newspaper. In addition, the support of all the sporting-goods companies, automobile interests, allied amusement agencies, and all local stores, i. e.: the whole range of organizations affected by the "Blue Law" madness, will be lined up to strike a solid blow against the enemies of wholesome Sunday recreation.

The alignment of the liberal element among the churches is also provided for in the Joan campaign. The innumerable cases where clergymen have endorsed particular productions as influential in improving moral sentiment, are cited for the exhibitor's use. An open-letter advertisement contains another effective attack against the Blue Law intolerance.

By far the most sensational and effective volley of attack against the "Sour Sunday" evil is suggested by Joan to exhibitors. This project is as follows: The exhibitor gets in touch with the advertising department of his local newspaper and presents to them a means of realizing an enormous amount of advertising revenue and at the same time inflicting a wholesale indictment of the Blue Law movement. The advertising-solicitor or manager of the newspaper is to write a scorching editorial criticism of the "Lord's Day" dementia after which a collection of advertisements of local merchants affected unfavorably by the Blue Laws, follow. The editorial reads to the effect that the newspaper and the business men whose "ads" are below are staunchly opposed to "Sour Sunday."

The Joan Film Sales Co. calls particular attention to the fact that its campaign, as outlined above, against the "Blue Laws" is by no means restricted to the protection of motion-picture interests alone. The suggestion as to co-operative advertising just made, as well as all the other angles touched upon, are calculated to benefit every other business disastrously affected by the proposed Blue Law legislation.

The Joan Film Sales Co. also begs to add that it is open to any criticism and suggestion that members of the industry may offer, for the sounder this campaign is thrashed out the more formidable the resistance against the "Sour Sunday" studipidty will be. It respectfully offers the plan touched upon in this statement for the consideration of the National Motion Picture Association. It is Joan's sincere belief that the film industry bears the brunt of responsibility as well as the danger of the Blue Law movement, and that it now has a supreme opportunity of striking a blow for public freedom by the co-operation of the screen and the showman.

"The Parish Priest" Opens

Famous Hart Stage Success Runs on Screen in Author's Home City

AFTER twenty years history is repeating itself in the announcement of "The Parish Priest," just made by Herman J. Garfield and scheduled for December 13 at the Capitol theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa. On January 25, 1900, almost twenty years ago to the day, Dan Sully made his first appearance in this drama, little dreaming that he was destined to play it year after year in every city of any size in the country until his death. The old notices of the first opening tell us that the "new" Daniel L. Hart drama was an instantaneous success and an "appropriate successor to 'Sag Harbor,' 'The Old Homestead' and 'Shore Acres.'"

Once more the popular Dan Hart drama is scheduled for an opening, this time in the home city of its famous author. The familiar characters, portrayed by so many noted artists during the twenty long seasons of the play's remarkable history, have been carefully drawn under the personal supervision of the author and are played by ideal types. The lovable young priest, around whom the action revolves, is William Desmond. Ruth Rennick was chosen to play the role originated by Marion Shirley; Margaret Livingston appears as Agnes Cassidy, while Walter Perry, Thos. Ricketts, Carl Miller, Billy Bennett and J. Morris Foster are also prominent in the cast.

Realizing the importance of the opening, Manager Fred Herman of the Capitol theatre left nothing undone that would add to the success of the occasion. The presence of the author was assured, while every official of importance in the city of Wilkes-Barre was provided with a seat of honor; a beautiful prologue, rehearsed with a full chorus of voices and a special stage set built in keeping with the atmosphere of the story.

To Picture Life Story of Jenny Lind

Harry Leonhardt, president, and Harvey B. Day, general manager, of the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc., announce that on behalf of the Allied they have entered into a contract with P. B. Lyon, general manager of the Jenny Lind Photoplay Company to produce and distribute a feature production of the never-to-be-forgotten Swedish nightingale.

Mr. Leonhardt, who will personally supervise the production, did not say where it would be made, but it is understood that the greater part of the production work will be done in California, with shots taken in New York where Jenny Lind made her first American appearance under the direction of P. T. Barnum, and at Boston and Northampton, Mass., where she was married and spent her honeymoon respectively.

In the work of production Mr. Leonhardt will keep with him the same staff that aided in the production of the George Arliss picture, "The Devil," and which included James Young as director, Harry Fischbeck and Frank Hampton, studio manager.

"Midchannel" Star at Theatre Opening

Clara Kimball Young, Equity star, appeared before a distinguished gathering at the opening of Astor theatre in Philadelphia recently. Despite the pouring rain, an overflowing house was on hand to greet her. She was introduced by Ben Amsterdam, and made a brief speech of appreciation, after which she complimented Mr. Amsterdam for his enterprise and spirit in erecting one of Philadelphia's finest theatres. It was only after a number of "curtain calls" that she was allowed to leave.

Miss Young's second personal appearance in the Quaker City was at the Great Northern theatre. "Midchannel," in which Miss Young is starred, had just been screened when the actress was introduced to the audience.

In the dedication of Amsterdam's Astor theatre, Miss Young met many of the most prominent film men of the East, among them Sam Grand, of the Federated Boston; Arthur White, of the Federated, New York; Harry Bernstein, of Commonwealth, New York; Walter Green, Bill Steiner, Abe Werner and Joe Brandt—all of New York. Joseph I. Schnitzer, president of the Equity Pictures Corp, was among the guests.

"Service" — Lesser's Slogan

Active Year Planned by Irving Lesser on West Coast

"SERVICE to anyone who desires Service," is the New Year slogan of Irving M. Lesser, general manager of the Western Pictures Exploitation Company. According to a recent announcement, Sol Lesser and Irving Lesser have taken up different, but closely associated fields of endeavor. Now it is Sol Lesser, the exhibitor, and Irving Lesser, the producer and distributor.

The Western Pictures Exploitation project, which was formed three months ago with Irving Lesser at its head, has now more than passed the embryo stage and looks forward to a prosperous New Year.

Mr. Lesser's experience in the motion picture field is one of the biggest assets of the new company. Having spent the greater part of 1919 exploiting and distributing D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" throughout the West, Mr. Lesser is thoroughly acquainted with the territory his company covers. He is also interested in the All-Star Features Distributors, Inc., the Educational Film Corporation of Southern California and the Sol Lesser Motion Picture Enterprises.

Starting in 1906, Mr. Lesser has been actively engaged in the picture business for the past fourteen years. He has held large interests in state right pictures and exchanges throughout the Western States. He also has had large theatre holdings and extensive interests in the manufacturing of pictures from time to time.

In reference to his latest project and its prospects for the New Year, Mr. Lesser makes the following announcement:

"Through my long experience in the picture business, as a producer, distributor and exhibitor, I believe that I have gained a thorough knowledge of every phase of the motion picture industry, which should be considered valuable. It is my intention to capitalize on this experience to the extent of becoming heavily interested in the manufacturing and distributing of pictures. I am in business to serve anyone who desires service."

Since its organization the Western Pictures Exploitation Company has successfully disposed of the entire United States territory on a number of pictures. "That Something," produced by the Hermann Film Corporation with Margery Wilson and Charles Meredith in the feature roles; "Neptune's Bride," written and directed by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, author of "Neptune's Daughter," and featuring Pluvia, considered the world's most perfectly formed girl; "The Stranger," produced by Hugh B. Evans, Jr.; "Sky Eye," produced by Sol Lesser; the United Film Corporation's feature, "Sins of the World," starring Loys de Kay; "Souls of Men," the G. and J. Photoplay Corporation's production, featuring Will Jefferis, Yvette Mitchell and Lucille Young; the Romayne Super Film Corporation's "The Toreador," or "Bull Fights of Spain," and Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," with the Sennett Bathing Girls.

A very novel, historic and instructive feature, "The Missions of California," is the latest film to be secured by Mr. Lesser for world distribution. This picture, produced by the Scenic Art Productions, promises to create no little interest, due to the fact that it will be distributed at the same time the California Missions Restoration Association conducts its million dollar drive for the purpose of restoring the historic Spanish missions to their former state.

"The Art of Diving," a one-reel film featuring Annette Kellermann, has proven a big seller and has received unlimited praise everywhere. In this picture, the Blanchard Film Company used the cinal slow motion process camera with remarkable success.

The above named pictures are being handled in various parts of the country by the following representative exchanges: Greater New York, New York State and Northern New Jersey, Empire State Film Corp., New England, Federated Film Exchange of New England, Eastern Pennsylvania, and Southern New Jersey, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Inc., Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida, Associated First National Pictures of Washington, D. C.; Michigan and Ohio, Standard Film Service Corporation; Kentucky and Tennessee, First National Exhibitors Exchanges of Kentucky and Tennessee, Illinois and Indiana, Celebrated Players Film Corporation; Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Associated First National Pictures of Northwest; Iowa and Nebraska, A. H. Blank Enterprises; Missouri and Southern Illinois, United Film Service; Kansas and Western Missouri, Crescent Film Exchange; Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, True Film Company; Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana, De Luxe Feature Film Co.; California, Nevada and Arizona, All-Star Features Distributors, Inc.

In addition to his extensive interests in the distributing of pictures, Mr. Lesser is now actively engaged in the production field. With Jackie Coogan, the famous child actor, who played the title role in Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid," as the star, the Irving Lesser Productions is filming a series of "Peck's Bad Boy" features which promise to set a precedent among child pictures.

Another branch of Mr. Lesser's extensive business is the management of star, actors and directors and the handling of plays and stories. One of his chief accounts in this department in Wheeler Oakman, well known leading man, who recently completed the lead in Tod Browning's "Outside the Law."

Mesco Co. Busy in Missouri

"Jesse James" Feature Nearing Completion in Middle West

WHY go east or west to make motion pictures when there is so much natural beauty in Missouri and the middle western states waiting to be screened? This question confronted a group of Kansas City capitalists and business men early last summer, and since no good reason was forthcoming to vanquish the project, the Mesco Pictures Corporation of Kansas City was chartered under the laws of Missouri for the purpose of making photoplays in the Middle West. The idea was to produce only really superior pictures and the first requisite was an experienced director. The company found him in the person of Franklin B. Coates, widely known as a director, Amazon explorer, and writer of successful scenarios in the studios of both coasts.

Missouri has one character whose life and adventures are stranger and more thrilling than any which might be conceived of by the lurid imagination of the average scenario writer. This character is, of course, Jesse James, so Director Coates went down into the James country around the little village of Kearney in the Missouri River valley, and with Jesse James Jr., only living child of the outlaw, and a number of old men and women who had known Jesse James, contributing many heretofore unrevealed facts concerning the life of the most hunted character in the history of outlawry. Mr. Coates himself wrote the scenario, "Jesse James Under the Black Flag."

With infinite pains Director Coates selected the cast. Jesse James, Jr., young attorney of Kansas City, appears in role of his father with Margaret Hungerford playing opposite Mr. James. The supporting cast numbers more than 300 persons. Skilled horsemen and horsewomen appear in many of the scenes. Indians in costume revive the old frontier atmosphere. Three reels of the eight dealing with a romantic epoch in the life of Jesse James were filmed in Santa Fe, N. M., where the Spanish architecture of the town and the Castilian faces of the residents subtly portrayed the period of Jesse James' Mexican exploits.

Work on the interior sets is now in progress in the Rothacker studio in Chicago.

Final Scenes Shoot on "The Tame Cat"

Word has been received by the Arrow Film Corporation from Dramafilms that Will Bradley, the director of "The Tame Cat," has just returned from Charleston, S. C., where he shot the final scenes on this production, which is now being cut and titled, and will be ready for early release.

"THE EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS"
(Perret-Pathe)

A Splendid Production Given Mystery Story

FROM a production standpoint, "The Empire of Diamonds" is one of the best pictures we have ever seen. Excluding the story, which is of the average mystery variety, the feature is a combination of wonderful shots which begin in London, take in Paris and its suburbs and then jump to Monte Carlo.

The production is another illustration of the artistry which is possessed by French directors in building beautiful backgrounds for their pictures, and Leonce Perret is no exception to the rule.

He has taken a story, and filled in its weak spots with plenty of action and thrills and then swung back to the mystery sequence which is ever before us and developed it by degrees until it reaches a strong climax.

The story is of the French variety and it is a question whether American audiences will be interested in the type of "deep-dyed villain and his accomplices," portrayed as they are in the French style.

However this may be, the story is well told, has its gripping moments and has a pretty romance running through it.

One of the strong thrills introduced shows the villain setting fire to a house in which he has tied one of his enemies so securely that one would believe it impossible for him to make an escape.

He does, however, by reaching under a door and seizing a knife with which he cuts the ropes which bind him and then climbs up story after story through flames and smoke until he reaches the top where he swings out on the wing of a wind-mill, letting go just as the building crumbles. High diving is also introduced, the hero and villain jumping from the top of a precipice, which appeared to be fifty or sixty feet in height.

The cast includes American and French actors, among whom are Robert Elliott, Lucy Fox, Henry G. Sell, Ruth Hunter, Leon Mathot, Jacques Volyns, L. Morlas and M. Mailly.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

"The Empire of Diamonds" is a thrilling tale of travel, adventure, conspiracy and romance. The locale is laid on the other side and takes in many beautiful sights including the Champs Elysee, the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile, the Eiffel Tower and the Quai Notre Dame.

PROGRAM READER

New York, London, Paris and the beauty spots of France form the background against which is enacted "The Empire of Diamonds," a romantic and adventurous story of a diamond conspiracy, which will appear at this theatre on next ————.

Matthew Versigny head of an American diamond house, discovers that for years they have been buying and selling spurious stones. Unless the source is traced, the American firm faces ruin.

Then the chase across three thousand miles of water and two continents begins. From New York to Paris, Monte Carlo, Nice and the Riviera, the American, his sister and her fiance, a special agent of the French Secret Service, follow the trail of two daring and clever rogues.

Just as the guilty men are about to be caught, they spring a trap on their pursuer and place the blame of their illegal trade on him.

Leonce Perret has given the picture a wonderful production, it being said that this is the first time in the annals of the motion picture industry that a photoplay has been picturized on the exact locations called for in the story.

Among some of the beautiful spots visited are the Champs Elysee, the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile, the Palace de la Bastille, the Quai d'Anjou, the Grand Palais and the Montmarte.

"THE TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS"
(Whitman Bennett-First National)

Orthodox But Careful Production of Well-Known Play

SIR ARTHUR WING PINERO'S drama, "The Profligate," with its satiric flaying of the double moral code and its sarcastic comparison of those whose sins are found out with those who remain undiscovered, has not proven the best of picture material, especially when the plot is Americanized, but a careful and expensive production coupled with good acting has evolved a feature that will get by with the average audience and perhaps prove quite a hit.

"The Truth About Husbands," a title that seems to us to be no improvement on the original, unless one believes in catering to the morbidly curious, is orthodox from beginning to end. It tells the age old story of the man who has tasted the joys of life, marrying an innocent and trustful girl, with one of his indiscretions becoming known and disrupting his marital happiness.

It also demonstrates once again that some one pays for the sins of the flesh. There are times when the offering becomes rather suggestive. There is much that is commonplace in the development of the story. There are never any high lights of comedy and the finish is convenient. And the message of the play, charity for the transgressions of the male sex, reaches scarcely further than the main title. But since audiences seem never to grow tired of being told what they already know, like to look at nice clothes, big sets, garden parties, etc., and apparently agree with the professor at Yale, or some place, who has said that there are only two things in the world, sex and religion, "The Truth About Husbands" will no doubt prove interesting.

In personal honors Anna Lehr and May McAvoy about split even, although the parts are very well divided and the cast is entirely competent even to the bits, such actors as George Fawcett being seen in one of the small parts.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Adapted from "The Profligate."
By Sir Arthur Wing Pinero.
Directed by Kenneth Webb.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The presentation at the ———— theatre next ———— will be the latest Whitman Bennet production, "The Truth About Husbands." The story is an adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's widely read novel, "The Profligate." Kenneth Webb directed the production, which is capably interpretated by an all-star cast.

The picturization touches with direct frankness upon the follies of youth—the trusting innocence of women combated against the sophistication of man, which, in later life leaves the "skeleton in the cupboard," for which both the transgressors must eventually pay, with the third side of the triangle, the innocent wife, suffering accordingly. At the finish, however, the "other woman," in a spirit of justice to youth and sex, attempts to absolve the husband from blame in the eyes of his wife by assuming the responsibility of the youthful indiscretion. The story presents a new and interesting angle at this point when the husband refuses to allow the "other woman" to become a martyr through falsification and makes a frank avowal of the whole affair to his wife, thereby proving himself to be more or less of a man beneath the surface.

The characterization of Anna Lehr as the "other woman," and May McAvoy as the innocent wife are excellent. Their artistry being greatly enhanced by the fact that they are contrasting types. The remainder of the cast is competent and well chosen, while the lavishness of the production offers a most harmonious background for the players.

PROGRAM READER

It may not be "the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth," as applied literally and individually, but it is the truth that you will be delightfully entertained at the ———— theatre next ———— when the latest Whitman Bennet production, "The Truth About Husbands," will be the attraction ————. The story is taken from Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's famous novel, "The Profligate" and portrays with frankness the three phases of the transgresor in life's eternal triangle—folly—deception—the inevitable disclosure of sin.

A unique finish to an elaborate and splendidly enacted production is brought about when the man and woman who took the false step at the beginning sacrifice their happiness in order that the innocent wife may not suffer in the end. Scenically, the picture abounds with beautiful and artistic backgrounds while an excellent supporting cast adds greatly to the artistic portrayal of the leading roles, enacted by Anna Lehr and May McAvoy.

CATCH LINES

Charity for the husband's past is the theme of this great picture adapted from a play of international renown.

The story of the man who having had his fling, chose the path of respectability only to find his sins could not so easily be disposed of. A new angle of the age old problem that rises from the world's willingness to accept the theory of a double moral standard, one for the woman and another for the man.

"A THOUSAND TO ONE"
(J. Parker Read-Asso. Producers)

Arbitrary Plot and Coincidence Hinder the Values Here

A STORY of a man's redemption after he has purged himself of evil instincts, through coming in contact with suffering, provides the idea behind Parker Read's newest production, "A Thousand to One," starring Hobart Bosworth. This is a theme which is a favorite one upon the screen and it has a universal appeal. Its lifelike dimensions have not been realized by the director because he has allowed arbitrary incident to destroy the logic. It is quite theatrical in several places, though it permits the star to score in a rugged characterization.

The title finds expression in the odds of the redeemed figure, winning a rich bride and thus paying off his debts. He is more a victim of circumstances than downright vicious and an opportunity comes to him to save himself from prison by marrying his ward. Both parties realize that they have made a grave mistake in matrimony, but a convenient train wreck serves to separate them. The husband is reported dead, but he makes his getaway in the excitement of the moment. And from that point he becomes a disciple of virtue unwilling to re-enter his wife's life again. Coincidence is prominently displayed when a title states that his stock manipulations have enabled him to square his debts. And a very bald bit of coincidence is introduced when his evil associate bobs up at the exact moment to hear the regenerated man impart some precious information over the phone to his valet.

The parties to the wreck make their residence in the vicinity—one of them providing the romantic interest until such time as the hero decides to confront his wife again. He is employed as a miner in the other's camp and his sole object is to make his bride happy. If she can find solace with the convalescent it is not his privilege to destroy her pleasure. The picture becomes real hectic and develops along a primitive style. Bosworth is an actor who must make his forcefulness felt. And more than one rugged scene is flashed as he gives battle to the various malcontents. The denouement shows a reconciliation. This is not made the most of by the bride, who fails to reveal any trace of emotion. She might be meeting a Chinaman for all the feeling she displays. The picture covers a great deal of ground and reveals a sumptuous interior of 'Frisco's Chinatown as well as picturesque exteriors. The scene of the wreck is remarkably realistic. It sends forth a good thrill. It keeps moving. There is no doubt about that. There is always a generous sample of suspense measured out. Mr. Bosworth gives his usual vigorous portrayal. But fine actor that he is, one must say that he never penetrates the surface here. The arbitrary incident carries a punch, but eliminates the logic.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Hobart Bosworth is the star of the J. Parker Read production, "A Thousand to One," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. It is a tale of a man's redemption—his self-sacrifice for a woman. As William Newlands, Mr. Bosworth is given a clearly defined character study—one that is similar to his rugged portrayals of the past. He is a gambler here and by the manipulations of stock dealings he is in danger of going to prison. But he learns that a girl is coming from Hawaii to place herself under his guardianship.

Since she is blessed with a goodly fortune it is to his advantage to gain her wealth, by marriage. It is on the honeymoon journey that the bride learns of his brutal nature. And when the train is wrecked, Newlands is reported dead. But the accident makes a man of him and he works to redeem himself in her eyes. He is instrumental in bringing good fortune to others and Beatrice discovers that she loves him after all. The picture permits Bosworth to flash his vigorous style of acting. The supporting company is excellent. The offering is rich in its atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

It has been said of Hobart Bosworth that he is one of the most vital actors on the screen. His pictures are invariably based upon rugged characterizations. They always permit him to indulge in red-blooded action in which he rises to the heights of emotional power. "A Thousand to One" is an excellent example of what the spectators have come to expect in a Bosworth offering. It is two-fisted and vivid and holds the onlooker deeply interested. The picture is adapted from Max Brand's popular story, "Fate's Honeymoon," and tells of the redemption of a man of brutal instincts into a figure of honesty and kindliness. It pulsates with life. "A Thousand to One" will be at the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell them that Hobart Bosworth has another "he-man" picture here. Bring out that it is quite different from his previous essays. Tell that the action is laid for the most part in the exteriors of the Northwest. Tell that it is a vital and vivid picture of a man's redemption. Tell that it is a typical Bosworth picture. Such a campaign should bring forth the crowd. Because Bosworth always gives one his money's worth. Tell that it is as vigorous as "Behind the Door," or "Below the Surface." Bring out that the star is permitted to run the gamut of emotions. Feature him in stills attired in a dress suit and in the garb of a miner. Bill it as a two-fisted melodramatic romance.

"TWO KINDS OF LOVE"
(Universal)

Rather Crude, But Has Moments of Interest

A RATHER crude attempt at writing a Western is exposed in "Two Kinds of Love," but despite its shortcomings of plot and characterization and the fact that the idea has been used since the nickleodion days, it carries some moments of interest. One interesting factor is the tiny juvenile as represented in Reaves Eason, Jr., sometime known as Breezy. He, it is, who provides the heart appeal—a note which holds the story together and gives the picture a flavor which will be appreciated by many spectators. The idea is based upon the right and wrong kind of love—the right being generated when a somewhat worthless scamp finds his honor and self-respect in the companionship of a woman—the wrong kind being generated from the bosom of a dyed-in-the-wool villain.

The direction is very arbitrary. The events happen according to Hoyle or because the titles compel them. A pioneer wagon occupied by a small family appears in a clearing. And the entire action never moves from that spot. They would seek shelter in a miner's cabin only to discover that the occupant of it is the vicious villain. The idea grows when emphasis is laid upon a cache of buried gold. It seems that this miner has killed his partner years before to get the map of the location, but the hero comes over the horizon with the missing fragments. So it is a struggle to get possession of it. While the entire story hinges on this buried treasure, not a move is made in its direction until the final scene.

To give color to the romance the heroine is depicted as the sister of the invalid instead of his wife. There is very little action and what is disclosed is brought out in the nature of a flash-back. Some attempt to add a touch of excitement is introduced when the villain kidnaps the boy. The scenes are cut and dried and impressed upon the spectator before they happen. As said above the employment of the tiny juvenile is the story's sole appeal. He is given much of the plot to do with as he pleases. A first rate little actor is the Eason youngster—a youngster endowed with considerable vitality and color. This picture didn't cost a great deal of money, so it should not be compared with bankroll features. It is an offering which doesn't demand much of the spectator. The heart appeal, the juvenile interest should conquer quite a number.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of the West which features the juvenile actor, Reaves Eason, Jr., will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. It is entitled "Two Kinds of Love" and lives right up to its title. Bad love is offered by a worthless miner who would dishonor the name of a good woman. Upright love is furnished by a man who has come to believe that no woman is worthy of respect. But under the kindly influence of the heroine, he grows to admire her. And his affection blossoms into the divine passion.

The Watson family, father, sister and little boy, have migrated to the West. The former is in search of health. Tiring of riding over the plains they seek shelter for the night in a miner's cabin. The father is too much of an invalid to progress further so the sister and little boy make it their home. But the occupant of the cabin is a wolf in sheep's clothing. The youngster has been brought up to be fearless and he comes to the rescue of his aunt on more than one occasion. When distress seems to be their reward, a friendly miner, Mason, enters their life and offers a good love. The picture is laid against Western backgrounds and is capably acted by a cast which includes George McDaniels, Jimsy May and others. Reaves Eason directed.

PROGRAM READER

As everyone knows there are two kinds of love—the good and bad. Sometimes it is hard to distinguish between them. What is offered sometime as good most often turns out to be evil and vice versa. This is the crux of the idea which furnishes the background of the latest Universal picture which features a cast of excellent players headed by the remarkable juvenile actor, Reaves Eason, Jr. The picture is entitled "Two Kinds of Love" and is a first-class western—one which is strong in its romantic appeal and heart interest. "Two Kinds of Love" will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Come and be entertained by the greatest child actor on the screen. Come and see a vital and vivid picture.

SUGGESTIONS

There is very little plot interest to exploit here and you had better use the soft pedal in your arguments. The story has been used time and again and it would not be wise to detail it in any particular other than emphasizing the well known fact that there are two kinds of love—which everyone should recognize. Play up the cast. Place special emphasis upon the fact that Reaves Eason, Jr., is featured. In your billing bring out that he is one of the most remarkable child actors on the screen. Play up Reaves Eason and tell that he is a first-class director. Your steady patrons will remember his name and doubtless his features. Bill it as a straight Western—a melodrama of the soil. A picture of strong heart interest and child appeal.

See "Two Kinds of Love." This is a Universal picture featuring a cast headed by the juvenile actor, Reaves Eason, Jr. See a throbbing picture of the West—a picture of the soil—a picture of appealing qualities.

"THE JUCKLINS"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Rural Story Rich in Detail and Atmosphere

THERE are so many characters and so much detail in Opie Read's book, "The Jucklins," that the picturization of it has not been an easy task. For a reel and part of another the picture doesn't make much headway due to the planting of the various characters. But at the same time the spectator is interested because the director has emphasized the homespun touches. No rural story has carried more realistic quality than "The Jucklins," and it is tempered by the elements of humor, sentiment, and pathos—elements which should appeal to most everyone. The picture depends upon its local color and incident and romantic interludes.

It's a story of a picturesque family that resides in the mountains of North Carolina and paints the contrast between the poor and proud and the aristocratic gentry. Of course, this contrast brings its conflict. The young people in the picture are painted in the throes of romance with emphasis placed upon the heartaches which accompany thwarted love. The main idea has to do with the task of keeping the district school open. A group of vicious boys make it so unpleasant for the teachers that they are forced to beat a hasty retreat. However, a young farmer migrates from Alabama, who is forceful enough to bring order out of chaos. His arrival provides the main romantic conflict. A counterplot has to do with a fake murder which is staged by an unscrupulous aristocrat to belittle one of the Jucklins. In emphasizing this counterplot (one of many) the picture loses in direct continuity.

The director, in order to bring out the dramatic qualities, has forgotten the value of compression. But he has provided a touch here and there some of which are humorous, others sentimental, so that the spectator won't trouble himself about the story interest. The highest praise must be given the cast—a cast appropriately chosen. Acting honors go to Charles Ogle, who gives a portrayal of keen understanding. As the father of all the Jucklins he comes forward with a finely modulated performance. His work here should make his services greatly desired. Monte Blue, as the homespun hero school-master, offers a rugged study—one that strikes a deep chord of sympathy with the onlooker. Mabel Julienne Scott, Fannie Midgely and Zell Covington are also thoroughly in character. The rural touches, the exceptional atmosphere and the old-fashioned romances and quaintly humorous highlights should make "The Jucklins" good entertainment for every class of audience.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Opie Read's charming story of life in the North Carolina mountains, "The Jucklins," will be the feature attraction at the ———— next ————. This is a story of romance and homespun characterization which is faithfully caught by George Melford, the director. The Jucklins are a family who are poor but proud. They have brought up their daughter, Guinea, to be the wife of an aristocratic land owner's son, but she responds to the district school-master from Alabama, who, while not blessed with a family name and wealth is richer in human qualities.

When Bill Hawes comes to teach school he finds that his troubles are before him. But he quells the disturbing element and is instrumental in saving the Jucklin name from dishonor. In the end the Jucklins have their happiness. The picture is punctuated with charming local atmosphere and homespun touches—many of these being humanized by an excellent cast that includes Charles Ogle, Mabel Julienne Scott and Monte Blue.

PROGRAM READER

"THE COAST OF OPPORTUNITY"
(Brunton-Hodkinson)

Picturesque Story With Kerrigan in Heroic Role

"THE COAST OF OPPORTUNITY" may very nearly take credit for being the best picture ever laid against Mexican backgrounds. While the idea and characterization have been incorporated time and again, still they represent the American spirit so well that the picturegoing public becomes interested. This is a story of an American civil engineeer who is given overwhelming odds to fight and who emerges successfully in typical American fashion. The action becomes quite involved and one has to be somewhat familiar with real estate terms to understand the plot. The hero desires an option on a valuable copper vein and he is determined to construct a railroad on the property.

This precipitates a deal of melodramatic conflict between the forces of good and evil. For the sake of emphasizing the conflict the railroad magnate's daughter is involved in a romance with the hero's friend, while her girl friend holds option jointly with the aforementioned magnate. She is desirous of aiding the engineer, while the magnate is determined to secure complete control. So the picture takes on the outline of big business in conjunction with its melodramatic incident, peculiar to the Southwest or Mexico. There are native sons who are in the employ of the disciples of evil. And the hero is kidnapped and placed in a suspicious light to discredit him with the girls. But he is an American—and wins.

The action keeps moving with faultless tempo, most of it transpiring in the big outdoors. Ernest C. Warde has saturated the picture with good local color and atmosphere which is not only represented in backgrounds but in types of characters. The picture is never stressed with its melodramatic incident so that the romantic element is lost. All the ingredients are well shaken up and arranged to give it an acceptable balance. The picture is not a one part vehicle either. Kerrigan gives the others plenty of opportunity to portray their parts. There is a little shooting, a few wordy arguments, a fight or two, and some hard riding. In all "The Coast of Opportunity" is a first rate Western, if you want to call a picture laid in Mexico by that title. It isn't new; it is quite obvious, but it carries qualities which are sure-fire.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A photoplay of intrigue and adventure which has to do with staking a claim and placing a railroad through a valuable copper vein is "The Coast of Opportunity," J. Warren Kerrigan's latest production. Impartial critics have declared it to be the best of this popular star's vehicles for several months, since it is crowded with an adventurous line of action which holds the spectator completely fascinated. The action is laid in Mexico just over the border and relates of Dick Bristow's experiences to execute his plans to become rich. He is persecuted by nefarious enemies of his own nationality to say nothing of native Mexicans.

Scenes are presented which are truly thrilling when he is kidnapped, for instance. He engages in battles royal, but he comes up smiling and succeeds in his mission as well as in winning a charming girl. The picture is well balanced with romantic moments which act as a relief to the tense situations. Mr. Kerrigan plays his part with considerable abandon. His cast is well proportioned. Among the players are Fritzi Brunette and Herschel Mayall. "The Coast of Opportunity" is a splendid sample of a clean-cut story of an intrepid American—the type of American youth who wins against overwhelming odds.

PROGRAM READER

An adventurous story of an American youth who is determined to win despite the obstacles placed before him is "The Coast of Opportunity," the latest J. Warren Kerrigan picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The story is laid in Mexico and has to do with the task of the American youth in getting option to a valuable copper vein and erecting a railroad upon it. The scenes take the spectator along adventurous channels. How the hero wins against his overwhelming odds and finds time to cultivate a beautiful romance will be told next ————. Rest assured it is one of Kerrigan's best.

SUGGESTIONS

The Kerrigan following should place good value opposite this picture. It is one of the star's best. So play it up strongly. Tell that the hero is characteristic of the ideal American who wins against all adversaries. Tell that it is the type of story which commands great interest. You can state that it is laid in Mexico and presents a daring line of action. Feature the star with stills and mention the other players. Bill it as an exciting romantic melodrama. Bill it as a red-blooded story which should appeal to everyone. Mention that it is the best story ever produced on the screen which has to do with a Mexican background. Tell that it is on a par with Kerrigan's past features—most of which have been running very good.

CATCH LINES

He found himself confronted by powerful and treacherous enemies. But undaunted he won his way to success. He found riches in the soil and captured a bride in typical American fashion. See J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Coast of Opportunity."

"BLACKBIRDS"
(Realart)

Justine Johnstone Is a Welcome Screen Figure in Crook Melodrama

THERE is no question that Justine Johnstone is a welcome figure to the screen. Her striking beauty makes her a distinctive personality which, coupled with her dramatic instinct, are sufficient to enlist the public in her favor. In giving her "Blackbirds," adapted from Harry James Smith's stage play of the same name, Realart has given her a subject which is entirely appropriate to her interpretative ability. Judging from her portrayal here her forte is legitimate dramatic offerings. Her ingratiating personality and talent should establish an enthusiastic following.

It must be said for the star and her capable cast, that includes the ever dependable Charles Gerard, an actor who is rapidly forging to the front as an exceptionally skillful "heavy," that they dominate the story. Really there is not much originality expended in the adaptation or direction. The sponsors have followed the lines of least resistance, although with its shortcomings "Blackbirds" may be said to furnish satisfactory entertainment. Some liberty has been taken with the theme and characterization, with the result that much suspense is destroyed. The line of action is clearly understood once the characters are introduced. But if the interest for the array of ev[illegible]s is somewhat lost, one can always rest the eye upon the star. Miss Johnstone, Mr. Gerard and William Boyd in the opposite role are certainly endowed with enough screen intelligence to hold the attention of the average spectator.

The dominant weakness lies in the uninspired direction, for the story never moves with a vigor characteristic of crook melodrama. In fact it becomes quite draggy. The star is seen as an international adventuress (a more polite word than "thief") who is followed to America by a detective determined to capture her associates. When she would attempt to frustrate the arch-criminal's plans he reminds her of the danger. It is easy to anticipate that the fair crook and the detective will find romantic expression and that the vicious "blackbird" will be caught. The picture is staged effectively and capably titled. The photography and lighting, however, are not of the best. "Blackbirds" carries elements which could have been utilized in making it a crisp melodrama. However, it suffices in starting its beautiful star along the road to popular favor.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Justine Johnstone, universally known as one of the most beautiful girls, if not the most beautiful, in America, makes her screen debut as a star in the Realart production, "Blackbirds," which is a screen version of Harry James Smith's play of the same name which met with popular favor a few short years ago. Miss Johnstone brings to the screen a refreshing personality, a fascinating appeal in her beauty which will not be denied. The vehicle chosen for her introduction to the film public is considered entirely appropriate since it establishes her distinctive personality as well as bringing forth her abundant talent.

A capable company which includes the fine character actor, Charles Gerard, gives her faultless support. Miss Johnstone plays the part of a clever smuggler and an international thief. She is on her way to execute a daring theft when she falls in love with the first man she could respect. This is the beginning of her adventures which take her through various exciting and romantic scenes. The picture holds the spectator in tense interest throughout its varied line of action. Jack Dillon directed from a scenario by Clara Beranger.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre will welcome the opportunity to see a new star. They will see next ———— at this theatre the most beautiful girl in America—a girl who has been selected by sculptors and artists as such. Justine Johnstone makes her debut upon the screen in "Blackbirds," and patrons will be certain to recognize the fact that she hasn't a peer in the representation of beauty. Her talent is sure. The picture is a Realart production entitled "Blackbirds," which is a screen version of the play by the late Harry James Smith which met with popular favor upon the stage. It is a fascinating crook play which holds the spectator in a tight embrace with its adventurous action and appealing romance. In the cast is Charles Gerard, one of the best actors on the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

In billing this picture your best angle of exploitation is the name of the new star. Go strong on the fact that she is called the most beautiful girl in America—that she has posed for sculptors and artists who have proclaimed her beauty in terms of praise which cannot be questioned. Use stills of her. Play up her name. Create a following for her. Go after your feminine patronage and ask them to come and see the new beauty of the screen. You can stimulate interest by unique lobby display. Such stunts as hanging bird-cages around the lobby with stuffed blackbirds or the real article would be a good idea. Have your artist draw blackbird sketches and a likeness of Miss Johnstone. Play up the cast, mentioning the names of Charles Gerard and William Boyd.

"THE SCUTTLERS"
(Fox)

Farnum Has a "He-Man" Role in Story of the Sea

BILL FARNUM certainly deserves credit in getting away from his stereotyped roles and giving his following a sample of new characterization. In "The Scuttlers," the rugged Fox star, has a sea story which is not as vigorous as its interpreter. Adorned with a title which suggests two-fisted action and flowing incident, the picture does not measure up to requirements in giving the heroic Farnum the adventure expected. True it is a sea story, but the qualities which made Jack London famous have not been copied by the author. The star plays the part of a Lloyds detective whose object is to capture scuttlers who are sending ships to Davy Jones' Locker for the sake of the insurance.

Scene after scene is introduced with the hero conducting a watchful waiting policy, although the suspense is ever present because one is certain that the "fur" will fly before the conclusion is reached. It is Farnum's privilege to indulge in a battle royal. He indulges in two of them here which for "stand-up-and-take-your-medicine," or "knock-'em-down and drag-'em-out" quality will pass muster with anything he has ever before attempted. The action transpires on a large schooner which is guided by a vicious first mate. The skipper is a victim of circumstances—a man who is determined to go straight, but who is dominated by the brute. Bill stalks the deck abiding his time and putting up with various samples of insults. The first fight comes when he goes to the rescue of a much abused sailor.

There is a flash of romance which is really out of place. It doesn't seem likely that a skipper would harbor his daughter on a boat manned by an assortment of cut-throats. The climax presents the customary Farnum "fireworks." The star has released himself from the irons, and catching the brute at the job of scuttling the ship, gives him a taste of his own brutality. It's a "he-man" fight and no mistake. Once it is over, the picture is complete, though a scene or two is given up showing a group of smugglers waiting for a consignment of fire-arms. The final shot discloses the hero sailing away to safety in a steam yacht, commandeered from the smugglers. In idea the picture is quite original. Sea stories have come and gone but never before have they been based upon a crew, or a skipper or a first mate who scuttled a ship. It strikes us that the director could have arranged to present more melodramatic incident. A storm at sea or a wreck and men dashing about in the rigging would have made it quite vigorous. One looks for other features besides a battle royal with Farnum about. The types are good. G. Raymond Nye is picturesque as the chief scuttler.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Scuttlers," with William Farnum as the star. This is an absorbing story of the sea and tells of a man who is hired to ship as a sailor in order to learn if the captain is guilty, as suspected, of scuttling his ships for the insurance. The man in question is employed by Lloyds, the British ship insurance organization. To avoid suspicion Farnum, as Jim Landers, allows himself to be shanghaied. He finds himself under a brutal first mate, and the mate at once shows that he dislikes Landers more than any one else on board.

The detective is put in irons when he goes to the defense of another sailor, but his position is not so bad as it might be because Laura, the captain's daughter, comes to his rescue. After Erickson scuttles the ship and the water is pouring into the hold he discovers Landers. A terific fight ensues in which the first mate is killed and Landers escapes with Laura on a lifeboat. And once out of Erickson's influence the captain is able to redeem his honor. "The Scuttlers" is a powerful photoplay which moves with a vigor characteristic of Farnum's offerings. He gives an excellent performance assisted by a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

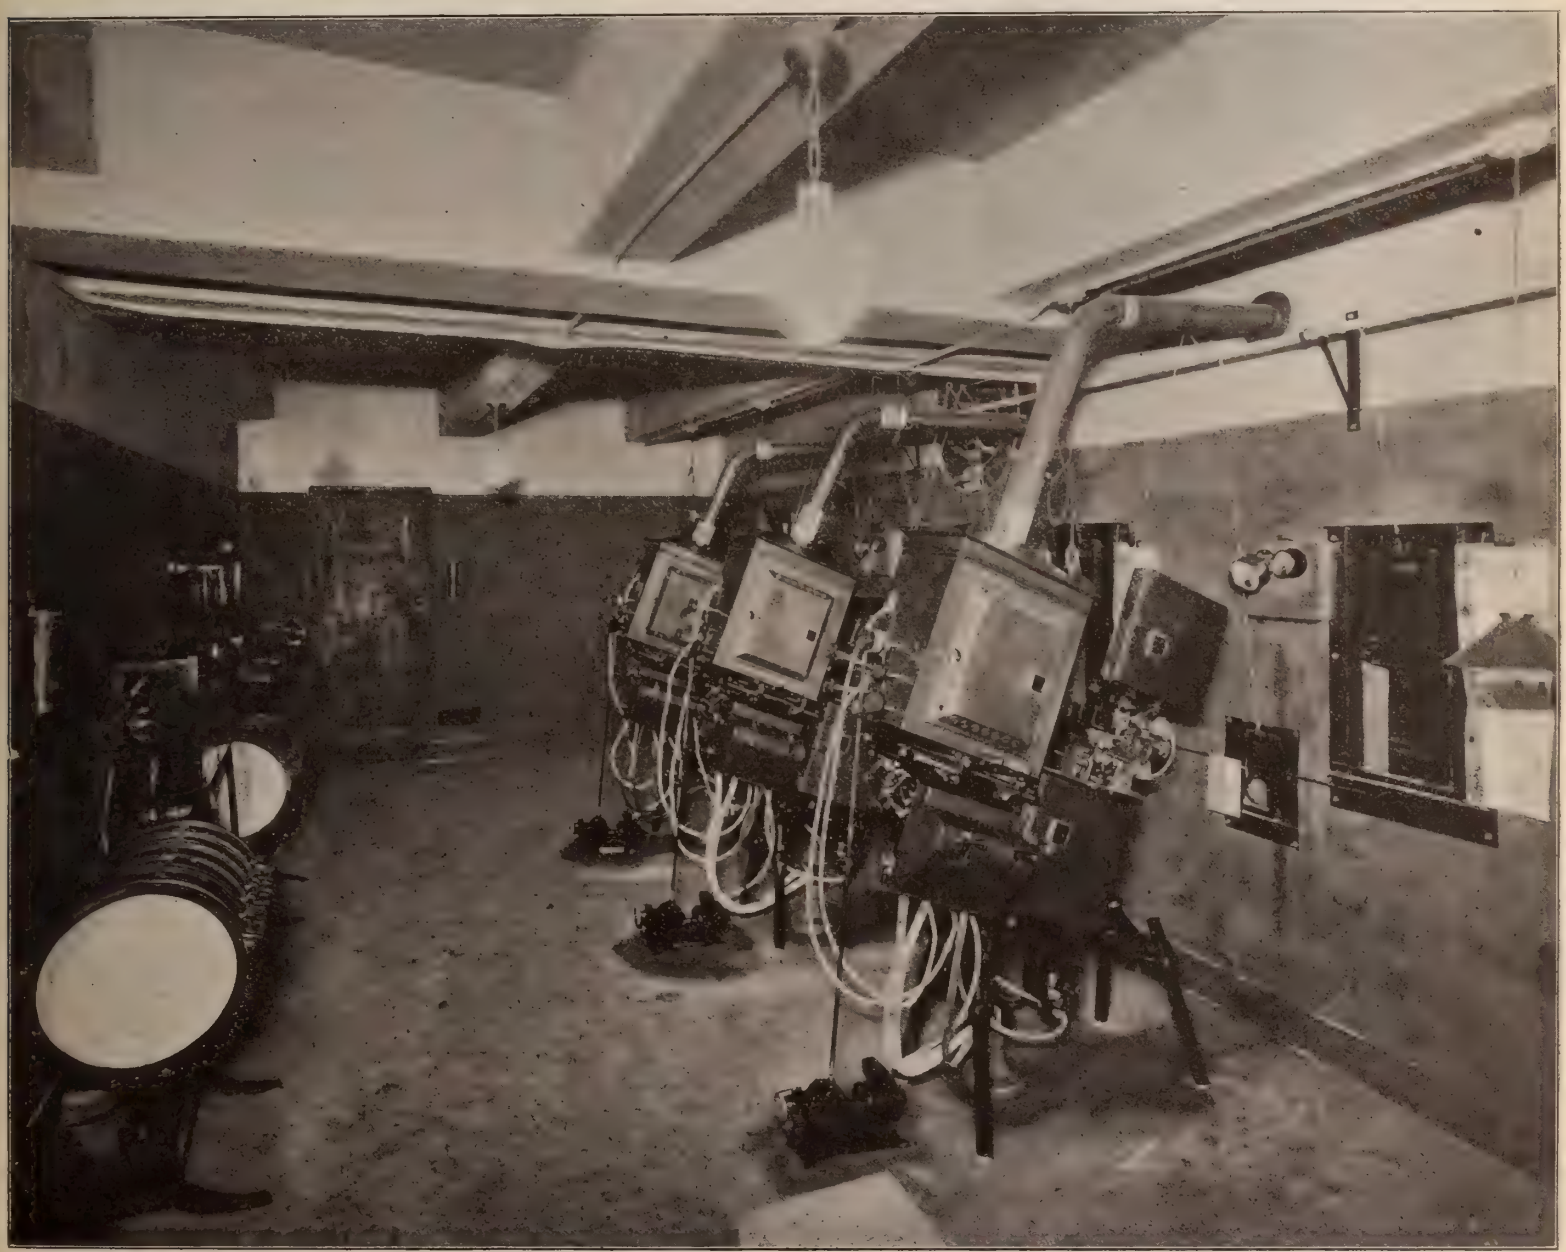
What to Think About When Laying Out the Projection Room

Factors of Construction and Equipment to Be Considered

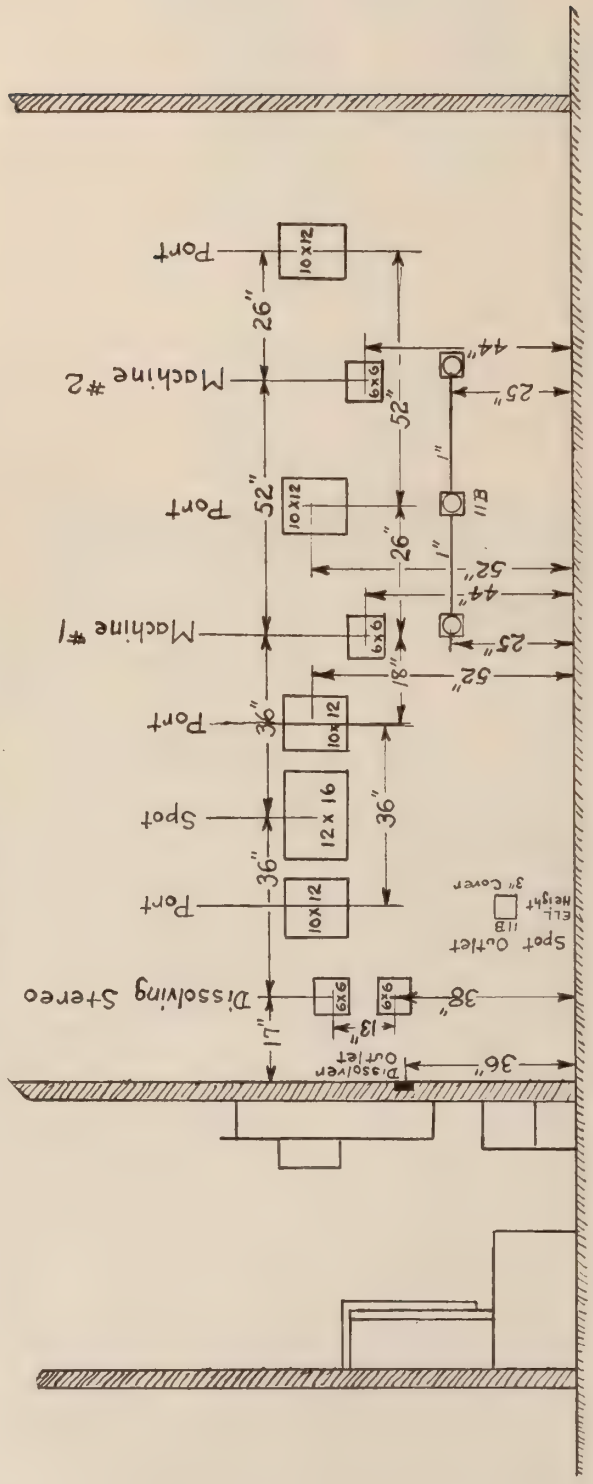
THERE will come a time in the lives of most projectionists when it will be to their advantage to be able to take the plans for a theatre and to lay out the projection room as it should be laid out to secure the highest quality of projection under the conditions imposed by the architect. With the huge number of theatres being built in 1920 and 1921 there is bound to be a call for complete data on projection room and equipment and who if not the projectionist is to be called on to aid in this work. It is for this reason that the NEWS prints in this one issue several pages of dia grams, wall layouts and floor layouts and photographs of rooms already completed. Included with this illustrative material will be found explicit directions. By the study of these pages and by making use of the free and helpful service of the Projection Department of the NEWS any man should feel himself capable of sketching his own idea of the Ideal Projection Room when his present employer commences to build that new theatre he has had so long in mind.



LOCATION OF ROOM

From the architectural standpoint a theatre is first of all a structure of beauty, an edifice to show off the designer's ability to convey an idea of lavishness. Then after this has been done to his satisfaction comes the question of how the useful or utilitarian portions can be adapted to the building to get the best results. It should be noticed that it is not a case of erecting a building to show perfect motion pictures, but rather to build a beautiful structure in which pictures of a sort are to be exhibited.

When the cart is built first without knowing whether it is to be propelled by a horse in front or a gas engine under the seat there is bound to be needed a great deal of fitting and altering and refitting and realtering. It cannot be helped.



That is the one and only reason why projection rooms are placed up under the eaves in the back of the balcony. You will sometimes hear that that position is selected because of the wish of the manager that no seats in the balcony be otherwise some good seats in the front of the balcony or on the main floor would have to be removed to accommodate the projection room. This latter claim might be true if the builders intended to construct the house complete and then bring in the room and place it down on the spot selected but where the projection room is

This "Perfect Play House" just completed is equipped throughout with FA Major Remote Control System of Switchboards.

This system has no equal for controlling theatre lighting.

THE Major Switchboard involves a principle never before used on manual or remote control stage switchboards.

This principle allows the working out of any desired combination of lighting effects with ease, and the setting up of lighting changes for the acts ahead without interference with the effects in operation at the time.

No lighting change is so complicated that it cannot be made instantly by the operation of a single lever.

The Major Switchboard allows the controlling of any individual switch unit, or combination of units, or even the entire board from any part of the theatre.

All modern architects familiar with Theatre Construction specify Major Switchboards

"Horizontal projection demands that the projection room be placed either in the front of the first balcony or on the main floor." In this illustration the projectors in the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, are housed on the main floor directly behind the last rows of seats. Its roof is used as part of the mezzanine.

This projection at the Community Theatre, Catskill, N. Y., could be materially improved by laying on a coating of plaster over the bare brick walls. The room size is ample and the ventilation seems to be well taken care of. If the projectionist is given a good looking comfortable room to work in, his work is apt to be on the same plane.

built into the theatre as part of it there are enough ways by which those precious seats need not be wasted.

Everyone knows that perfect projection is only attainable when the axis of projection is horizontal. Many times a man is able to produce a good screen image in spite of 8 or 10° of off-set projection and he convinces himself that his projection is perfect. It merely seems perfect because he has nothing with which to compare it. If he is getting results that satisfy himself under adverse conditions what would he be able to do under perfect and correct conditions.

Horizontal projection demands that the projection room be placed either in the front of the first balcony or on the main floor. The projection room of the Mission theatre, in Los Angeles was brought down from the eaves where it had been placed originally and worked into the balcony front, between the loges. In passing from one side of the balcony to the other the patrons walk over the projection room without being aware of the fact. So well concealed is the room in this theatre that only from a few places in the auditorium is it possible to detect where the cone of light emanates from. This is as near Ideal Conditions as have been encountered.

On the other hand the Circle theatre at Indianapolis boasts of one of the comparatively few theatres having balconies, that can boast of having its projection room on the main floor. This room which is entirely fireproof is entered from the auditorium, the door being on a line with the last row of seats. While this position of the projection room might be criticised from the standpoint of possible trouble in case of film ignition it could be well enough protected against such possibilities to eliminate this argument.

There is considerably more to the mere location than the choice between the main floor, balcony or eaves. There should be taken into consideration the facilities for ventilating the room, and the means of entrance.

A projectionist is to a degree the same as the captain in command of a ship. If there is danger from some cause the projectionist should do all that he can do to get the patrons safely out of the theatre and to set into motion such precautions as have been provided him for handling fires. With all this done there is no necessity for him to remain at his post. We are speaking here, of course, only of fires in the projection room. Fires in other parts of the theatres demand that he stay at his post and keep the picture going to allay fear and thereby reduce any tendency to panic. But after a man has done all that he can to save property it is time for him to leave as a human life is worth intrinsically more than millions of feet of features.

To do this properly and with the greatest regard for the safety of the projectionist means that the projection room should be located where it may be reached by a permanent set of stairs. Circular staircases are alright if the means of egress into the room is not through a trap door. A swinging door in one end—or in both ends, if possible—of the room reached from an ample stairway is the ideal arrangement.

Ventilation is Important Factor

In the matter of ventilation we come for the first time to a real legitimate reason why the

Dear Mr. O'Brien:

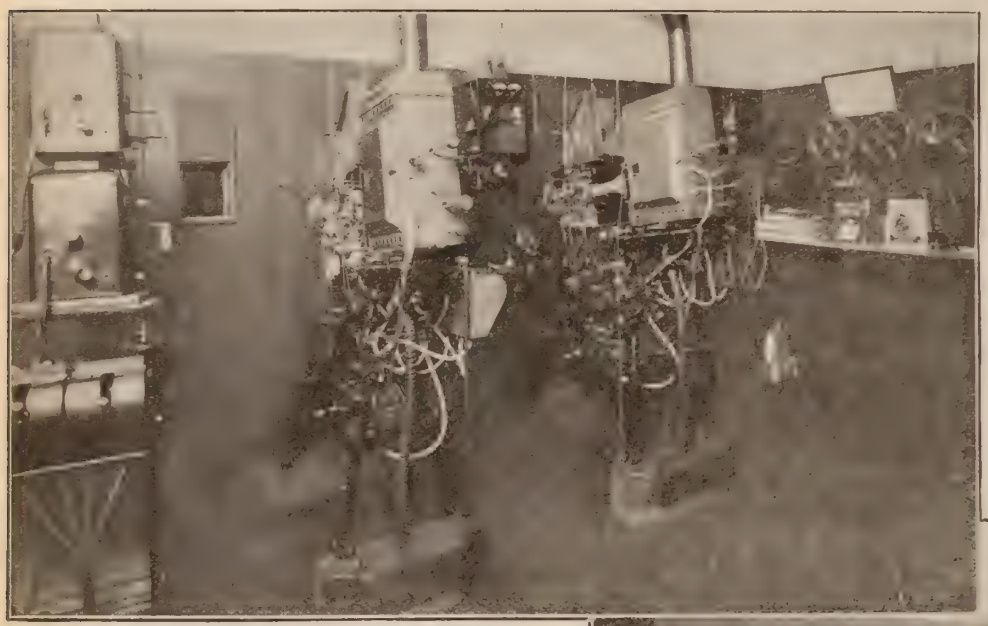
It gives me great pleasure in writing to thank you for your unvarying courtesy in connection with the installation of a generator at our studio.

Mr. Charles Ray, Mr. G. E. MacCormac and myself are much pleased with the efficiency of the generator and the manner in which it was delivered to us and installed.

Mr. MacCormac, who is our electrical chief, was much surprised, when you delivered the machine on Tuesday and he was able to have it working on Wednesday and that at full capacity. He has also remarked more than once his pleasure at the execellent voltage regulation and the generator's ability to carry an overload when necessary.

You may rest assured that this is not the last order we will place with you.

With kind regards in which Mr. Ray and Mr. MacCormac join, I remain



Yours sincerely,

How to Lay Out Projection Rooms

projection room should and at the same time should not be placed up under the eaves.

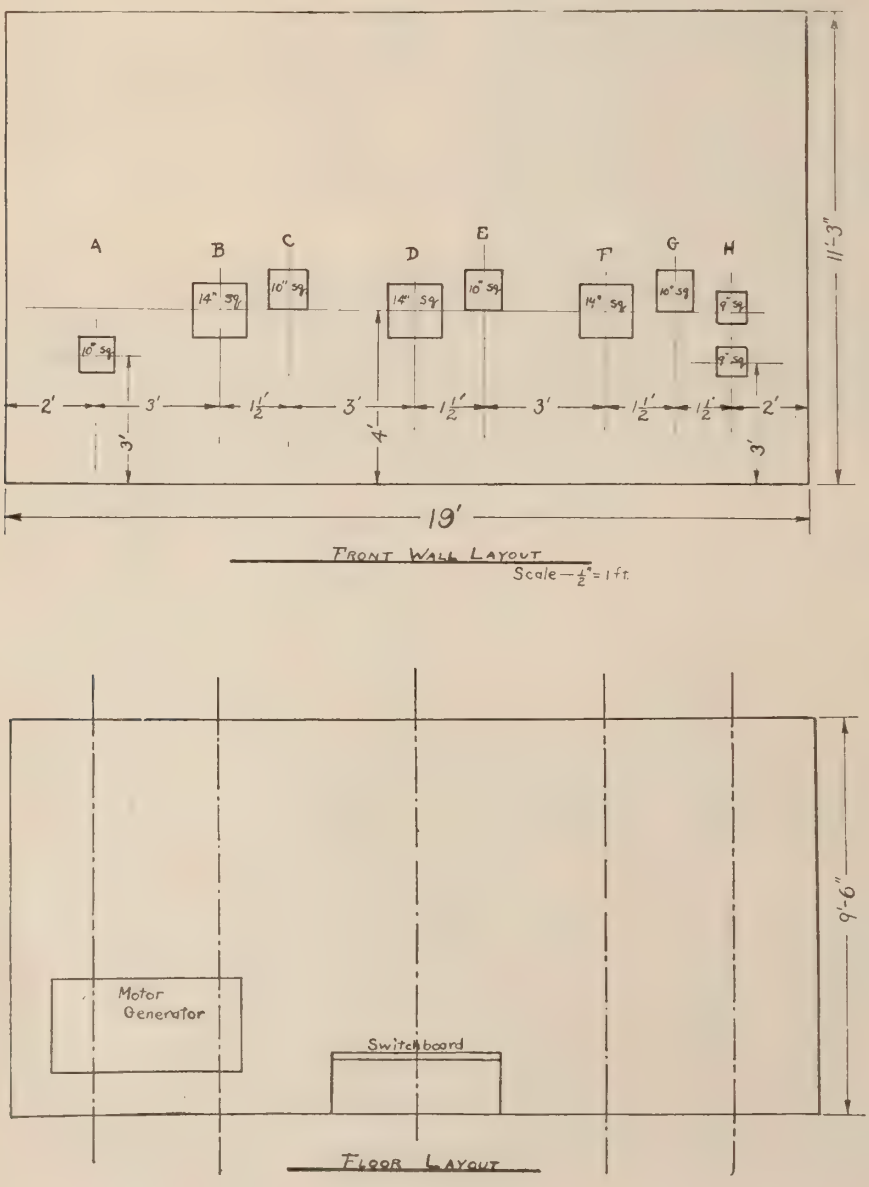
When the room is placed in the back of the balcony above all the seats the roof of the room is very near the roof of the theatre. A short run of ventilating duct and the outdoor is reached. But when the projection room is placed down deeper into the theatre farther away from the outdoor, free air, the additional run of duct adds an enormous friction to the air passing through it and consequently a larger ventilating fan and more power is demanded to run the fan. Unless carefully laid out, too, the draught may be found faulty. Especially should short sharp turns in the ducts be avoided and whenever possible the runs should be straight-away.

As mentioned above the location of the projection room up under the eaves is the cause of more unhealthiness amongst projectionist than all the poisonous gases that are really and supposedly found in samples of carbon gases taken from lamp house. Hot vitiated air from the audience rises rapidly to the roof of the theatre. If the ventilating fan in the projection room is working and the port holes are not covered with glass this dead, malodorous, poison air is drawn like a magnet into the face of the projectionist. It is this air and not necessarily the products of combustion from the carbon arcs that cause the 400 (estimated by some authorities) deaths yearly amongst projectionists. Because of this condition of affairs there is an added reason for the placement of the projection room elsewhere than in the dead air pocket near the ceiling of the theatre.

In the majority of cases the Ideal Location is in the front of the balcony at least until the art has progressed to a point where it will be recognized feasible to have the projection room constructed with glass walls so that the patrons may see the inside workings. When the room is there, it is unobtrusive, easily accessible and does not present a difficult problem in ventilation.

Size of Room

If a formula were to be given for the size of room it would almost be safe to state it in this form: "Make it as large as the architect will allow." For if past performances are to be considered as a criterion this ultimate in size would not be preponderant.



The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has taken this matter of room size into consideration in its discussion of standards and has suggested:

The width of the room should be a minimum of six feet for one projector with three feet of added width for each additional projector, spot lamp or stereopticon. The minimum distance from the floor to the ceiling should be eight feet. . . . . There should be at least three in the clear behind the projectors.

In some states however the size of the projection room is determined definitely by statute and this means the maximum size as well as the minimum. There should rightly be a minimum size but it is difficult to believe that there would be occasions where the dimensions would be too great.

In those localities where the dimensions are not laid down definitely the standards of the S. M. P. E. may be considered as the minimum but all the space that can be added above these limits should be secured. Ample space is desirable for two reasons: Better working conditions, and Greater Safety.

A large airy projection room is cooler in summer than one of cramped dimensions. That is self evident. Then, too, the air in a larger room is more apt to be in circulation and any undesirable gases that enter are neutralized by the greater volume of fresh air present. The larger room, by its structural details, generally require a more stable floor and ceiling, not to mention the walls. There is space for film cabinets, work benches and chairs. The entire atmosphere is one of greater attractiveness.

A sample front wall layout. This one is peculiar in that it was made for a foreign installation where left hand controls were preferred

Why Safety Should Be Considered

As for the question of Safety, there need be little said. Anyone who has attempted to put on a creditable performance in a "booth" 10 feet in width, in which are two projectors, a rewinder and a shaky bench realizes the handicap. There is no elbow room in any direction; the two projectors are practically touching each other and to get from the right side of one to the other requires that the man squeeze under the lamp house and the back wall. In a room of this sort there is a real tendency to leave open reels of films where they will be handiest to reach when needed. There is hardly room for a pail of sand or a water receptacle for hot carbons. Scrap film is thrown on the floor under the bench or shoved into one of the corners. All these are actual reasons why Safety is more easily attainable in a projection room of ample size.

Several of the drawings in this section show the sizes of projection rooms that have been constructed. One of them is 19 feet in length, 11 feet high and 9½ feet in width. A study of that particular layout which is shown on this page will show that this size is not any too great for three projectors and a stereo.

For two machines and a stereo a projection room should be at least 12 feet in length, 9 feet in width and 12 feet high. With a design following these dimensions there is sufficient room around the projectors in all direction, the machines are not crowded together, there is plenty of space in which to work and make repairs and above all else the ceiling is high enough to insure good ventilation.

Colonial Theatre at Allentown, Pa.

WILMER & VINCENT'S Colonial theatre, which has just been opened, excels any other motion picture theatre in the state of Pennsylvania for beauty of architecture and lavishness of investiture. It is a marvel in design and construction and was erected at a cost of $750,000.

At the entrance to the outside lobby there is a kiosk of glass in which the ticket sellers are located and admission is gained to the inner lobby, a dream in beveled glass, marble arches and ornamental plaster work. Three magnificent chandeliers illuminate the main ramp, an inclined walkway leading to five sets of double doors which lead into the lower foyer. An upper ramp leads through a corridor flanked by great columns to the mezzanine foyer. On both sides are great arches mirrored with the finest French beveled glass.

The upper ramp, which is one of the real innovations of the theatre construction and is one of the outstanding features of the theatre, leads by an easy incline and without a single step, to the mezzanine foyer, an elegant spot, richly carpeted and furnished with furniture of Colonial pattern. Here writing desks and stationery can be found. The lighting is with Colonial lights, fitted with parchment eyeshades in pretty patterns. In the center there is a well surrounded by a balustrade of marble, and looking into the lower foyer. Leading off at the southeast corner is the door to the emergency rest room, which is fitted out as a hospital.

Passing through the entrance from mezzanine foyer the patron finds himself in the mezzanine promenade, a broad back area in the rear of the balcony. Great wall seats set in semi-circular hollows in the wall, a retiring room for women and a men's rest room and smoking apartment furnished in Colonial fashion are found here. On the walls are elaborate oil paintings, some of them the work of Peter Gross, a Lehigh Countian, who had a studio in Paris. The pictures are framed in the traditional oval.

Entrances to the east and west of the promenade bring one to the balcony.

The stage has an artistic setting, the work of the Ackerman studio. It suggests a woodland theatre. The proscenium arch is embellished with three mural decorations in which the theme "The Three Graces" is worked out, giving a key to the panel decorations.

On each side are upper and lower rows of boxes, three to a tier and having an average of ten chairs. The background is a series of graceful Ionic columns supporting great arches from which drape luxurious hangings of mulberry velvet.

The first three rows of the balcony are arranged as loges. Back of these the balcony seats rise in great tiers. The ceiling contains the ventilating system with an ornamental screen with filagree effect.

Over the boxes are large lunes covered with a filigree effect and from which emanate the rich tones of the organ.

Going by way of the lower ramp entrance is attained to the lower foyer. Suspended from the ceiling of the mezzanine foyer through the well is a great crystal candelabra. On the right are the executive offices of the theatre management, a suite of three rooms. These are the headquarters of John F. Maloy, manager, and Ivan E. Sanders, assistant manager.

Entering the main body of the house the patron finds himself on the main promenade. To the right and extreme left are two sets each of loge boxes with thirty odd seats each. They are equipped with plush chairs. The balance of the theatre has air-cushioned seats.

Four columns of Italian marble support the balcony along the rear wall. It is thus seen that there is not a single obstruction to mar the view.

In the ceiling of the balcony are great dome lights, thirteen in number. At the entrance to each aisle is an electric light which is properly shaded to meet the needs of a motion picture theatre.

How to Lay Out a Projection Room

is permanent. A projection room of hollow tile is sound proof, absolutely fireproof and as stable as a rock. Asbestos board is often employed and while this material is fireproof if properly used, it is not lasting and does not give that effect of stability attained by hollow tile or even concrete.

Front Wall Layout

In general this is dictated by the arrangement of the machines within the room, and by the location of the room itself.

There are of course, two types of portholes, those for the machines and those for lookouts. Machine ports are smaller than the latter, sometimes only half as large.

A good size for machine ports is about 4" wide by 6" high and for lookout ports, about 14" in square. This may seem large. to some but the comfort of the projectionist seems to ask for ports of such size that a full view of the screen is possible without undue craning of the neck.

Of course, each and every port must be equipped with free sliding shutters held in the open position by means of cords which in turn are connected to fusible links placed over the machines. There are many schemes in existence for the shutter system. One system and an admirable one, too, is shown on page .... Here the shutters instead of sliding in grooves on the inside of the wall are arranged to slide in the center of the wall. The necessary pipe work is also carried inside the wall and is reached by removable plates. This makes an extraordinarily neat system and one that cannot easily be tampered with without the knowledge of the projectionist.

But the usual system consist of a long iron pipe extending the entire distance above the shutters and attached to the front wall near the ceiling, and on this pipe, directly above the shutters are placed smooth pins. Ordinarily these pins are horizontal and over them are hooked the cords from the shutters. The pipe is held from turning by the cord leading to the fusible links. Once this latter cord is loosened the pull of the shutters tips the pipe and allows the cords to slip off the pins. Gravity closes the shutters. This is a cheap, and perfectly satisfactory system.

These shutter system should be tested at stated intervals. It is worth while wasting a few fusible links, which do not cost much, in order to satisfy oneself that the shutters are in perfect working order. Altogether too many times have reports from projection room fires stated that "some of the shutters stuck and would not close completely." It is better to be safe.

Whether allowed by regulations or not the projection room proper is no fit place for the motor generator set. As a general rule it requires very little attention and for that reason may be placed in a small room. Thus the argument of lack of space need not receive much consideration.

An ideal arrangement is to have the motor generator set in a room directly adjacent to the projection room and separated from it by a thin fireproof wall. Although this room is generally at one end or the other of the projection room the handiest location is directly back of the machine. This allows the placing of the control switchboard as an integral part of the dividing wall and so arranged that the front of the board is dead.

The controlling switches may be mounted on a piece of slate which is an integral part of the dividing wall. This would give the projectionist handy access to the switches without the annoyance of having the motor generator in the room with the projectors.

The rheostats also should be placed outside of the operating room for the sake of safety as well as of comfort. Rheostats shelves placed up high on the side walls of the motor generator room or special rheostat room with an exhaust fan to carry off the generated heat form the best arrangement.

As a covering for the concrete floor rubber mats are best but at the same time are probably the most expensive. A good substitute is battleship linoleum which besides being easy to work and stand on and noiseless is also a fair electrical insulator. Linoleum is easily applied and cleaned and has a long life if oil is not allowed to soak through it.

In concluding this treatise on the subject of projection rooms some one is sure to notice that up to this point we have gone all around

Book Review

AIRPLANE PHOTOGRAPHY
By Herbert E. Ives and published by J. P. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia. $4.00.

Although written from the standpoint of the still camera and the still cameraman this new book by Mr. Ives contains so much of value to the cinema cameraman that a review in these columns is entirely in keeping with the usual subject matter.

Scarcely is a reel of news film released nowadays that does not contain considerable footage of "air stuff." The growth of news reel competition demands at least one thrill a reel and aerial stunts provide one of the most successful means to the end. It is in the relation of photography to this phase of the industry that Airplane Photography finds its appeal.

Of course to a certain extent every detail that affects still photography also affects the work of the cine camera. Although the motion picture cameraman does not have the wide range of speeds in plates or films supplied for the still cameraman, yet the former is not so limited by the limitations of his instrument.

In a review of this book the most helpful chapters would be found to be those on lenses, shutters, characteristics of photographic emulsions, filters and photographic chemicals. These subjects apply to the motion picture camera in practically the same degree that they do to the still camera.

The chapter on shutters, in particular, is well presented. A rather complete symposium of shutter types is given and the testing and calibration of shutters is carefully and clearly explained.

When attempting to photograph above a certain height trouble is experienced with what is known as "ground haze." With ordinary emulsions it is difficult to penetrate this blanket but by employing emulsions of the correct color sensitometry. This book explains the experimental work done in this field and the results finally obtained.

The functions of filters are treated at length with special mention and analysis of those found particularly suitable for aerial work. A number of photographs showing the effects of the use of filters suitable and unsuitable for the work are included in this chapter.

The cameraman who aims to make his library complete in every aspect of his profession will want this book, for while he may not be employed at the present time by news reels or in special air stunts he never knows when he will be given that assignment. As a book of general information it is well worth the price.

Ten Years of Faithful Service

A ten-year record of faithful service is one that an industry should recognize. For ten year The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company has rendered really vital service to the motion picture theatre industry.

The electrically operated automaticket register, manufactured by this company, started its career as a humble little machine that was operated by a foot pedal. The fact that some of these machines are still in service shows how sturdily the equipment is built.

When you stop to think that the register issues tickets five times as fast as they can be issued by hand, registers each ticket sold, keeps all ticket under lock and key and gives an exact check on cash receipts for the day, it seems as though it might justly be called a perfect machine, so imagine our surprise in finding an experimental mechanical department at the Automaticket factory.

"Going into a new field," we quite naturally asked. The question was put to Samuel H. De Roy, the genial vice president of the company and to Edgar S. Bowman, its very aggressive sales manager, who have been the active heads of the company since it was started.

Their answer to my question was that the experimental department was trying to beat their present model and what was even more extraordinary was a positive declaration that the next year's model would be a radical improvement over a machine that already does everything but talk. It seems that during all the ten years that the company has been in business this experimental department has been maintained to "beat last year's model."

The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company have a most modernly equipped factory right in New York City, 540 West Fifty-eighth street, and maintains a suite of offices on the fourth floor of the Goodrich Building, which is at 1780 Broadway where any exhibitor is welcome to make his office headquarters during a visit to New York.

The manufacturers of the automaticket register incidentally do one of the biggest ticket businesses in the country. In fact, they have set a standard for quality at the price and a pace in rapid deliveries that has won them general recognition as ticket headquarters.

What this company has done in the past ten years is to be eclipsed by even greater facility for service which was given it when its capital was recently increased from $150,000 to $1,000,000. This new capitalization puts the company in a position to realize two great ambitions—one is to put out the remarkable machine that it is now working on and the other is to set a new record for ticket service by constantly adding new printing equipment so as to be in a position to make ten-day to two-week deliveries.

Film Exchange Building for New Haven

WITH the completion of construction work on the new Film Exchange Building, New Haven, Conn., local exchanges of motion picture companies will realize their ambition of many years in having a building of their own.

The new building is located on the corner of South Orange and Meadow streets. The owner is John Kilfeather, who had previously constructed and equipped exchange buildings. For the New Haven building every care has been taken to make the structure absolutely fireproof and one of the most modern buildings in the city.

The building is eight stories high, built of reinforced concrete faced with grey Virginia brick and trimmed with stone. It will be equipped with sprinklers.

Located on a corner and running through to the new boulevard which leads directly from the station to the heart of the city and the center of the theatrical district the building offers a desirable situation for the transaction of motion picture business. Light is provided on three sides with excellent ventilation.

Film exchanges have already flocked to the new gathering place. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have taken the entire second floor; Universal Film Company the first floor; Metro Pictures Corporation the fourth floor and Pathe Corporation the sixth. Other film corporations with exchanges at New Haven are said to be negotiating for space.

The few details still left to be finished for the complete equipment of the building, will be in order within the next month while it is anticipated that the entire building will be ready for occupancy by February 1, 1921.

Screens Are Making Big Success

According to reports received from the head office of the Mirroroid Screen Company, their list of screens is going strong, especially the newly developed heavyweight type.

Many letters have been received from users of the early Mirroroids telling of their satisfaction and often asking quotations on new ones. One such letter from John H. Gentner, of the Retina theatre at St. Louis, says: "Although I have been using a Mirroroid for seven years it is good yet, but am anxious to try the new." And another letter from E. B. Linck of the Hippodrome theatre at Williamsport, Pa., which said among other things: "Our Mirroroid has been complimented by many exhibitors who say it is the finest screen they have ever seen."

Schoenbaum Has Eye on His Lenses

THE editor of this department has just received a call from M. M. Schoenbaum informing him that he is preparing some interesting data on the latest improvements and processes of manufacture of French lenses and that he in the meantime wishes the NEWS to inform those to whom Mr. Cheney, his former representative loaned lenses that he would like to have them returned.

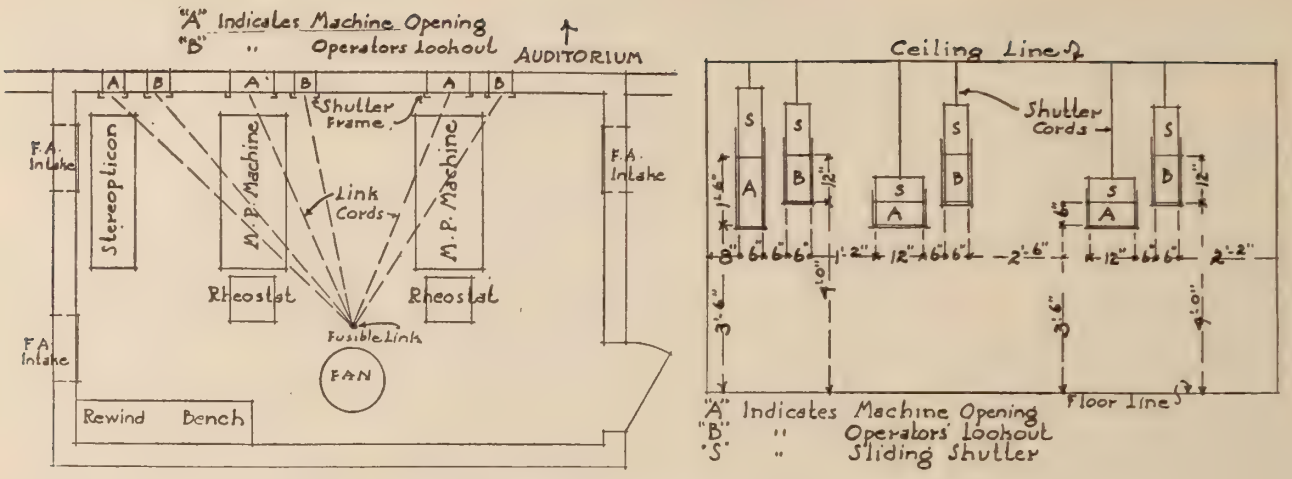
The lenses which are out on trial are in most cases of those focal lengths which are in greatest demand by what Mr. Schoenbaum describes as "discriminating exhibitors." The editor understands that as a special act of holiday spirit Mr. Schoenbaum will not insist on the return of his lenses if a check is sent him before Christmas Day.

Let those who have been favored with weeks of free use of Mr. Schoenbaum's lenses re- (he would probably consider a money order), (he would probably consider a money order, covering the goods in hand.

Los Angeles Simplex Sales Increase

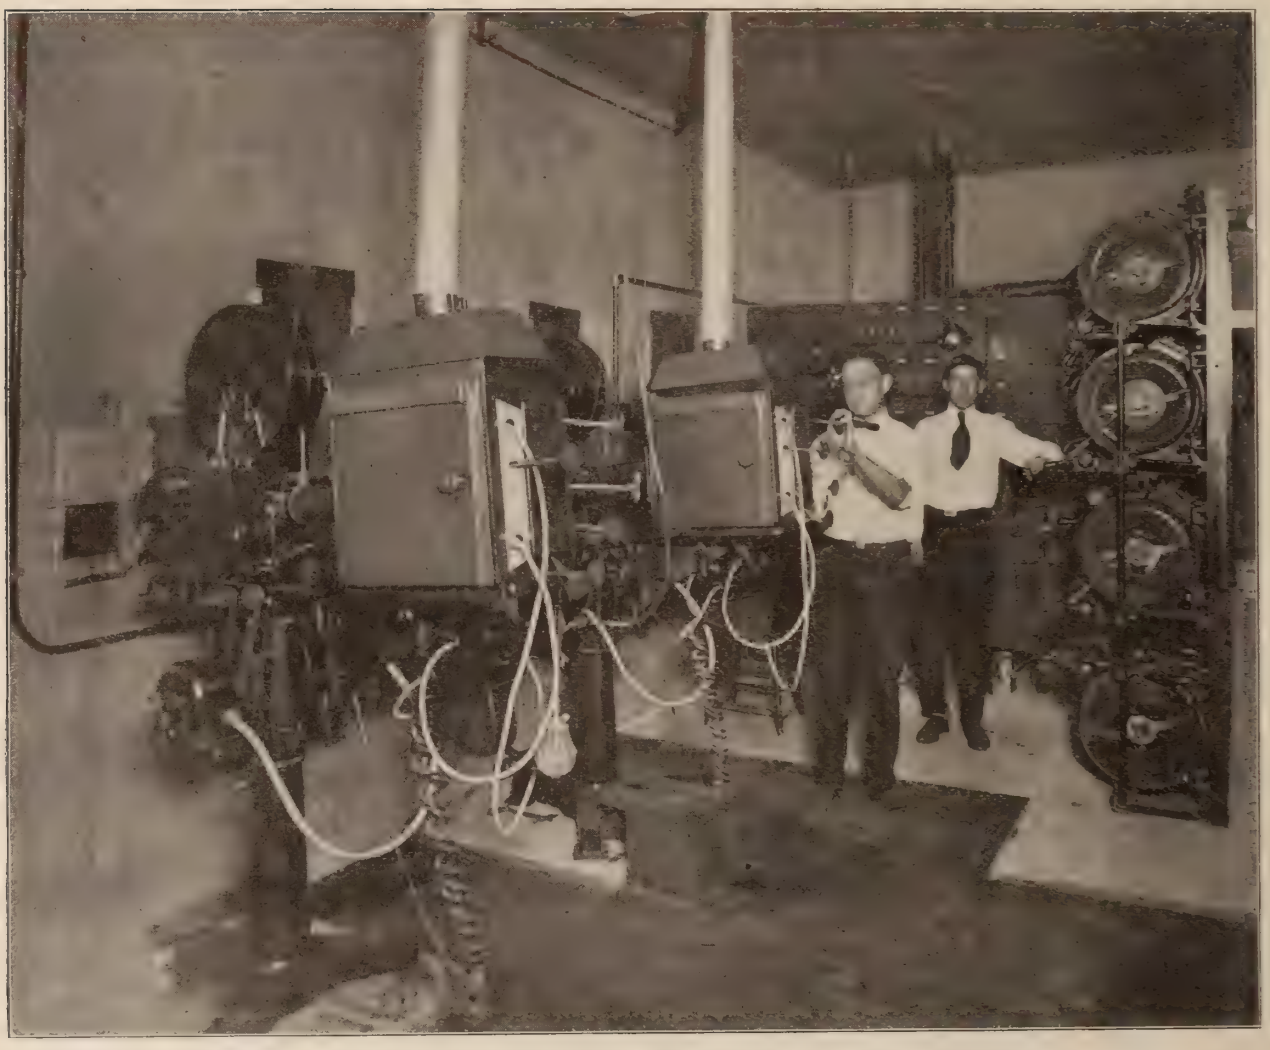
From E. C. Andrew, Pacific Coast manager of the Los Angeles offices of the Argus Enterprises, comes a report that is particularly pleasing to Simplex officials, inasmuch as it indicates that the well-known Simplex Projector is as much in demand on the West Coast as it is in other parts of the country.

The new office of the Argus Company, located at 836 Olive Street, Los Angeles, is the last word in efficiency and design, and that this branch of the popular Argus Company means business is evidenced by the fact that an entire new building has been specially erected in which to house its activities.



According to the report referred to, the following installations have been effected recently:

1 Type "B" Simplex in Jesse Lasky, Hollywood; the Sunshine theatre, Los Angeles; Hal E. Roach, Culver City, and Cecil B. De Mille, Hollywood.



2 Type "S" Simplex, D. W. Griffith, Philharmonic Auditorium, Los Angeles.

1 Type "S" Simplex, Earl C. Anthony, Burlingame.

the projection machines making suggestions but have failed to touch upon those most necessary of machines. In the case of a power house the engine is usually purchased first and then the structure built around it. Perhaps this is the way that projection rooms should be built because an ideal projection room with a pair of poor projectors is money wasted. But on the other hand, the best projectors ever made could not do a satisfactory job in a shaky, shimmying "booth." It appears therefore as if the two items—room and machines—should be considered as a unit.

SELECTION OF PROJECTOR.

"Which projector shall I select" is the question so often received by projection departments. Every man if he has attempted to make a study of the situation has convinced himself what machine he would buy if he had occasion to do so. But a department of this sort cannot express any such opinion. There are three standard machines on the market each one of which has its hearty adherents. The one and only thing to do then is to go around amongst your theatre friends and get their experiences with the projectors they have been using. From here go to the distributors of the several makes and form your opinion of the kind of service each would give for you will surely need service at some time in your career and the right kind of Service will mean the saving of a great many dollars.

These suggestions we realize are meagre enough but they are the only ones to be guided by. If the theatre manager or his projectionist is a natural born mechanic he can tell which machine is constructed best by an examination but not many men can qualify as experts in this line. Past performance is the best clue to projector supremacy.

"Back Testing" the Year of 1920

IT is always a good idea to look back over ones shoulder at the end of a year and form an idea of the successes and failures that have happened. It is also a good idea to take a brief inventory of the accomplishments to see if the year has been worthy of special mention.

Perhaps the most interesting phase to discuss is that of improvements. Of course, it would be still more interesting to discuss the rumors of improvements but these have fallen on the air so thick and fast that it would require a volume to give them proper treatment. Actual improvements are worthy of notice for they do act as an indication of the progress of the art.

The principal projectors have made announcements from time to time of improved features and additional devices. These range all the way from larger, more substantial lamp houses to smaller but equally as important refinements of intermittent movements. Such attachments as arc periscopes while small in themselves play a distinct part in helping the projectionist turn out more finished screen pictures.

Carbons which for a time due to war conditions did not have the burning quality of previous years have regained much of this lost ground and as a rule are now found entirely satisfactory for projection purposes. Those faults which showed themselves in uneven consumption, hard and soft spots, and sometimes in the blowing out of the core in the case of cored carbons have been eliminated to a great degree and this has helped in the quality of pictures.

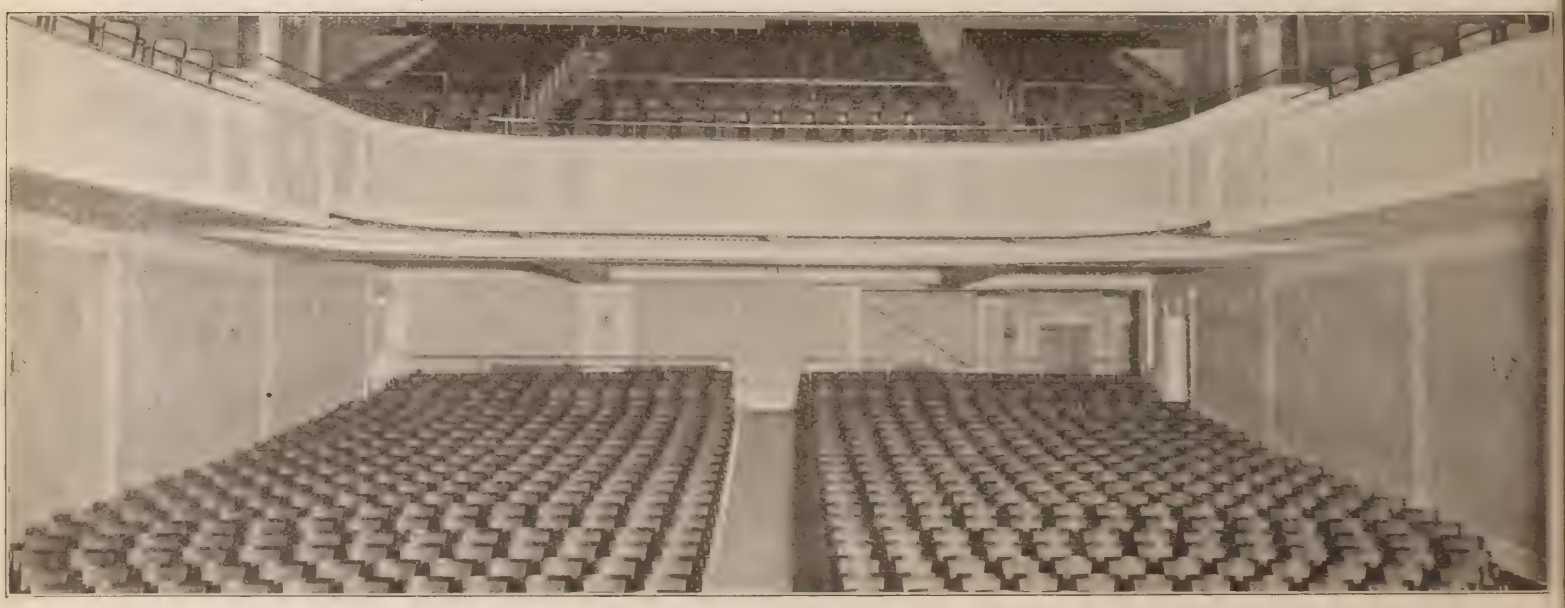
Several new screens have made enviable successes. Most of them have been of the fabric backed type with either a specially prepared paint surface or one of metallic composition.

The question of screens is one that has not had proper study up to this year. But one of the leading research laboratories has made up for this deficiency through a rather complete analysis of commercial screen surfaces. The results of the work were incorporated in a paper delivered before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and unless signs fail the data contained therein is the beginning of a systematic investigation of screen surfaces as applied to theatres of differing types. At present the selection of the proper surface is too much a matter of judgment on the part of the supply house or salesman. In the future there is every reason to believe that the correct screen may be selected from a chart after making certain measurements such as position of screen and dimensions of theatre.

Along these same lines comes the problem of correct screen intensities. There is very little data for public use but some individuals are now working to gather such information and their labor will go a long ways toward the standardization of screen lighting. There is no more excuse for the screen that is over-bright than for the one that is under illuminated, although the tendency during 1920 seems to be toward that of intense brilliancy.

There are probably more theatres using 60 amperes and upward today than ever before. This is not because of the influx of new and larger houses but is because many of the theatres that have been getting along with 45 amperes have drawn their own conclusions to the effect that the picture will have a greater attraction if it is better lighted. Naturally this is not correct in many cases but it is difficult to combat without definite figures obtained by experts from actual tests.

There is a real tendency also, to improve the working conditions of the projectionist in the theatres that have been built. Seldom is a new theatre found nowadays with a cramped projection room. Although architects still persist in placing the projection room up under the eaves they have seen the value of making the workroom of the machine man large enough for comfort and health.



The condition of films supplied to theatres does not seem to have improved throughout the 12 months just passed. In fact there is sometimes reason to believe that films are supplied in worse repair than formerly. This is a matter of Exchange supervision and as has been so often stated in these columns, the real fault can be traced back to the head office of the producer.

Now that manufacturing conditions are getting back to normal it is safe to predict a more rapid advancement of the projection branch during 1921 than has taken place during the last few years. Materials and labor, barring unforseen trouble will be in better shape and equipment manufacturers will feel more willing to undertake excursions into the experimental field.

Peerless Automatic Arc Controls Invade Canada

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation who are opening several new theatres in eastern Canada have equipped the projectors in their new houses with Peerless Automatic Arc Controls manufactured by The J. E. McAuley Mfg. Co., Chicago.

The splendid results obtained with these Controls at the Famous Players Criterion theatre in New York City is said to be responsible for the new installations.

How to Produce High Class Lighting Effects

A Description of the Use of Dimmer Equipments in Theatres

Refinements of Control — The Slow-Motion Master Hand-Wheel Drive

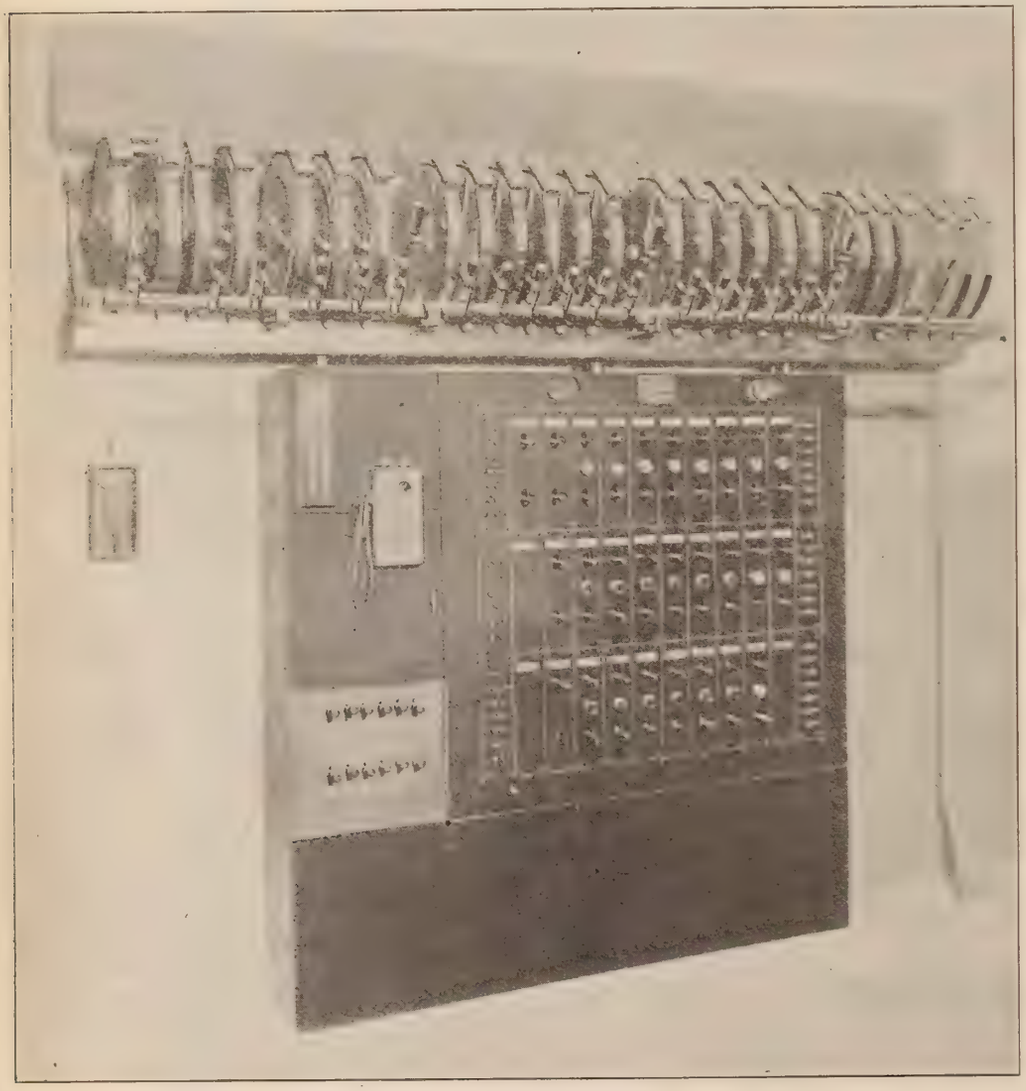
When dimmer plates are assembled "one high"—that is, in a single row—all of the plates can be made to operate in unison by means of the master lever and the interlocking mechanism already described. When plates are banked in multiple rows—that is, two high, three high, four high or five high—it is customary to install a separate master lever for each row. It sometimes happens, however, that there are reasons for desiring to operate certain plates, or all of the plates, in adjoining rows, by means of a single lever. This condition is provided for by means of bell crank connections between the two shafts.

A still further refinement of control is obtained by the wheel drive. With a dimmer equipped with this feature it is not only possible to dim or brighten any number of lamps at one time, but it is also possible to dim some and brighten others at the same time. In addition to this advantage the wheel drive possesses the merit of enabling the operator to obtain a slow, smooth motion, causing the lamps to glow or fade by such imperceptible degrees that dawn, twilight and similar effects can be reproduced on the stage with marvelous fidelity to nature.

With an interlocking equipment w master wheel drive, such as that in the Rialto theatre, any of the following combinations can be obtained:

1. Any single plate can be operated alone by means of an individual lever.

2. All plates in any row can be operated in unison by means of the master lever, shown on extreme end of each row.



3. Any number of plates in any row can be interlocked and operated in unison by the master lever while other plates in the same row, but not interlocked, remain inoperative.

4. All plates in any two or more rows can be interlocked and operated in unison by the master wheel.

5. Any combination of plates in any two or more rows can be interlocked and operated in unison by the master wheel, while plates not in interlock remain inoperative.

6. By rotating the handle of the master levers, shown on end of each row, shafts may be thrown into or out of interlock with either of the two vertical driving rods, enabling the operator to dim any combination of lamps and at the same time brighten others. For example: White lamps may be dimmed and amber lamps brightened at the same time to stimulate twilight effects. Amber lamps may be dimmed and red lights brightened at the same time for sunset. Red lamps may be dimmed and blue lights brightened for moonlight.

It is well to remember in choosing dimmer equipment that front of switchboard mounting is generally preferred to rear of board mounting because all dimmer plates are in plain sight and easily accessible, making it certain that faulty operation of any plate will be quickly noticed or remedied. Interlock dimmers are, in nearly all cases, to be preferred to the non-interlocking type, because ease of operation and refinement of control is greatly increased, while the difference in first cost is small.

The 25 dimmer plates in the Peoples theatre, Chicago, are mounted conveniently above the switchboard

Manager Spahr Looks Ahead to 1921

MR. O. F. SPAHR, manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, after reviewing his record of sales for the year 1920, states that they are the biggest sales in Motiograph history. During the past two or three months, when so many concerns were complaining that conditions were not the best and that sales were on the decline, Spahr states that the Motiograph sales have kept up very satisfactory. Although, he has noted one special feature of the sales, which is, that the buyers of today are more conservative—that is, they want to be shown, and they check into the quality of an article more carefully than ever before. This is one reason why, he believes, Motiograph sales have been exceedingly large in number.

He further states that since buyers have shown such interest in checking into the matter to find out the real quality of the Motiograph Machine, it has placed more confidence in the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company's engineering and manufacturing departments, for they now feel that they are rewarded for the extra time and special pains they have taken to produce a machine of such high quality. They have been given such enthusiasm that they are going into their 1921 year's work by putting into the Motiograph Machine such energy and precision work that will make it a more perfect machine than ever before.

Mr. Spahr is perfectly confident that the demands for well made projectors will be greater in the year 1921 than ever before. He advises that the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company is going into the new year's work with increased manufacturing space, more machinery and the best labor it can obtain so as to give all Motiograph purchasers a high class projector.

Mr. Spahr states the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company hopes to take care of every order that is given to them during 1921, and advises that it will give each order that same Motiograph service that Enterprise has been preaching and giving in the years gone by. He is confident that with experience of over twenty years in the manufacture of projectors, his company is in a position to do this. To quote him further: "Our whole sales force, office force, in fact every man connected with the organization is working to make this possible."

President Earl Speaks for Powers

When asked for a statement regarding the outlook for 1921, President Earl, of the Nicholas Power Co., said:

"The influence of the motion picture industry is now so fully understood it seems hardly necessary to point out that the viewpoint of this business will have a tremendous effect upon all lines. While it is true a proper attitude of conservatism is wise and necessary, at the present time it would appear the industry should seek to promote reasonable optimism.

"This is a season of the year when we all endeavor to give particular attention to the need for cheerfulness in the affairs of life. It is no exaggeration to state that cheerfulness is made the "serious" business of the nation during the holiday season. This year we have a particular need for such cheerfulness now that business is rapidly getting over the first serious setback it has received since the commencement of the World War. Such re-adjustments have always followed abnormal conditions caused by past wars, and there was every reason to believe we would eventually require such a readjustment after the war which has just ended. The conditions, however, are different in this particular instance as this country certainly has not been impoverished by the war. Furthermore, we have a well organized banking and business system which provides safeguards for just such emergencies.

"Many prominent business men and manufacturers have assured us that there is no need for alarm, and only the men who were extreme in their extravagance during the height of our prosperity see nothing but 'hard times' ahead of us. This country is still short in many important lines, and the world at large will provide a still greater market for our products. It is up to us all now to be wise in our buying, but to cease buying is not a part of wisdom. The penny wise and pound foolish policy is particularly unwise at a time when we have such good reasons for believing that this country is facing another period of prosperity. Perhaps this prosperity will not be so extreme in some directions, but it will be of a far more substantial and permanent nature.

Industry Uses Corcoran Tanks Exclusively

When it is considered that nearly 100 per cent of the studios in the country and probably near the same percentage abroad have installed tanks manufacturered by the A. J. Corcoran, Inc., of Jersey City, one is forced to the conclusion that the product must possess unusual merit. Such an important operation as film development demands that all accessories be of the highest grade, having made a long study of developing tanks and their uses, Cocoran is in a position to apply his knowledge for the benefit of the industry.

Home of Corcoran Tanks

Mr. Cocoran says that many times new buyers of tank equipment consider price first of all but that soon afterwards when they discover how much expensive solution is being lost through cheap and faulty construction they are convinced that the best of tanks is only an investment.

Hallberg Speed Indicator and Recorder

The modern motion picture theatre is a temple of two arts—Drama and Music The highest type of screen presentation now requires close coordination with suitable music to help sway our emotions Expensive organs and symphony orchestras are part of the equipment of the superior photoplayhouses, and yet full harmony between music and pictures is not obtained unless there is made some mechanical arrangement to synchronize the tempo of both.

Just imagine a true instance—a heart rending death scene of a mother mourned by her two little ones so sad that the picture had been interpolated with short contrasting semi-comedy scenes of a dance hall appropriate to a parallel theme in the story. The picture draws to a climax—the action becomes faster—the author cuts these contrasts in four different times each time in shorter lengths of film, so that the changes are only four seconds apart. The music must follow these changes—tense dramatic value would be changed to burlesque should the jazz music of the dance scene overlap into the death scene. Here is where a mechanical synchronizing device furnishes the missing link between the film and music. The director watches the dials of his Hallberg Electric Film Speed Indicator and know:

The dual arts—filmusic—require this missing link of high grade theatre equipment without doubt—but there is another use, highly commendable from the standpoint of profits, and that is to move crowds by "speeding" a show. Many managers make a constant practice of rushing films through in order to seat more patrons and thus swell profits, and while this is a practice which cannot be endorsed, it is much more practicable when equipped with speed indicating devices than otherwise.

The Recording device is of inestimable advantage in order to have a thorough and accurate knowledge of film costs and machine costs. It accomplishes the same purpose for phototheatres as speedometers for automobiles. Large corporations now figure their tire costs in miles. Large theatres should figure their film costs the same way. The charts can be entered onto comparative statements to show just what each projection machine is doing, in order to have an accurate knowledge of your business. Circuits of theatres find such information of inestimable benefit for the purpose of comparison between their various theatres, and the performance of each projector of the same or different makes will be recorded, so that it becomes possible for the owner and manager to determine the practical projection value and reliability of each projector installed.

The complete equipment for one projector is diagramatically pictured in the accompanying illustration. The current from the generator is carried to a distributing box mounted on the generator control panel in the projection room, or other convenient location, where it is divided up into three circuits and passed through adjustable resistances for regulating the current to the correct value on the initial setup for the different meters. One of the three circuits connects with an indicating meter having scale readings in feet of film per minute and minutes per 1,000 feet, mounted in the operating room of the control panel, or other location where the operator can readily watch it. The second circuit connects with a second indicating meter mounted in front of the orchestra leader, and the third circuit with the recording instrument in the manager's office. This equipment, with wiring would have to be duplicated for each additional projector. Ordinary bell wire installed as it would be for electric bells is all that is required for making the various connections to the meters.

Libman-Spanjer Corporation Lays Plans to Invade Field with New Line of Theatre Equipment

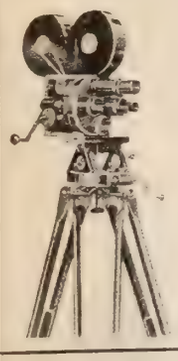
Announcement was made several weeks ago that William F. Libman had retired from the Stanley Frame Company and had opened his own offices for the manufacture and sale of Theatrical Lobby Frames and Displays, was only the beginning of a series of events that seem certain to have a very widespread effect on that particular branch of the theatre supply field.

This week the announcement is made that Mr. Libman has joined forces with William H. Spanjer, one of the most important manufacturers of wooden ware in the United States, and under the name of Libman-Spanjer Corporation, these two men are to enter the theatrical lobby display field in a larger way than any other organization has hitherto found possible.

Mr. Spanjer has been identified with theatrical displays for many years. He originated and manufactured the circus wagons, with all their wonderful ornamentation. He manufactured lobby frames for the first motion picture houses in New York and Newark, but the growth of other lines of his manufacture demanded his attention so that for a number of years he has not been as close to the theatrical field as in his earlier days.

With Mr. Libman now to assume the direction of the sale and exploitation of the Libman-Spanjer Corporation, and with Mr. Spanjer himself in charge of the manufacturing end, all the immense facilities of the Spanjer Manufacturing Plants are once more to be turned to the picture theatres.

Mr. Spanjer is the only manufacturer of wood letters in the United States. His two factories, one in Newark, N. J., and the other in Chicago, Ill., turn out a great variety of wood manufactures, but the letter lines are unique and exclusive. A great many people are employed in the Spanjer factories, and with a shipping point for the Eastern trade at Newark and for the Western trade at Chicago, it is felt that the new corporation can give excellent service to the field.



Mr. Libman, who has opened temporary offices at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, states that the Libman-Spanjer Corporation is already in full operation with numerous gratifying theatrical contracts under work in the factories. He promises many innovations, both in the manufactured articles and in service, and says that his company is prepared to undertake commissions that up to this time have seemed impossible of accomplishment.

Dark Red and Peacock Blue for Decorations

On Saturday evening, December 4, Finkelstein and Ruben will formally open the Loring theatre, Minneapolis' newest and most beautifully appointed neighborhood house. This theatre, which will seat 1,280 persons, has been in course of construction for over a year and represents a cost of $500,000. It will be under the management of Chauncey Teoery, former manager of the New Lyndale theatre, another neighborhood house in this city controlled by Finkelstein and Ruben.

The real beauty of the Loring lies in the decorations which are dark red and peacock blue. The peacock design is used throughout the house. The auditorium of the theatre is almost square, while the stage and orchestra pit are patterned after the Capitol theatre in St. Paul. The orchestra pit is oval in form and is so arranged that the orchestra will be almost out of sight.

An eight-piece orchestra and organ will furnish music. Powers 6B projectors have been installed. The policy of the house will be to show second run pictures, splitting with the New Lagoon, another Finkelstein and Ruben neighborhood theatre. The shows will average from eight to ten reels, presenting a very desirable program.

One of the outstanding features of this new theatre is a completely equipped children's playroom where the youngsters may play with sand, blocks, slides and other apparatus of the modern playroom. A matron will be in charge of the playroom at all times.

The location of the Loring is ideal, situated on the principal carlines ten blocks from the center of the city and in a district where five percent of the population of Minneapolis reside.

8,000 Town to Have $100,000 Theatre

What the motion picture theatre means to the town of 8,000 inhabitants in indicated by the announcement last week of the formal opening of the new Liberty theatre, a $100,000 structure at Mexico, Mo. The Liberty is the largest house devoted entirely to motion pictures in any town in America of the size of Mexico. The seating capacity is a trifle over 1,500.

Equipped with an $18,000 pipe organ, silk and tapestried mural ornament, two latest model Simplex machines, marbled foyer, spacious rest rooms for both men and women, and a perfect system of stage lighting and effects, the Liberty stands out as a paragon of not only small town houses but as one to which many theatres in the larger cities might look with envy.

A. H. Whitney, one of the prominent business men of Mexico, has been appointed manager of the theatre, which is backed by interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The Liberty will run productions of first run caliber, showing them at the same time that they are being presented in St. Louis and Kansas City.

New Broadway Theatre Danville, Virginia

Monday, November 15th, saw the opening of the new Broadway theatre in Danville, Va. The souvenir issued on the occasion of the opening states that the Broadway is owned and operated by the Southern Amusement Co., with the following officials: C. M. Vanstory, President; John F. Pryor, Vice-President; J. C. Hester, Secretary, and George W. Pryor, Treasurer.

The program also gives credit for the beauty of construction of the new theatre to C. K. Howell, architect; L. B. Flora & Son, contractor; William M. Saling, decorator, and Carmine Vitolo, in charge of stage decorations.

The new Broadway has a seating capacity of 750 and in luxury of appointments is surpassed by no theatre south of the Mason-Dixon Line.

In his opening address Mr. Ken E. Finlay, personal representative of the president of the Southern Amusement Co., reviewed the advancement of the motion picture industry at large and particularly in the city of Danville. For his company he promised to the people of Danville the biggest and best productions and expressed a willingness to spare no expense or cooperation with the producers to bring to the people of Danville the newest and biggest screen productions. The outstanding feature of the opening was the taking by Mr. Ken E. Finlay of a motion picture of the audience. This picture was shown to the audience for the first time at the matinee following the opening.

come to be a time for rejoicing and is glad to hear the music without necessarily thinking about the religious aspects of it.

I should like to take this occasion to present some definite suggestions for the holiday music—compositions which can create the atmosphere of the moment.

Take St. Valentine's Day week: time of lovers, cupid's bows, pink ribbons and proposals. Here are just a few obvious and highly appropriate selections.

Overture, "Romeo and Juliet," Kreisler's "Love's Joy," "Oh Promise Me" of De Koven, "Mikado" chorus, "She's Going to Marry Yum Yum," "Wedding March," Mendelssohn or Wagner, "Angels' Serenade," "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," "Coming Through the Rye," "Barcarolle," "Tales of Hoffman."

When turning further on the calendar, Washington's Birthday, February 22, a time for patriotic celebration:

Medley of America, songs of war and peace, Hopkinson's old songs, imitation of Ben Franklin's musical glasses, bugle calls of the U. S. Army, Schubert's "Marche Militaire," Turkish march from "Ruins of Athens" (Beethoven), "Prelude C Sharp" of Rachmaninoff, "March Slav" of Tschaikovsky.

Going over a few weeks into Easter, when the Lenten business is supposed to drop off, there are opportunities for music which draw those same crowds to church. Here are some of the selections:

"The Palms of Faure," "On Wings of Song," Mendelssohn, Midsummer Night's Dream Overture, "The Holy City," "The Lost Chord," Hallelujah chorus from Handel, "I know that my Redeemer Liveth," Angel's Chorus, "The Heavens are Telling" (Haydn), Gloria from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, "Cujus Animam" from Rossini's Stabat Mater.

At this time I am not attempting to give any detailed list of holiday opportunities. I should just like to touch on different types of suggestions. For instance, as a last example, suppose you were planning on a Hallowe'en week's atmosphere; I am sure you could get it with selections like the following:

Scherezade ballet (Rimsky-Korsakoff), College Songs, Hansel and Gretel Music of Humperdinck, Schumann's Scenes from Childhood (some of them), "Orientale" of Cesar Cui, Afternoon of a Faun (Debussy), Wild's Man Dance (Ornstein), Laughing song, from "Manon."

Don't forget the newly written compositions that are appearing every day. In this connection, I might say that often a new song or instrumental number of the popular variety seems to have no particular and direct value except in a situation which may not arise until many months afterward. It is worth while to study the new music as it comes along.

Some Musical Personalities

(Under this head the musical individuals are introduced to the Fraternity. Send in your biographies.)

Harold Price, organist. Have spent twelve years in the business, beginning in the days of the one-reelers. Have made a special study of organ as used in theatres for a good many years, and have played successfully for some of the best houses in the country. At present with the Strand theatre, Greensburg, Pa.

Cady C. Kenney, organist and pianist—thirty-three years old—began study of music at age of nine—concertized as pianist at twelve—held first church position when fifteen years old and has played organ in church continuously since—instruction in organ received principally from Hamlin Hunt (Minneapolis) and W. Middelschulte (Chicago), in piano with Emil Liebling and Allen Spencer (Chicago), and all branches of musical theory with Adolf Weidig (Chicago)—took a two year's post-graduate course in the American Conservatory, Chicago. Held teaching positions in Simpson College, Indianola, Ia., Christian College, Columbia, Mo. (director of music), MacPhail School of Music, Minneapolis, and State University of Wyoming, Laramie, Wyo. At present organist and choirmaster in St. John's Episcopal Church, conducting a private studio for piano and organ students, and is pianist at the Clinton theatre and with a dance orchestra, and substitutes at the Strand theatre (playing organ), Clinton, Ia.—experienced in composing, arranging and orchestrating music, and leading orchestra and band—has good organ library.

Wade Hamilton, organist. A young organist of 24 years of age and has been interested in music all his life, but in the last six years, he has placed a great part of his efforts in moving picture music. Of course he has aspirations of becoming something in the picture music world, and is striving to that end by being constantly on the alert for new ideas.

Mr. Franz Otto, Coach and Conductor of Chorus and Orchestra, Teachers Certificate, Chicago Musical College, 1902 Post Graduate work, Berlin, Sterns Conservatory, 1903, Operatic repertoire, Chorus Conductor, of Student Chorus.

Lortzing Opera, 1907 to 8, Berlin, Musical Director Y. M. C. A. Winnipeg, Manitoba, 1906 to 7, Conductor, Y P Chorus, Dubuque, Ia. 1910 to 18, Conductor Saengerbund and orchestra, Dubuque, Ia. 1915 to 18, Musical Director Dubuque High 1918 to date, third year. Supplied singing specialties for various motion pictures, conducting orchestras, for classic pictures such as Julius Cæser, Richard the Third, Evangeline, David Copperfield, and others. The New Era Organ

This organ has in truth made possible a new era of music for the medium and smaller sized theatre of quality. Every owner is a satisfied owner.

dering if the fact that so many theatres are installing organs would suggest an unexplored avenue to many excellent organists who have contented themselves with giving desultory recitals in churches.

I feel, of course, that the biggest thing about the movement is the absolute psychological need for music in motion picture houses. The best talent among authors and artists is gradually being drawn into the service of the movies. The talent, to find its complete expression, is bound to demand the best there is in music or there has got to be something to take the place of the human voice—and even from a purely commercial aspect it behooves the enterprising musician to assemble his forces and say, "Here, I've been studying up on this proposition and I know just what you need."

There is of course a deep seated aversion among managers to anything "high brow," but that difficulty can be pleasantly sugar coated. Indeed I have found from my newspaper experience that men really prefer a woman with brains providing she is willing to powder her nose and fluff up her hair a bit. And it is the same with art.

I shall be glad to receive any further communications concerning the proposed conference, will make any investigation you might desire and will use any propaganda that I can in our paper.—Josephine Van Degrift—The Beacon Journal, Akron, Ohio.

My Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I am heartily in accord with your idea of making the moving picture house a center for music distributions as well.

If the musical accompaniments, which now are generally only an annoyance, can be made to really fit the picture and chosen from the best sources, the result should certainly be an artistic whole, and no doubt the better class of people might be attracted to these theatres. Personally I believe that if even in small centers and raw new towns, such as some of our western cities could be given a gradual diet of some better class singer or cellist or fiddler, even—that eventually we might create a music public that would support the artists when putting on concerts and recitals of the legitimate kind.

I am wondering if the small town movie house couldn't be made the place of giving local talent, of the better art, a chance. Must we necessarily have the Galli-Curcis for consumption at once? Where then is the smaller talent ever going to get its opportunity? I rather hope the conference may take that up favorably—and lend a helping hand to the struggling lesser ones in their final decisions as to whom they shall have as "attraction" for their movies.

Sincerely wish I might attend the conference; it would be very interesting, but away off out here one attends nothing very interesting but just tries to keep up with the everlasting H. C. of L.

Your work for music is wonderful and I follow it all with the greatest of interest. Sorry you were not operating the free concerts when I was a "Manhattanite."

Here's to your success, long and continuous. I'll be interested always in these good movements.—Louise Valdora Kelly, Academy School of Music, Great Falls, Mont.

Making Special Organ Attachments

"NO, those are not coffin cases, for, believe you me, they're just plumb full of action."

So William Wood, organ specialist who cares daily for the five huge unit organs in each of the Portland theatres operated under the banner of Jensen and Von Herberg, stoutly defended his youngest "cheild." William, or "Billie" as he is more generally known, is sometimes described as the organ nursemaid, for it is his duty to see that each of these five organs, constantly in use 12 hours a day, is at all times in perfect order. And not having enough regular work to keep him busy, William set about to build a pipe organ attachment which in Chicago "F. O. B." to Portland, Ore., would cost in the neighborhood of $1,500. But his latest charge, over which he has toiled constantly—sometimes 18 hours out of the 24—will represent less than $800.

Mr. Wood has just completed a marimba-xylophone attachment. It represents four octaves with 49 notes and the accompanying sharps and flats and is equipped with a reiterator that makes possible a second manner of playing each note. To be properly impressed one must see the two coffin-appearing cases which inclose the notes and the sharps and flats and one must be told of the 1,500 yards of magnet wire, the four dozen hard rubber "toss" balls, the four sheepskins and the 12 fishskins that are neatly fitted about each key. One cannot fail to be impressed by this knowledge, but to the uninitiated musician one may still remain hopelessly ignorant of what it is all about.

"Them things with pipes underneath" is one description that has been given of a marimba-xylophone which real musicians will tell you is only a glorified xylophone with longer and larger metal pipes giving greater resonance and beauty of sound. It is used in connection with unit orchestral organ because the nearest imitation of the harp possible to attain with an organ connection is to be obtained through their flat, wooden keys. Electrical connection readily may be made by elaborate wiring so that certain pressure of the organ keys will play the instrument at the same time notes from the pipe organ proper are sounding.

Very minute magnetic wiring is necessitated because of the 1,500 yards which are used on this comparatively small attachment. Mr. Wood found a large size darning needle the proper tool to use in boring some of the wee chambers for the magnetic wiring.

Four sizes of hard rubber balls, "the kind little girls play jacks with," as Mr. Wood identifies them, will play this instrument, one ball for every note. The balls vary in size, as the higher notes naturally call for a smaller, more delicate touch. The electrical connection will cause these balls to fall on the instrument as the organist touches the keys.

To build organ and organ attachments one must qualify to be a first class dressmaker. Therefore Mr. Wood, already referred to as organ nursemaid, purchased four skins of "Alam-Lamb" sheepskin and carefully cut out the 49 sockets for the 49 keys. Each socket is as nice and particular a piece of dressmaking as any fastidious woman could demand, for edges are all carefully turned in, with no seams showing and with a perfect fit obtained in each of the 49 cases. Inside of the key cases even more discriminating work was done by Mr. Wood, who fitted each of the valves with fish zephyr, which he declares is nothing else than nicely cured fishskin. Incidentally one of the gravest problems Mr. Wood faces in keeping the Jensen and Von Herberg organs perfect is making this zephyr a little less appetizing to mice patrons of the theatres. A part of every organ equipment, he contends, is a mouse trap well baited with cheese.

Three weeks of "extra time" have been put in by Mr. Wood. During the latter part of the time he was assisted by J. Green. Their workshop has been one of the small dressing rooms of the Liberty theatre, although the apparatus overcrowds out into the hall and the xylophone itself remained in aloof dignity of an entirely separate dressing room. The marimba-xylophone, itself, was not built by Mr. Wood, who has confined his work to the electrical attachment with which its connection to the big organ may be made possible. The instrument was purchased at the cost of $375, which amounts to just about half of the entire cost of the product when ready for the super-organ. Many self-made instruments are to be noted in the dressing-room-work-shop, all of them designed primarily to save time. A sand paper polisher, crudely made of wooden spools to which a small motor may be attached, has been one of the great time savers. "We use that polisher for everything—even for manicures," Mr. Wood solemnly asserts. The same motor used for the sand paper machine is sometimes attached to "just a common garden variety" drill and has saved many moments in that capacity.

Still Another Ascher House Opens

ASCHER BROTHERS' Portage Park theatre was formally opened last Saturday evening. With a seating capacity of 2,500 the Portage Park takes its place as the largest theatre on the northwest side of Chicago, and it was taxed to capacity at its premier performance. Jack Pickford in "Just Out of College" was the opening feature.

In keeping with the chain of representative theatres now operated by this well known organization, the newest link conforms in every way to the high standard set by Ascher Brothers.

Erected at a cost in excess of $500,000, the new structure is one of the finest and best equipped photoplay theatre buildings in the country. Besides the theatre, the building contains eight stores, thirty-four apartments and a beautiful ball room immediately above the lobby and foyers.

The large entrance lobby has the walls finished in marble and paneling in artistic effects, the arched ceiling in white and cream blends in harmony. The decorative scheme of the amphitheatre is blue and salmon trimmed in gold. The seats, which are all located on the main floor, are spacious and designed to assure the comfort of the patrons. An innovation in motion picture theatres is the placing of loges in the rear of the orchestra floor.

Concealed throughout the entire auditorium are thousands of light bulbs of all hues. These lights are controlled by a mammoth remote switchboard. Innovations have been installed in the lighting system which will permit, through the use of an automatic dimmer, soft or brilliant colored lighting effects, which are so used as to synchronize with moonlight, water and other scenes, as the subject is unfolded on the screen.

Special attention was given to the question of ventilation and careful survey was made of the several systems in vogue before the acceptance and installation of the washed air system in use in this theatre. Great fans drive the air through water, purifying it before it is delivered into the auditorium. The temperature of the washed air is regulated to fit the season, by passing over heated coils in the winter and iced coils in the summer months. For every person in the theatre, thirty cubic feet of purified tempered air will be supplied every minute.

Joe Koppel, one of the ablest and most popular theatre men in Chicago, is house manager and George Koehler and his famous orchestra, formerly associated with D. W. Griffith, will furnish the music for the pictures and will also render overtures from jazz to grand opera. The latest type of Moeller pipe organ has been installed to supplement the special orchestra which will interpret the picture plays.

Rest rooms have been provided with every convenience and an attendant in charge to look after the comfort of the patrons.

Good Wishes—Better Resolutions

The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. extends to the exhibitor, the distributor and the producer, its very best wishes for a happy New Year.

Our further wish is extended for a prosperous one as well. It is a selfish wish because in an extremely large degree the prosperity of the industry in general, and the exhibitors' end of it in particular, will depend upon the use of fine posters:—in other words,—RITCHEY posters!

Therefore:—

The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. hereby solemnly resolve to continue producing motion picture posters of a quality as fine as it is humanly possible to produce,—and we take this opportunity to ask the exhibitor to make an equally solemn resolve,—

To wit:—

That he shall neglect no possible opportunity or occasion to demand the full measure of prosperity to which he is entitled. A prosperity that will only come to him through a continuous and satisfying supply of—

Dear Mr. Abrams;-

I have just returned to my office from a screening of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture "The Mark of Zorro", and I cannot refrain from telling you that I think it is really the most wonderful picture he has made.

We believe the picture is so big that we have decided to play this feature in our theatres a full week instead of our usual policy which has always been to play everything three or four days.

It took a picture like the "Mark of Zorro" to do it.

Best wishes and kindest regards.

HOBART BOSWORTH in A Thousand To One

Directed by R.V. Lee
Personally supervised by
J. PARKER READ JR.

J. Parker Read, Jr., has achieved, in "A Thousand to One," starring Hobart Bosworth, a melodrama that is different. Though much of the action transpires in a Western setting, neither a six-shooter nor a two-gun bad man, black curses of the "Western movie," is visible.

In his newest Associated Producers picture, this young producer demonstrates that the message of the clean, upstanding story of a moral coward who conquered an evil self may be told on the screen without a foot of hokum or a breath of bombast.

From the fullness of his knowledge, resulting from important service abroad during the late World War, Mr. Hoover is passing on to the American public the grave necessity of stretching out a helping hand to innocent sufferers from the Holocaust of Hate.

He pleads in the name of charity first. Three million, five hundred lives will be snuffed out before another harvest is garnered unless aid is rushed. Ten Dollars will save a life!

The movement is of almost equal importance because of its relation to international affairs. Starving millions on one side of the Atlantic mean disordered millions on the other.

Think of this as a charity of necessity!

MOTION PICTURE DAY

NINE BIG WELFARE ORGANIZATIONS

Covering Every Community in the Country

WILL HEARTILY CO-OPERATE

The American Relief Administration, the American Red Cross, the American Friends' Service Committee, the Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Knights of Columbus, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, and the Literary Digest Appeal have been enlisted in the tremendous drive for funds which is to be made on Motion Picture Day.

These organizations will work out the details for the work of mercy in conjunction with each and every motion picture man who gets in touch with them.

There will be speakers of prominence to help arouse interest. There will be a general plan of operation suggested in Motion Picture Trade Papers later. Any plan which may be devised to collect plenty of money will be considered a good plan.

There are 250,000 Lives to Save. There Must Be Ten Dollars for Every Life. Our Goal Is Two Million, Five Hundred Thousand Dollars.

THIS MESSAGE CALLS FOR ACTION —

THIS BIG PROJECT DEMANDS YOUR SERIOUS ATTENTION —

The Motion Picture Industry is essentially "of the people"—or of the masses. Figuring only in the most practical and sordid way, it would be good business for the motion picture industry to spend Ten Dollars to save the life of any child. The per capita expenditure for motion pictures these days is a lot higher than Ten Dollars in seventy years, the normal lifetime.

In a higher plane, what industry owes more to the people—and to the children? It's the genuine heart-tug between motion pictures and the people that has resulted in the tremendous development of our business. We're the people's dearest friend—it's their right to come to us for help.

And from still another angle—and you motion picture folks everywhere ought to give this a lot of thought:—The time is at hand when the motion picture industry ought to welcome any opportunity to prove its tremendous strength, either for public welfare or for its own protection.

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH OF THE NEAL HART EXPEDITION INTO DEATH VALLEY—Los Angeles Times.

Neal Hart's Party Braves Torrid Desolation of Death Valley to Film Desert Scenes for "Danger Valley."

THE Los Angeles Times has just printed a detailed account of Neal Hart's expedition into Death Valley.

"Of the thousands of motor trips made yearly there are never more than two or three which stand out as unusual," says the Times. "The one trip of the thousand was completed recently by a party of twelve motion picture actors, actresses, cameramen and assistants. In two Cadillac touring cars this party of adventurers worked from one end of Death Valley to the other, penetrating to spots in this below-sea-level wilderness that have never before been reached."

The Times goes on to relate that the occasion for the trip was the making of Neal Hart's great story, "Danger Valley," and says, "This experience was a decisive demonstration that everything in the motion picture business is not milk and honey.

"For twelve days these men and women lived on the desert, existing only on the food and water carried in the two trailers attached to the cars.

"No one in the party knew the roads of Death Valley, and when they struck out into this wilderness it was with the one desire of shooting up all unusual and out-of-the-way locations across this one hundred and fifty miles of desolate country.

"The lack of road knowledge, and the policy of following what looked to be the best trail resulted in the party becoming lost for three days. After working back and forth over the hills and through the sinks they found themselves at the very spot they had left three days before. F there they decided to travel by compass, and struck out on a straight line across the desert in the direction in which they hoped to fi town. Two days later they saw across the sagebrush a small settlement which meant they were back to civilization. Four miles t town one of the cars sputtered and died. Not a drop of gasoline in the tank!

"Neal Hart deserves credit for going into that hell hole and exposing himself to such hardships in order to get the real thin pictures.

"When the party reached Los Angeles, covered with dust of Death Valley, they were surrounded by large crowds wherever stopped."

"Danger Valley" is the third picture in the Neal Hart series of eight extraordinary outdoor pictures, and is scheduled for rel throughout the country on January 1.

It is the only authentic Death Valley motion picture ever produced, and aside from its intensely dramatic story value, will pos an irresistible popular appeal on account of the curious dread and horror with which Death Valley has always been regarded by the pu

Exhibitors fortunate enough to have "Danger Valley" on their list of forthcoming attractions should begin now paving the for unusual business on this great film.

PRESTIGE

AT a meeting of the Sales force of the Educational Film Corporation held in New York, December 19th, it was decided to effect a close co-ordination between the advertising and sales departments.

The Advertising Manager submitted, as a basic step to the end, the following plan:

Recognizing the trade paper as the inevitable foundation of any selling campaign, and selecting MOTION PICTURE NEWS not merely because of its comprehensive circulation but particularly on account of its PRESTIGE, a series of announcements have been prepared to appear in this publication.

These announcements will outline and constantly emphasize not only the quality of the product of the Educational Film Corporation but also its volume, stability and regularity of release.

Each salesman is to be instructed to approach the exhibitor by asking for his copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and making the advertising announcement therein the basis of each and every sales argument.

We appreciate this proper recognition and this logical use of an effective trade medium.

"Tense Dramatic Moments!"

—Exhibitor's Trade Review

EMOTIONAL SITUATIONS CONVINCING

"Presented by a clever aggregation of players, 'The Truth About Husbands' registers as an interesting film. The emotional situations are convincingly developed, offering tense dramatic moments. The subject matter is so skilfully handled that nothing offensive is screened.

"Anna Lehr's performance is remarkable for its sincerity and tenderness and May McAvoy gives a well balanced and appealing performance. The work of the company as a whole is of high-grade quality. Beautiful exteriors abound, including exquisite woodland and water views, the interiors are well filmed and good lighting prevails. Kenneth Webb has maintained unbroken continuity and the action moves smoothly throughout."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

A POWERFUL PICTURE

"'The Truth About Husbands' has a comparatively recent theme. A strong situation is reached. The power of it lies in a pure-minded wife's supreme confidence in her husband. A good structure leads up to intense moments, and it is beautified by exquisite settings. May McAvoy is a talented young artist and enacts her part with convincing fidelity. The big effect on a crowded house at the Strand Theatre was that of acting at the high point of this entertaining drama."—Moving Picture World.

MISS McAVOY CHARMING

"A bit different. Kenneth Webb has provided a thoroughly satisfactory production for the story and it runs off smoothly. Your patrons are sure to enjoy charming May McAvoy."—Wids.

VERY INTERESTING

"A satiric flaying of the double moral code. A careful and expensive production coupled with good acting. It will no doubt prove interesting. The cast is entirely competent even to the bits."—Motion Picture News.

VOL. XXIII JANUARY 1, 1921 No. II

Opportunity and Duty

HERBERT HOOVER has given the motion picture an opportunity. Herbert Hoover has bestowed on the screen a priceless privilege. Herbert Hoover has enabled the film industry to prove that it is, above all, the mouthpiece of the world's spirit and heart; and, incidentally, a grateful friend to Herbert Hoover.

Elsewhere, in the advertising pages, exhibitors are told of the plea of Herbert Hoover on behalf of Central Europe's starving children; of the steps that have been taken and should be taken to answer that appeal.

It remains only for MOTION PICTURE NEWS to lend its warmest and most personal urging to exhibitors to line up behind Herbert Hoover. We mean this; mean it with every vestige of soul that can be put into words. This is not the trite "has-to-be-done" note of approval.

It would be simple to play upon heart-strings with an appeal on behalf of three million starving children; famished bodies, deadened souls. But, though it seem like a descent to state the facts, the motion picture has practical, almost sordid, reasons for responding to these three million pleading voices.

First, the screen found a valuable friend during the last Administration in Herbert Hoover; and the screen will be fortunate to be able to enlist Herbert Hoover as an ally during the next four years.

Second, by its ability to show quick action and real power in the response to such an appeal, the motion picture will register its strength with a force that cranks and bigots will not ignore.

Third, Herbert Hoover has, with characteristic efficiency, united all creeds and races behind its plea, so that, for once, the motion picture is able to answer a worthy appeal without fear of offending any who support.

The road is clear; the goal is right. Let it not be said that the motion picture has, at one and the same time, turned a deaf ear to both an opportunity and a duty.

Good Pictures Never Worry

AN independent producer who wants to make "specials"—and who seems well equipped—comes to us in grief and anxiety over the first run situation.

"How am I to get my pictures into these producer controlled theatres?" he asked. "And if not, how can I succeed?"

Our reply was that if he made a picture better than the one that pushed it out of first run representation—then we'd rather be in his shoes than those of the fellow who owned the theatre. In fact we wouldn't accept such a financial risk—as the ownership of such a theatre under such a policy—for any inducement. If, we said, the one or more downtown houses of any city, were bottled up as to their attractions in such a way we believed we could go to the local bankers or any set of good business men and get money for the erection of a theatre to house the better pictures that were kept out; and that proper advertising of the facts to the public would put the new theatre on its feet and knock the props out from under the others.

We furthermore asked him why he laid all stress upon 2% of the picture theatres of the country as against the other 98%; admitting the very large importance of the key city first run, and its effect upon second run prices was it not vastly overrated by the recent and desperate competition for its control; and how about making pictures for the vast majority of houses which all but make up the total number of the country's theatres and which want good pictures just as badly as any other theatre anywhere?

* * *

Where We Can Teach

ONE of the most prominent New York producers of the legitimate was recently discussing with the writer the fact that many of the pronounced successes on Broadway "flopped" dismally when they opened.

We ventured the assertion that they were not properly advertised. The truth of this is self evident. The shows simply had to wait till the public discovered their attraction; the public was not told about them—in the proper way.

We are better advertisers—in the picture field; much better. Just the same, many a picture suffers from inadequate or improper advertising. In these instances, and we have seen them right along, the difference in the actual and possible gross must amount to many thousands of dollars.

It is difficult to overestimate the importance of advertising.

It seems to us at times that where a producer-distributor indicates strikingly his advertising skill and facilities he could well afford to quit producing and build his success upon his ability to put the other fellow's picture over.

As for the exhibitor, does any one know of a prominent one who isn't distinguished by his advertising ability?

Censorship Threatened by Mayor of Schenectady

Mayor George R. Lunn of Schenectady, N. Y., in discussing a complaint which some of the ministers of that city have lately made against such pictures as "Up in Mary's Attic," "Sex" and "Regeneration," was emphatic in declaring that unless some of the producers are more careful there will be what Mr. Lunn terms "a real censorship." Mayor Lunn is firm in his belief that many of the producers are making a mistake in not endeavoring to keep their product on a higher plane. A committee was lately named in Schenectady for the purpose of censoring pictures which are shown there on Sundays.

Mayflower to Do "Aphrodite" Early in 1921

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by General Manager John W. McKay of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation that "Aphrodite" will be one of the early super-features to be made by Mayflower in 1921. Preparatory work is now under way and negotiations for the leading members of the cast in progress, declares Mr. McKay. He also intimates that the director selected for this picture is one of the "cleverest men in the business." To save time, the producing company will be divided into three units, each one working by itself but under the supervision of a director-in-chief.

It is of interest to note in connection with the preceding announcement that the Nazimova production of "Aphrodite" has been postponed, the next vehicle scheduled for the Metro star being "Camille," according to a wire just received from the Coast. It is also known that a French film version of "Aphrodite" will shortly be released on the American market.

New Orleans Investigates Film Conditions There

The new city administration in New Orleans, La., is taking a whirl at the film exchanges.

"With tons of nitro-cellulose motion picture films, an explosive as powerful as nitro-glycerine, stored in a score or more of motion picture exchanges scattered in various sections of the city, New Orleans is in constant peril of probable loss of life through explosions or fires in the exchanges," Fire Commissioner Harry Fitzpatrick and City Architect Christie told the Board of Fire Commissioners last week.

The fire board appointed Mr. Fitzpatrick and another member, Stanley Ray, who is also a city commissioner, as a committee to confer with the city architects, film exchange managers and others to devise some way by which these motion picture films "can be handled at a minimum of danger to life and property."

"There are no ordinances to regulate these exchanges," Mr. Fitzpatrick told the fire board.

It is very probable that such an ordinance will be passed by the new city commission, and it has started on a remedial campaign to remedy some of the defects.

The discussion ended in the appointing of a committee which was ordered to report to the commission council.

McDermott Co-Director

The review of "Dinty," published recently in the Motion Picture News gave full credit for its direction to Marshall Neilan, whereas John McDermott directed the Irish incidents and Mr. Neilan the Chinatown scenes, according to word received by the News.

Would Instruct Aliens by Motion Pictures

FURTHER indications that the motion picture is becoming one of the most powerful agents for social, political and economic advancement were forthcoming this week as a result of the address of U. S. Commissioner of Immigration Frederick Wallis at a luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Thursday, December 16. In the course of his talk the Commissioner made an earnest plea that embryo-Americans be given a deeper and more sympathetic understanding of American ideals through the medium of the motion picture.

Acting on the Commissioner's statement that a big step in this direction would be made if pictures at present shown to the thousands of immigrants at Ellis Island were titled in Yiddish or Italian or other foreign languages, a committee of the A. M. P. A. has put the proposition before the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Committee on Americanism. It is expected that definite action will be taken immediately by these bodies, not only in the matter of titles, but also along other lines suggested by the Commissioner.

Obtain Injunction Against Use of Airplane Views

Following the public warning to news weeklies by Katherine MacDonald Corporation to the effect that the special airplane pictures shot in Los Angeles for Miss MacDonald's forthcoming Associated First National attraction, "Stranger Than Fiction," must not be used in any way by the news weeklies, an injunction was secured December 16 in the coast city against Pathe News, declares a statement from First National headquarters in New York. The latter is enjoined from using or showing in any way the exclusively made scenes, the shooting of which was arranged privately and carried out in the line of private business, announces the statement. Following this, a further injunction was obtained against International News, it is stated.

Four Companies Launched in New York State

Only four companies intending to engage in the motion picture industry were incorporated in New York State the past week. During the summer it was not uncommon for a score of new companies to be reported in the week.

The four reported are: The Trump Film Company, $10,000, Henry Huber, John J. McNevin and Herman Pollack, directors; The Direct Film Corporation, $25,000, Anton Novotny, Elmer J. Laforme, Flora Nathan, New York; J. W. Film Corporation, $30,000, Joseph and Lillie Weinstock, Jack Devick, New York; Pasha Pictures Corporation, $50,000, Rose Mintz, Harold M. Goldblatt, New York, Wythe T. Bolling, Scranton, Pa.

Picture Men Active as Reform Movements Crop Out

Blue Law Sunday and Censor Advocates to Meet Active Opposition

THAT motion picture interests in all sections of the country realize the importance of fighting the reform movement to their utmost is evident from the reports received on their activities. Both censorship and Sunday closing agitations are cropping out in various sections. Indiana is seeking a strict interpretation of the old Sunday Blue Laws. The censor advocates are coming to the fore in Georgia and the Sunday movie is the vital issue in Ohio.

The campaign of opposition to the strict interpretation of the blue laws in Indiana and the elimination of them as applied to Sunday photoplay exhibitions received impetus in Indianapolis last week when the Central Labor Union, urged by members of the motion picture machine operator's union, adopted resolutions denouncing the Sunday closing movement.

The Republican members of the state legislature, which convenes, January 3 for its biennial session, gathered in Indianapolis last week for preliminary organization purposes. The Republicans have an overwhelming majority in both Senate and House and it is through them that the Indiana motion picture theatre owners must fight to obtain legislation favorable to the industry. President G. G. Smidt of the organization was out of the city most of last week. His return to the city was expected to be followed by renewed activity among the exhibitors. The real battle is not expected to open until the legislature convenes and all the interested parties are on the ground.

The recent action of the Censorship Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in appointing a committee to confer with the producers on the subject of better titles for pictures is meeting with approval of officials throughout the country.

The committee intends to wait upon every big producer in the business and urge that more careful attention be given to the subject of titles. In many of the censorship fights it was discovered that opposition to the pictures in many instances was on account of the title and not on account of the picture itself.

J. R. Quirk, chairman of the committee of standards of the censorship committee received a letter from John M. Casey, chief of the licensing division of Boston, in which the action on the part of the producers in taking more care in the selection of titles is highly commended.

The censorship advocates of Georgia are now preparing for the next fight which is due to come off early in the spring.

Jean Paige and Albert E. Smith Are Married

Jean Paige, screen star, and Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, were married last Tuesday morning at the home of the bride's parents at Paris, Ill. The wedding was a simple one, and immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Smith left for a two weeks' trip, the itinerary of which was not announced.

Miss Paige was born in Paris, Ill., and upon her graduation from the High School there, came East to college, where she specialized in the study of elocution for about two years. Miss Paige accepted an offer from Vitagraph Company about three years ago to play in the O. Henry series then being produced at the Brooklyn studio of that company. She was advanced to stardom about a year ago and has won a large individual following.

Mr. Smith is one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry. He was one of the founders of the Vitagraph Company, which, established in 1898, now has two of the largest studios in America and several European branches.

The Womens Club is the chief of the "Pro-Censorship Committee," and as the plans now stand, there will be a revenue of twenty thousand dollars a year (approximately) from the censoring of films. Out of this amount, the three censors will be paid salaries of one hundred and twenty-five dollars a month, and the remainder will be used to buy books for the poor and illiterate throughout Georgia.

The exhibitors of Georgia feel that a ray of hope for them is that Governor-Elect Hardwick has come out strongly against censorship, and who was elected on a platform that was fully and completely endorsed by the motion picture industry. An idea of Governor-Elect Hardwick's stand on this subject is given in this letter to Willard C. Patterson. He states that he believes that all states and most cities now have adequate legislation to safeguard the public.

The reformers are active in Ohio. The other day, George Moore, owner and manager of the Lion and Royal theatres in Bellvue, Ohio, was in Cleveland, and passed around the following letter, facsimiles of which have been received by many other exhibitors:

"My Dear Mr. Moore:

"You are hereby notified that the Ministerial Association composed of the protestant pastors of the city of Bellvue, Ohio, by unanimous vote in regular session on Monday, December 13, 1920, authorized and instructed their secretary to duly notify you to close your picture shows in Bellvue, Ohio, on Sunday in accordance with the General Code of the State of Ohio, Section 13049.

"I might say that similar organizations to our own in the following towns have closed Sunday moving picture shows in their towns: Lancaster, Marion, Upper Sandusky, Dunkirk, Findlay, North Baltimore, Payne, Paulding, Wapakoneta, Bryan, Deshler, Van Wert, St. Marys, Sydney, Picqua, Troy, Bellefontaine, Xenia, Portsmouth, and others. Portsmouth and Findlay took the matter into court and were fined and ordered closed by the judge, and informed by him that should they again open, they would be given the full penalty of the law which is one hundred dollars and costs and six months in jail. They have not attempted to open again.

"The Secretary of the Bellvue Ministerial Association was also instructed to say that this notice is final and that immediate action by law would of necessity follow should this request to respect the law be denied.

"Trusting that you will grant the request and notice of your sincere friends to close your Sunday shows and abide by the law of our state without further word or action, we remain as ever,

"Most Cordially Yours,

(Signed) "A. G. Adriance,"

"Secretary, The Bellvue Ministerial Association."

The Ohio Screen League, a state organization formed for the protection of the exhibitors in this state, is actively engaged in offering opposition to this activity on the part of the Ministerial Associations throughout the state, to close the motion picture theatres on Sunday.

From the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The District of Columbia Department of the American Legion have adopted resolutions opposing the Sunday Blue Laws in Washington and have appointed a committee to fight such regulations if a hearing is held before Congress.

The resolution was adopted at the annual meeting of the Department and was approved of by representatives from every American Legion Post in that city.

The entire blue law fight centers on the Temple Bill now before the District of Columbia Committee in Washington which prohibits among other things the showing of motion pictures on Sunday.

FULL PROGRAM OF MUSIC-PICTURE CONFERENCE, January 24-5-6, is published in this issue. See Pages 372

To afford the Motion Picture the utmost in presentation, to give to the screen a spirit in harmony with today in America rather than to be bound by the traditions of opera, symphony and ballet—in fact to Americanize motion picture presentation—were among the high lights in the objectives set forth by S. Barrett McCormick, recently appointed director of presentation for the New Ambassador Theatre which will shortly be opened as an integral part of the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles. The occasion was a send-off dinner to Mr. McCormick at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Saturday, December 11th.

The honor of selection for appointment to the Ambassador is regarded in the industry as well merited distinction and as a signal recognition of Mr. McCormick's effective work in connection with the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, and at the Tivoli, Toledo. In addition to the Ambassador Mr. McCormick will have the management of the big New Kinema now in course of erection in Los Angeles. Both theatres form part of the circuit controlled by Sol Lesser of First National Associated First National.

While qualifying his remarks with the proviso that it would not be possible to make any strictly definite statement of plans at the Ambassador until after his arrival in Los Angeles and a study of possibilities and conditions, Mr. McCormick gave an indication of what was sought to be effected. "The purpose will be to give to Motion Pictures," said the speaker, "the utmost in presentation through all the media that lend themselves and possibly to develop new methods."

Pennsylvania Censors to Pass on "Trailers"

Censorship in Pennsylvania has been extended to "trailer" films, used in advertising coming attractions.

The State Board of Censors announced today that hereafter no trailers can be shown on the screen if they include scenes from film plays that have not yet been passed upon by the censors.

The ruling reads as follows:

"The use of trailers or advertising films not exceeding 150 feet in length will be permitted in advertising only future film attractions, providing that said trailers or advertising films will not be shown prior to the date of approval of the films, reels or views in question, and that the said trailers or advertising films do not contain any scenes or subtitles that have been eliminated by the Board.

"Each company using trailers or advertising films must file a letter in the office of the Board, 1025 Cherry Street, Philadelphia, indicating their willingness to comply with the above regulations."

Seeks Export Delegate at Foreign Trade Meeting

E. W. Kaufman, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Accessories Corp., of Hollywood, Cal., has protested to John S. Drum, president of the American Bankers' Association, against the omission of a delegate to represent the export end of the film industry at the Foreign Trade Convention.

In reply to a request for suggestions, Mr. Kaufman suggested the following: Allotment of part of the money available under the Edge Law for film industry; cooperation of international bankers with industry to give over extended periods, justified credits; issuance of irrevocable letters of credit; exchange of raw materials at accepted cost to finance corporation for films; appointment of a man in charge of film industry export finance department; proposal to department of commerce for appointment of commercial trade attache and to cover foreign field in official capacity in interest of motion picture industry and finance corporation.

England's Biggest House Opened to Public

The Dalston Picture House, which is the largest in Britain, has been opened to the public. It has a seating capacity of 2,500, is decorated in black, gold and white, and luxuriously equipped.

The Mayor of Hackney officiated at the opening ceremony, and Lord Beaverbrook made a short speech, in which he pointed out that the Dalston Picture House was the twenty-first to be opened by the Biocolor Theatres.

Every new device which can make for cinema house comfort has been installed, an orchestra of twenty-five musicians, a restaurant, soda fountains, and the very newest thing in ventilation and heating apparatus.

Censor Board Rulings Are Held Not to Be Law

ACCORDING to an opinion rendered on December 16th by Attorney General Alexander Armstrong of Maryland, the rulings of the board of motion-picture censors of Maryland are held to have no force in law of themselves. The opinion was handed down in connection with the case of Frederick Clement Weber, of the Gertrude McCoy theatre, who was charged by the censor board with having displayed immoral advertising posters.

Some hold that the attorney-general's opinion is applicable to all rulings of the censor board as well as to that affecting the display of alleged immoral posters. This is contested, however, by Marie W. Presstman of the censor board, who declares that while Section 15 of the movie law, prohibiting immoral posters, gives the board no authority for making rules for the enforcement of this particular provision, yet other powers of the board include enforcement provisions.

Mr. Armstrong's statement further asserted that in case of alleged displays of immoral posters, the magistrate or the court trying the case must determine whether or not the poster is immoral or improper and impose penalty accordingly. The rule itself or the violation of the rule is not held to be sufficient on which to base a legal complaint.

In the case in question, Magistrate Chapman in the Northwestern Police Court dismissed the charge against Mr. Weber, because the magistrate declared he saw nothing immoral in the poster complained of.

North Carolina Exhibitors Hold Winter Session

The mid-winter convention of the North Carolina State Exhibitors' League, held fifteen days earlier than their original schedule called for, in order that the assembled exhibitors might attend the Motion Picture Exposition in Atlanta, was an important one, despite the speed with which the business before the League was disposed of.

H. G. Varner, who has just returned from New York and who is one of the most prominent exhibitiors of North Carolina, read an extensive report in which Mr. Varner alleges that he found Famous Players-Lasky still actively interested in the purchase of theatres, despite their protests to the contrary.

Percy G. Wells, president of the League, was in the chair. A fund of five hundred dollars was raised, at a brief session after dinner, for the purpose of beginning a fight against censorship, for it is believed that the coming fight will be the hardest fought that North Carolina has yet seen.

In a resolution adopted, the North Carolina exhibitors extended greetings to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and congratulated that body upon its efforts to bring producers, distributors and exhibitors into better understanding; recommended that Congress be informed of the burdensome Federal taxes borne by exhibitors with a view to secure such modifications as will place exhibitors on a more equal basis with other industries in this respect; urged that the next General Assembly of North Carolina be prevailed upon to enact a deposit law similar to the one adopted in New York; and declared for clean moral programs, opposed the exhibition of any picture of immoral or questionable character, and invited all interested persons and organizations to cooperate with an exhibitors' committee with a view to secure the best possible results along this line.

Harry Urbach on Motion Picture Journal

Lawrence A. (Larry) Urbach, who for the past four years has been associated with the Motion Picture News and the Exhibitors' Trade Review, has been engaged by the Motion Picture Journal as its advertising manager.

"Larry" Urbach made his first entry into the motion-picture industry in 1916 as assistant studio manager for the Solax Film Corporation. He then went to the Motion Picture News to get his first training in the advertising branch of the industry, and when the Exhibitors' Trade Review was founded he joined hands with their advertising staff to further carry on his activities and services to the advertisers. After three and one-half years of faithful services to the "Review," Mr. Urbach left to enter the producing field. Things did not turn out as he expected, and the new year finds him back in the trade paper field.

Southern California Exhibitors in Enthusiastic Convention

Three-Day Session in Los Angeles of Active State Organization

ENTHUSIASM for united action on the part of all exhibitors of Southern California by association and cooperation was the key-note of the Exhibitors' Convention held in Los Angeles December 7th and 8th, under the auspices of the Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California, which is affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

It was the most emphatic meeting with theatre men ever held in Los Angeles and members who attended the recent Cleveland Convention likened the two meetings and held that what the Los Angeles meeting lacked in attendance, it made up in pep and enthusiasm.

Those who attended the convention, and they represent practically every theatre in Southern California and Arizona, not only became members of the Association by signing the by-laws and paying the dues, but they also contributed liberally toward a fund to defray expenses of the organization—the total subscriptions of which in cash amounted to more than $11,000. The quota of the Los Angeles organization to the National Association is $2,500, and the fund over and above this amount will be retained in the Southern California Association to meet needs of conditions.

In preparing for the convention a membership drive was inaugurated by the officers and members and by the time of the opening meeting applications for membership had been received from practically every theatre owner and manager in this section.

The first meeting of the convention was that held at 10:30 Tuesday, December 7th, when Hon. Meredith P. Snyder, Mayor of Los Angeles, gave the address of welcome. T. L. Tally, chosen chairman of the convention, Glen Harper, secretary of the convention, and other delegates responded.

The aims and purposes of the organization were outlined by W. L. W. Whitson, proprietor of the Plaza theatre at San Diego. Following this President H. J. Siler of the Southern California Association appointed various committees as follows: Grievance Committee: J. L. Lazarus, C. E. Walker, G. A. Bush, J. Sams, W. A. Williams, D. H. Schuman, Wm. Fahey; Finance Committee: D. B. Van Derlip, G. L. Van Depergh, F. A. Grant, J. M. Young, G. S. Bell; Membership Committee: Pearl Merrill, J. S. Lustig, R. A. Pagenkopf, D. S. McCarty, W. Wyatt; Resolution Committee, W. L. W. Whitson, L. L. Bard, Frank Schaffer, B. H. Lustig, S. W. Anderson; Legislative Committee: Geo. W. Bush, H. B. Breckvedel, F. A. Miller, J. A. Cook, Geo. Cody; Entertainment Committee: J. Sams, C. E. Walker, J. L. Lazarus, J. M. Young, H. J. Siler, L. F. O'Donnell, Pearl Merrill, D. B. Van Derlip, J. L. Lustig, Glen Harper.

A most pleasing feature of the convention was that introduced at noon of the first day when all members and guests were ushered to a banquet room adjoining the halls used for the convention, where luncheon was served by the Los Angeles theatre owners. The same kind of hospitality was repeated on the second day of the convention. First Vice President C. C. Griffin, Oakland, Calif., of the national organization was the first speaker at the afternoon session on Tuesday, when he addressed the meeting on the national organization. Following, Glen Harper, secretary of the Southern California Association and a member of the Executive Committee of the national organization, gave an interesting report of the progress of the National Association.

At the Wednesday session, the last closed one of the convention, reports were made by the various committees and the reports in all instances were adopted as read.

The resolutions prepared under the chairmanship of W. L. W. Whitson of San Diego provided an endorsement for the work of the Cleveland Convention and of President Sidney S. Cohen and the Executive Committee. They opposed advance payment of deposits for a period longer than seven days, urged a uniform deposit system in adherence to the seven-day clause, and went on record as being wholly against the advance payment being made in full. Deposits should be kept in the State, according to another resolution, and the meeting urged the passing of an act similar to that known as the New York State Anti-Deposit Bill. Protest was made against censorship; exchanges renting feature films to be shown in public or semi-public places; against the music tax; and playing films on a percentage basis. The practice of stealing stars was the subject of one resolution, and the exhibitors adopted this with the promise that they would not play films in which such stars appeared.

One of the most important resolutions was that asking for a standard Association contract form in which the salient features of the contract were expressed in bold face type. Such features as length of contract, cancellation clause, New York office cancellation option, and the Star Series contract features to be emphasized.

The movement for "A Little Church Around the Corner" for motion picture people in Hollywood was endorsed and the producers were urged to be more careful in the preparation of titles and subtitles to insure the elimination of spelling and grammatical errors.

The Association adopted the slogan, "An Injury to One Is the Concern of All."

The closing session of the convention was an open one and attended by representatives of the producing colony, exchange managers and others. A number of players were invited to be present and Harry Carey, William Duncan, Carter de-Haven and others responded.

In addition talks were made by Sid Grauman, Sol Lesser, F. J. Bush, business manager Operators' Union; Fred Miller, managing director California theatre; Morris Wolf, retiring Exchange Board of Trade; Joe Goldberg, president Film Exchange Board of Trade; Walter Rand, manager United Artists Exchange, D. L. Markowitz, president San Francisco Exhibitors Association, and others.

Jesse L. Lasky also took advantage of the opportunity to meet the exhibitors and spoke of activities in the producing field.

The final meeting of the convention was a dinner dance given at Ship Cafe, Venice, Calif., on Wednesday evening. This was attended by many celebrities of the producing colony in addition to practically all of the members of the California Association, and their guests, and the evening proved a most pleasant one in every respect.

The register of the convention contains

"Passion" Breaks Records at Capitol, New York

"PASSION'S" phenomenal record at the Capitol theatre in New York for the first week of its run there was illustrated by an announcement from the theatre, made on Saturday. Receipts up to Friday night, the first six days of the run, have equaled the amount drawn into the box office by the best previous attraction on the entire seven days. While actual figures were not given the announcement indicated that this special First National Pictures, Inc., attraction would exceed in receipts the previous record of the theatre by more than 20 per cent in actual money taken in at the box office.

In point of attendance the production had established a world's record for seven days, it is stated, when the last performance of the first week was started on Saturday night. More than 10,000 people had paid admissions to see the attraction during the first seven days of its run, according to a report submitted, and the estimate of the auditor of the theatre was that the final tabulation would show that between 106,000 and 110,000 had actually purchased tickets at the box office during the week.

Studio Engineers to Safeguard Legislation

The interests of the producers against unfair legislation by the California Industrial Accident Commission will be protected by the Electrical Illuminating Engineers' Society, according to action taken at its last meeting.

Penn State Wartime Ruling Rescinded

The war-time suspension of the rule that required operators of motion picture machines to be at least 18 years of age is no longer in force in Pennsylvania, according to a ruling published today by the inspection bureau of the State Department of Labor and Industry.

During the war, when military service drew so heavily on the man power of the nation, the 18-year-old rule for operators was temporarily set aside and boys as young as 16 years were permitted in charge of projectors, after obtaining the necessary state licenses. This is not to be permitted, as explained by John M. Walker, chief of the bureau of inspection of the Labor Department, who issued the following statement on the subject:

"There seems to be some misunderstanding regarding the emergency ruling of the State Industrial Board, permitting the employment of operators on motion picture machines under the age of 18 years. You are, therefore, advised that this ruling was rescinded last spring and no person under the age of 18 is permitted to operate a projection machine. Moreover, all such operators must be licensed from this office.

"In some cases helpers are employed to take care of rewinding, etc., and such helpers must be over the age of 16 and, between the ages of 16 and 18, must be furnished with an apprentice license, and if 18, or over, must have the regular operator's license.

"I wish to impress further upon you that no person under the age of 16 is permitted in a booth or projection room and all persons over that age who are permitted in a projection room must be provided with either an apprentice or operator's license. In other words, no person is permitted in a projection room unless he holds a license issued by this department.

"I trust this point is now clear and will be strictly enforced."

"Ireland in Revolt" for State-Rights Market

A wire just received from Chicago informs that Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Corporation, has completed arrangements with the Chicago Tribune to put the Tribune picture, "Ireland in Revolt," on the state-rights market. This picture shows conditions in Ireland as they actually exist at the present time.

The Chicago Tribune sent Captain Edward F. Weigle, the famous war photographer, to the Emerald Isle to secure pictures of prevailing conditions, and he has just returned after a three months' tour, bringing with him some remarkable views of the riots, reprisals and other incidents of terror which are today part of the life in certain portions of Ireland. Weigle is the man who in 1916 brought to this country for the Tribune pictures showing the German side of the war. This proved a big box-office success.

The first showing of "Ireland in Revolt" was held in Chicago last week at the Randolph theatre and proved a good box-office attraction.

A Study in Figures

A NEW YORK exhibitor, who asks that his name and the location of his theatre be withheld, comments as follows on William A. Johnston's editorial, "The Sales Manager's Opportunity," appearing in the November 6th issue of the NEWS:

"WE read with interest your article on page 3519 of your issue of November 6, 1920. If the returns made by the producers to the Collector of Internal Revenue are honestly computed upon the receipts from film rentals, then the small theatre is most assuredly being exploited.

"Our theatre has five hundred seats, shows pictures only, and is located in a city of 12,500 population having few industries and relying largely on a summer business of six weeks to support the inhabitants during the other ten and a half months. There are two other larger theatres, one a combination house and the other showing pictures only. In order to attract attendance it is necessary to offer the best productions and the most popular stars, because the majority of our patrons attend pictures daily and they are thoroughly conversant with production and star and readily know when the best is not being given.

"We believe that we are now paying top prices for our pictures and that we will have to receive substantial reductions before we can make a reasonable profit from our business. Meantime many worthy and commendable productions are being withheld from showing here because larger and impossible prices are not paid. The producers who are supplying us are constantly complaining that we are not paying enough, and most of them attempt to raise our prices on every new contract.

"For your information to assist you in the analysis of the situation which you are attempting to make, we submit our receipts and the cost of film rentals, exclusive of tax, for the months of September and October, 1920, which were better than average.

"September: Receipts, $3,186.93; cost of features, $990; cost of short subs, $262.50; total cost, $1,252.50.

"October: Receipts, $3,250; cost of features, $1,092.50; cost of short subs, $279; total cost, $1,371.50.

"You will note that our film rentals are between 35 and 40 per cent of our receipts. Our prices are 13 cents for the afternoons and 20 cents for the evenings, and we believe that an increase would reduce attendance as these prices are an increase of three and five cents respectively over last year. We also believe that motion picture admissions must remain at popular prices if the photoplay is to continue to remain the foremost amusement of the American public."

Aaron Jones Tells of Conditions Abroad

Chicago Man Considers England and France Picture Men Far Behind America

"THERE is not a first-class picture house in London or Paris," declared Aaron J. Jones of Jones, Smick & Shafer, when interviewed regarding motion picture conditions on the continent. Mr. Jones had just returned to Chicago from Europe where he went on pleasure bent but stopped long enough to observe the motion picture industry and its development in Europe.

"In London a restriction has been placed on the building of theatres until the present housing condition has been rectified and settled. They are in much worse conditions for housing facilities in England than we are over here. However, English theatres and music halls were never conspicuous for their exterior beauty. In fact, you could pass by them without knowing they existed because they use no electric light display on the front of theatres or in the lobbys, and positively no billboard or newspaper advertising. In England the admission charged for motion pictures range from two to six shillings, which equals forty cents to a dollar twenty cents in American money. Their pictures are six months to two years old, a condition which is caused by the booking agencies who have an established policy of booking pictures at least a year in advance.

"Of course the night life of London is a thing of the past. All restaurants close at ten o'clock and no liquor is served in the hotels after that hour. Because of the building conditions, Sir Oswald Stoll secured Hammerstein's theatre and is playing a picture policy, changing his pictures twice a week, much like we do at our Orpheum. A full week policy is unknown. Col. Levy of Birmingham, is the first American to invade the London field or motion picture exhibition and is said to have secured the Palace. The Allen Brothers, Canadians, have bid for the Empire. The Famous Players have secured the site upon which the old Tivoli stood and will build when the restrictions are removed.

"I ran up to Glasgow just to see how the Scotch took the pictures. Glasgow has fifteen picture houses, charging an admission fee of from two to four shillings, which equals from forty cents to eighty cents in our money.

"The condition in France is about the same. Picture houses charge a smaller fee, four francs, equalling about twenty-five cents. It is a universal system in France also to charge for programs and to expect tips.

"Both in England and France 98 per cent. of the motion pictures shown are made in America. Their greatest favorites are Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, although Chaplin is much in demand. We are twenty years ahead of Europe in the making and exhibiting of motion pictures."

Ford Not Planning Blue-Law Sunday Alliance

In refutation of a story recently appearing in a theatrical publication, announcement is made by Henry Ford's motion-picture representatives that the prominent manufacturer has absolutely no intention of attempting a so-called "splurge" in the exhibition of motion-pictures and positively no intention of allying himself with anv Blue Law Sunday campaign.

"Plans are already under way," reads a telegram from Mr. Ford's representatives, "calling for a most aggressive support of the motion-picture theatres of the United States in opposing any blue Sunday legislation or the rabid, paid job of censoring motion pictures in general.

"Relative to any announcement as to future activities of the Ford motion-picture laboratories, the laboratories have been enlarged and equipped in every manner known to the motion-picture industry. Activities will be conducted in keeping with future demands for the continuation of the progress and the enlargement of the present work at hand."

One of the best pictures of the year. Went big all week. (Middle West.)

Conrad in Quest of His Youth—
Average picture with about usual business. (West.)

The Testing Block—
Certainly a fine picture and a sure-fire box office attraction. Picture seemed to please and went fine all week. (West.)

Heliotrope—
Did well and held over second week. Like most second-weekers here unless they are far above the average or highly advertised it petered out. (East.)

An excellent picture in every respect and business grew all week. (Middle West.)

Idols of Clay—
Big business second week. Thrilling. Gorgeous sets and sensational title are big attractions. (Middle West.)

A good picture filled with sex appeal that did a good business. (East.)

Opened up extra big and continued so during week run. (Middle West.)

This picture brought very good business and people seemed attracted to it because of title. (West.)

An Old Fashioned Boy—
An amusing farce, but not quite up to some of Ray's recent efforts. A good box office attraction, however. (Middle West.)

METRO

Billions—
Picture proved a frost here. It is "not much" and my audiences were below normal. Many thought it the poorest film Nazimova has ever played in. (East.)

The Saphead—
Broke no records but it drew fairly good crowds throughout the week. As a picture it was "fair." (East.)

Polly With a Past—
Only fair. The picture is entertaining but lacks pep. (East.)

Madame Peacock—
Poor picture, business fair. Believe Nazimova is falling back in her stories. If she keeps this up she's liable to lose her popularity. (East.)

Clothes—
A light feature, more of a woman's picture than anything else. Business fair. (East.)

The Misfit Wife—
Mediocre picture. Business not up to standard. (East.)

A Chorus Girl's Romance—
Good feature which brought more than usual business. (West.)

Best of Luck—
Fair picture. Did not seem to draw well. Business about average. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dinty—
Big business all week. The public wants plays of this kind. (Middle West.)

Picture proved very average drawing card. Work of Wesley Barry considered very good but story as a whole failed to please. Almost too melodramatic. (Middle West.)

Old Dad—
Only fair picture. It received only fair patronage. Mildred Harris is not a drawing card out here. (Middle West.)

Dangerous Business—
Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business. (West.)

Married Life—
Despite its length, this comedy keeps up the interest throughout, and was a good laugh-producer. (Middle West.)

In the Heart of a Fool—
A rather complicated theme which kept up the suspense until the end. However, a bit too melodramatic in spots. (Middle West.)

The Love Flower—
Excellently produced Griffith picture that attracted very good business, part of which, however, must be attributed to the Buster Keaton comedy on the bill. (East.)

Unseen Forces—
Not the best title in the world and of minor value from a box office standpoint. Picture pleased. (Middle West.)

Truth About Husbands—
Opened to good business. Audience seemed delighted with it. (East.)

FOX

The Thief—
Thoroughly pleased audiences with result that picture got good box office play. Pearl White feature our audiences liked. (Middle West.)

The Tiger's Cub—
Very entertaining picture and went well with my patrons. (West.)

If I Were King—
Only brought average business. Fair attraction. (West.)

The Branding Iron—
Brought a normal business, something unusual for pre-Christmas days. (Middle West.)

The Girl with the Jazz Heart—
Fine production. Box office receipts heavier than usual. (West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

A Thousand to One—
A good picture. Virile. Interesting. Steady business all week in spite of proximity to Christmas. (Middle West.)

Homespun Folks—
Probably the best picture of the week in this city. Was well liked and a good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Devil's Pass Key—
A very good melodrama which played to very good business. (East.)

Once to Every Woman—
A poor attraction, very little to redeem it. Business far below normal. (West.)

REALART

Her First Elopement—
Drew well for first two days but did not hold up for the rest of the week. Fair. (East.)

Husband's Friend—
A decidedly poor box office attraction. Has no entertaining value. (West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Big Happiness—
Dustin Farnum, who has not been seen on the screen in a long while in Buffalo, returns with an entertaining vehicle in which he does some good character work in a dual role. Held up well, despite holiday season slump. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

The Broadway Bubble—
Opened big and kept up big all week. A picture that pleased everybody because it is logical (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

The Wonderful Chance—
The best story O'Brien has had for some time. Business fair. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Love Flower—
A sure fine production. Went over big all week. Patrons seemed well pleased, which was echoed by the box office. (West.)

STATES RIGHTS

Honeymoon Ranch—
Played to standing room. Strong posters pulled in crowds. Allene Ray pleasing as star. Picture very well received. Best Western shown here for long time. Patrons asked for others like it. Full of action and suspense and the kind that draws crowds back to see more of the same kind. (West.)

More "What's Your Hurry?" Exploitation

Incident to the showing of Wallace Reid in "What's Your Hurry," Manager Dwight L. Hill of the Pickwick theatre in San Diego, Cal., used several good stunts which "went over" in good shape. On October 27th he had tags put out over the city, these being attached to all the automobiles found on the streets, bearing on one side suggestions as coming from the Police Department, while on the other side was the announcement of the presentation of "What's Your Hurry?" at the Pickwick.

The signature of Mayor Louis J. Wilde was secured to a proclamation designating Wednesday, October 27, as "Safety First Day," with the suggestion that the slogan be, "What's Your Hurry—Safety First!" This was given publicity through the daily papers.

A third stunt was arranged by Manager Hill, who secured the co-operation of the circulation men of the local papers who have charge of the street "newsies," to the end that between 5 and 6 o'clock on Wednesday evening every newsboy on the street was calling out, "What's Your Hurry?"

Shanberg Puts Over "Peaceful Valley"

For the showing of "Peaceful Valley" at the Midland theatre, Hutchinson, Kansas, of which M. B. Shanberg is manager, some unusually effective exploitation was employed.

Out in front was an old board sign which directs the way to "Peaceful Valley." The lobby was decorated with corn, pumpkins and other rural articles, even to the old mail box, and the entire setting showed a lane leading to "Peaceful Valley."

Plunket Stages Fine Prologue for "Isobel"

THE only presentation feature of note this week, except that at the Capitol in connection with "Passion," described in last week's issue, is a prologue number for "Isobel," staged by Manager Jos. Plunkett of the Strand.

With the house lights dimmed, the stage disclosed a Northland scene, with the aurora borealis shedding a gentle light over all. In the foreground were the members of the Strand Male Quartette, dressed in the Northern costume of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police—heavy fur coats, caps and heavy boots. They were grouped on a dog sledge, which was made to order for the occasion. With the lights still dim, the four sang two selections, "Winter," by Bullard, and "Absent," by Metcalfe.

As they reached the last refrain of the second song, the lights gradually grew dimmer, until in almost total darkness, a heavy snowfall effect enveloped the entire stage. Through the snow, cabins in the valley behind the singers slowly lighted up.

The singers stand around dog sledges in front of the drop. On the encore number the set is lighted a bit from the sides with blue floods and snow falls gently, glistening in the light as it drops. In the distance lights twinkle as if some other Arctic dwellers' homes were situated a few miles away.

The stage was set as a farm yard. The old well, and the old time walking plow and an old farmer sitting on a tree stump, whittling a pine stick and smoking an old time pipe, gave the scene reality.

At the other side of the stage a country maiden was in deep conversation with Charles Ray, who was leaning over the side of the well. Clever lighting effects by stage manager Wornner aided in putting over the presentation.

Carroll Works Novelty Exploitation Stunt

It was a beaver board booth surrounding the box-office of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, and painted in life sized proportions was Harry Carey's head and shoulders, in a miner's costume, just as he appears in his picture, "West is West," just above Carey's picture the words EMPLOYMENT AGENCY stood out with clearness. Below the picture of Carey were posters saying "Miners Wanted, $75.00 Dollars a Month and Board," "HELP WANTED" and "Wanted Miners."

But over two hunderd passersby failed to notice the connection between the advertisement and the theatre, and thought it was real, bona fide employment agency. Tom Carroll, manager of the Standard theatre, said he was swamped with applicants. They came into his office, and said they wanted a job as miner. They wanted to apply for the positions advertised out front. It took some explaining on Carroll's part, to make these fellows understand that this was motion picture exploitation, and that the jobs didn't really exist. After Carroll had laboriously explained the state of affairs to one big burly "cullud" gentleman, the applicant turned on Carroll and said disgustingly, "That's a H——— of a way to fool a poor nigger."

But that's the penalty for using realism in exploitation. Just a little beaver board, some paint and a couple of signs judiciously placed, created an atmosphere entirely foreign to the natural location of the theatre, and although the Standard theatre is placed right in the heart of the business section, he transplanted the passerby into another land and caught the attention immediately.

Horn Uses Big Town Method

Jewel Theatre, Fremont, O., Sets Fast Pace in Small Town Exploitation

S. G. HORN, manager of the Jewel theatre, Fremont, Ohio, is setting a fast pace for small town exhibitors of his state and giving his patrons regular city shows.

Mr. Horn is only lately a convert to the theory of exploitation. He did not believe in extensive newspaper campaigns, mailing lists, etc., for the small town theatre. Then came a time when he began to doubt that the old methods were the best methods and he was induced to spend some money to buy a real feature and to exploit it properly. The result was enough for Mr. Horn. He climbed on the exploitation bandwagon and is making better profits with big shows at top prices than he ever did with cheap shows at small prices.

At the time this was written Mr. Horn was planning his campaign for "The Round-up," the showing to be a premiere for his section of the state. Following is Mr. Horn's own account of how he put over the picture:

"We started our newspaper advertising one week before we opened with the picture. We began with small two-inch teaser ads in the daily papers. These teasers were snappy captions from spicy subtitles. Each day these teaser ads increased in size until the end of the week, when we came out with a big announcement of the show. We had special window cards made, and distributed a hundred of them. Heralds were also generously distributed. Then we inaugurated a rural mailing list. Hundreds of announcements went out in all directions, for miles around, and judging from the dusty vehicles that were lined up in front of the Jewel theatre the day of our opening, most every one of those rural announcements were answered in person.

And we are making more money than we ever did before. The answer is, keep up with the cities. We can't always keep ahead of the cities as we did with "The Round-Up," but at least we can keep up with 'em, and in these days of photoplay magazines, when the neighbor from Squedunk knows all about the newest pictures, it's the exhibitor who sells the newest and the biggest entertainments in the picture field, who wins the confidence of his patrons, and who cashes in on that confidence."

Wendt Gives Newspaper Men Special Show

When the Rivoli theatre of Toledo showed "The Law of the Yukon," Harold Wendt, advertising and exploitation man for the Rivoli, got the theatre's best friends—the newspaper men—out boosting for the picture in advance. Robert W. Service is, as most everyone knows, the newspaper man's poet and the story of the picture was of the experiences of an American newspaper man who went to Alaska to start a daily.

Wendt had some invitations printed which stated that Morgan Kleath (the newspaper man in the story) invited the Toledo press to see the pictures of his adventures in Alaska. The result was that the special party was well attended and the papers the following week carried great accounts of this film, scoring another victory for Wendt in the way of packing the theatre all week.

Palace Theatre, Schenectady, Effects Tie-up for "Suds"

The Palace theatre, at Schenectady, N. Y., took advantage of the exploitation possibilities of Mary Pickford's "Suds" and staged an attractive tie-up with the Adirondack Light and Power Corporation of that city for the week preceding the picture. Two young women, one a blonde and quite closely resembling the original Mary, and a brunette were used in putting the stunt over. The imitation "Mary" labored at a washing machine and wringer while her companion held up cards from time to time, telling the crowd outside the window that "Suds" would be the attraction at the Palace during the week of December 12. The two girls wore blue denim overalls. There was hardly an hour during the day that the sidewalk outside was not jammed to the gutters.

Titus Has Censorship Board of His Own

Florida Exhibitor Allows His Daughters to Pick the Shows

CENSORSHIP may have its uses, and Judge Henry M. Titus, owner of three prosperous theatres in Florida, declares that a considerable part of his success as an exhibitor is due to his policy of referring all productions under consideration for booking in any of his houses to a double board of censors. Although the two boards are made up entirely of members of his personal family, he declares that business has shown continuous improvement ever since he adopted the censorship method; in fact, his success has been so marked that he has already purchased a site and an architect is now preparing the plans for a new theatre larger than any of the three he now owns.

One of the Titus boards of censors has but one permanent member; that is Mrs. Titus. The second and final board is composed of two daughters of the exhibitor, one fourteen and the other twelve.

"Children are the greatest motion picture judges to be found," declares Judge Titus. "If they can't understand the action it is a safe bet that many adults won't be able to understand it. If they find it entertaining, then it is clear that any adult will find it equally so, for there is nothing highbrow about children. They are utterly guileless and do not express appreciation simply because it is the work of some director with a big name, or some actor or actress with a great reputation. Children are frank, and if they say they don't like a picture the chances are that no theatre audience will."

Judge Titus and Mrs. Titus first established censorship when their daughters insisted on going to matinees as a regular daily occurrence. Sometimes there were pictures in the theatres which were not regarded as especially suitable for growing girls' consumption, and Judge Titus decided that very likely he was no more particular than a lot of other fathers and mothers in this respect, and that perhaps the showing of such pictures was keeping patrons away. That was when the mothers' board of censorship came into being.

The two daughters began attending the theatres regularly, and it was seldom but what they saw every picture that was shown at the three theatres. They expressed their likes and dislikes very frankly, and Judge Titus noticed that they seldom differed in opinions and that usually the pictures they liked were the ones that drew the big audiences where the ones they didn't like were the ones that didn't draw.

"Then I started getting their opinions on pictures before deciding on the length of time I would run them in the three theatres," continued Judge Titus, "and since that time regular patronage has shown a continuous increase. Two of the three theatres I own—the Lyric at Daytona Beach and the Crystal at Daytona—run the year around, while the New Daytona at Daytona Beach is open only for the six months beginning in November, when the big winter season opens.

"I think it would be a mighty good plan for exhibitors to make a special play for children at a special performance as soon as they can receive a print of their bookings. If the kiddies enjoy it it will go over big. If they turn their thumbs down turn off the foyer lights to aid in cutting down expenses."

Smith Gets Results with Atmospheric Prologue

F. L. Smith, manager of the Rialto theatre, Newark, N. J., believes that atmospheric presentation is a big part of the battle in popularizing a picture. Whenever a picture offers the slightest opportunity for prologue adaptation Smith takes full advantage of it.

He recently won considerable praise from his patrons because of a Japanese prologue that he put on with his last week's run of "The Breath of the Gods."

The prologue was built up around the popular ballad, "The Japanese Sandman," which was sung by a coloratura soprano in Japanese costume. The presentation proved a valuable asset to the picture, which is one of the most realistic reproductions of Japanese scenes, life and customs ever screened.

Mission Theatre Exploitation

New Los Angeles House Gives "The Mark of Zorro" Novel Exploitation

A DISTINCT type of excellent exploitation was carried out by Managing Director Robert E. Wells, for the opening of the New Mission theatre of Los Angeles, Cal., for which occasion "The Mark of Zorro" was chosen as the feature picture.

The whole theatre fairly breathed the atmosphere of the "Golden Age of California." Upon alighting from your car, there met you two footmen, in the "bandit" costume that "Doug" wears as Zorro in the picture, and ushering you to the door, you were greeted by Spanish flower girls with huge baskets of dewy violets, who distributed them to the ladies together with fans and mantillas. Great bouquets of flowers decorated the lobby and the interior of the theatre. The ushers were colorfully costumed in velvet trousers and crimson sashes of the Caballeros of the old Spanish days. The atmosphere of it all was harmoniously carried on in the lighted flower-wreathed Spanish balconies, built in the walls, and the twin fountains that splashed on each side of the stage, together with the magic of color splashes here and there, that accentuated the marvelous simplicity of design.

A few doors away from the theatre was the store of the Western Costume Company that designed and executed the costumes worn by the company in "The Mark of Zorro." There they had a display of the costume, on the floor of which, in attractive design, were the stills from the production.

One day was set aside by the management for the old Spanish families of Los Angeles.

School children were interested in the picture and the theatre through the conduction of an essay contest on the history of California during the days of the period when such incidents as shown in "The Mark of Zorro" took place.

The opening night was a gala one for even Los Angeles.

Small Town Man Strong for Mailing List Exploitation

Harry E. Davis, owner and manager of the Bijou Dream theatre, Milton, Pa., declares that a neat announcement of the week's attractions mailed direct to the home of possible patrons is the best exploitation device that a small town manager can employ.

Mr. Davis has been the owner and manager of the same theatre since 1906. Other theatres have started in competition, but Mr. Davis has always more than held his own and at the present time he is practically without opposition. He lays his strong position chiefly to the weekly announcement which he mails to an extensive list which includes nearly every householder in Milton.

The history of the Bijou Dream has been one of almost continuous renovation and remodeling. Practically nothing remains of the original theatre except the site and the name; and at the present time the Bijou Dream is one of the most up-to-date theatres in Pa. Each one of the improvements has been duly heralded to the patrons of the theatre through the weekly announcement which is sent out.

The result is that the Bijou Dream has become a Milton institution. The Milton public is vitally interested in it and most of them know the year when each new improvement was added, and all is laid to the house's weekly announcements.

"I have always mailed them," says Mr. Davis speaking of the announcements. "Theatres that go to the trouble of making up a weekly program and then distributing it at the theatre are wasting time. They are trying to make a repeat out of a person who has already seen announcements of coming attractions and are entirely neglecting the person who doesn't happen to be in the theatre at the time the programs are distributed. Mail them every week to as big a list as possible.

Two views of the lobby display for "The North Wind's Malice" designed by Geo. W. Turner, manager of the Everett theatre, Everett, Wash.

Turner Builds A Novel Lobby Display

"North Wind's Malice" Exploitation at Everett, Wash., Makes Big Box-Office Receipts

OUT in the state of Washington, in a city called Everett, the Star Amusement Company operates seven theatres in a way that deserves commendation. Exploitation and presentation are more than names to the Star people, and many a novel stunt is put over for the attractions that are booked for the various houses.

Recently George M. Turner, exploitation representative for the Star Company, put over a campaign for "The North Wind's Malice," playing at the Everett, the leading Star house, that is worthy of emulation by a big city theatre. The major part of the campaign was centered in a lobby display, a cut of which appears above.

The entire front was built to resemble an Alaskan snow scene. Starting with the marquee—large icicles were hung around the entire border, fir boughs being used to break the corners. The tops of the cases were hung with smaller icicles and draped with artificial snow. The box office was transformed into a miniature log cabin. On either side of the lobby were immense snow scenes covering the entire walls. The face of the lobby was made into a larger cabin the doors of which led to the foyer. A row of small fir trees were lined across the entire face of the building. Blue and green lights were used throughout. To lend atmosphere the door-girl was dressed in an Alaskan fur coat, cap and boots. According to the thermometer in the box-office window she needed them, for it registered 20 degrees below zero. Nothing unusual was attempted in the line of newspaper displays.

The presentation of the feature was in keeping with the exploitation campaign. Berthold Lindgren, organist, played a special musical prologue to the feature, his first number being "Shadows Will Fade Away," used as the love theme throughout the picture, followed by Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C sharp minor, used as the theme of malice. The latter number being played as the snow scenes at the first of the feature went on the screen.

Another of Mr. Turner's campaigns was for "It's a Great Life." This campaign was featured by tie-ups with local merchants.

Following are a few of the stunts put over:

Tie-ups with three restaurants for window display cards reading: "Sure 'It's A Great Life' at the Orpheum." He also arranged to put small cards on their menus, these bearing the legend: "Eat, Drink and be Merry. Sure 'It's A Great Life' at the Orpheum."

Tie-ups with two confectionery stores for window displays. The cards read: "'It's A Great Life,' but our candy will make yours sweeter."

A tie-up with one music store for a window display, the cards reading: "We'll say that 'It's A Great Life' and music makes it even greater—come in and hear the latest records." The other bore the same slogan with the theatre name and the dates.

Extra Fine Three Color Ad. Used in Nashville Paper

Southern exhibitors and moving picture advertisers recently were astounded by the success with which the management of the Elite theatre, of Nashville, Tenn., made use of their color displays in the local morning newspaper.

When "The Devil's Pass Key" was booked for the Elite it was decided to seek the unusual in announcing its coming to the local moving picture fans. Accordingly, a full page was taken in the Nashville Tennesseean for the Sunday issue preceding the showing.

A full-page layout was made up from punchful scenes of the picture, and after considerable dickering with the publishers, printed in four flashing colors. The page was the talk of Nashville. It since has aroused much favorable comment on the part of publishers and advertisers in all parts of the country, being classed as one of the most perfect newspaper color jobs ever seen.

Patrons Write Display Copy

Atlanta Showman Put Over Novel Stunt in Interest of "The Furnace"

SOMETHING a little out of the ordinary run of "contests" was tried out, with flattering success, in Atlanta recently, when Frank H. Hammond, publicity manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, and Ralph de Bruler, manager of the Lynch houses, carried out a well-planned advertising campaign on "The Furnace," which resulted in packed houses for the entire week's run at the Rialto theatre.

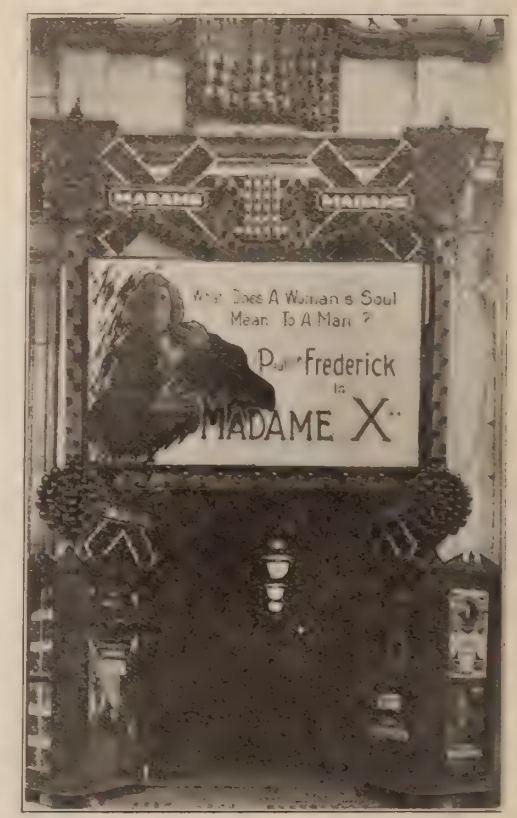
The picture was booked to play the Rialto the week of November 7th, so Mr. Hammond prepared his advertising. A display ad was written announcing that the Rialto management thought the production so good that the ad men did not think they were capable of writing advertising that was equal in merit to the picture and had therefore decided to allow the public to prepare the display copy suitable prizes in free tickets to be awarded to the winners.

This announcement was carried on Sunday, November 1st, advertising that the picture would play week of November 8th, and that the contest would close November 4th. The time was a little short—and then, on Monday, much to his chagrin, Mr. Hammond discovered that the booking-clerk had "slipped up" and that the picture was being held over, somewhere in the territory, for a second week, and that nothing on the face of the globe—as the booker expressed it—could bring that picture before the week of the 15th. So, with a heavy heart, Mr. Hammond approached the offices of the Atlanta Georgian, the newspaper that had agreed to run the contest, and prepared another special ad, explaining the situation, and giving another week on the contest. A brief and humorous "reader" was given, also, and, after all, the contest was somewhat strengthened by the unexpected delay, allowing more time to encourage the timid.

The ads poured in—most of them very bad, some few of them fairly good, and one that was really excellent. The winner of the first prize carried, at the top, in big letters, "Rialto"; beneath, "all this week," and then came the cut, flanked on one side by the catchline, "Marriage is like a furnace—it either destroys or it purifies. So watch your step on your way to the altar"; on the other side, "If you are contemplating matrimony—wait! Before you take the plunge, see this picture. It may open your eyes." Over the cut itself, which depicted the marriage of Folly and her millionaire, were the lines, "She said 'I will'—but she wouldn't. And she didn't." Then followed, in letters slightly smaller than the name of the theatre, the name of the picture, with the sub-caption, "The Story of a Millionaire Who Married an Actress." Followed a very brief synopsis, headed "A Careless Jest Started the Trouble." The last few inches of the ad gave more catch-lines—but as the Rialto had booked, at the last minute, the new Harold Lloyd comedy, "High and Dizzy," the prize-winner's consent was secured to dropping the catch-lines and substituting the ad of the comedy.

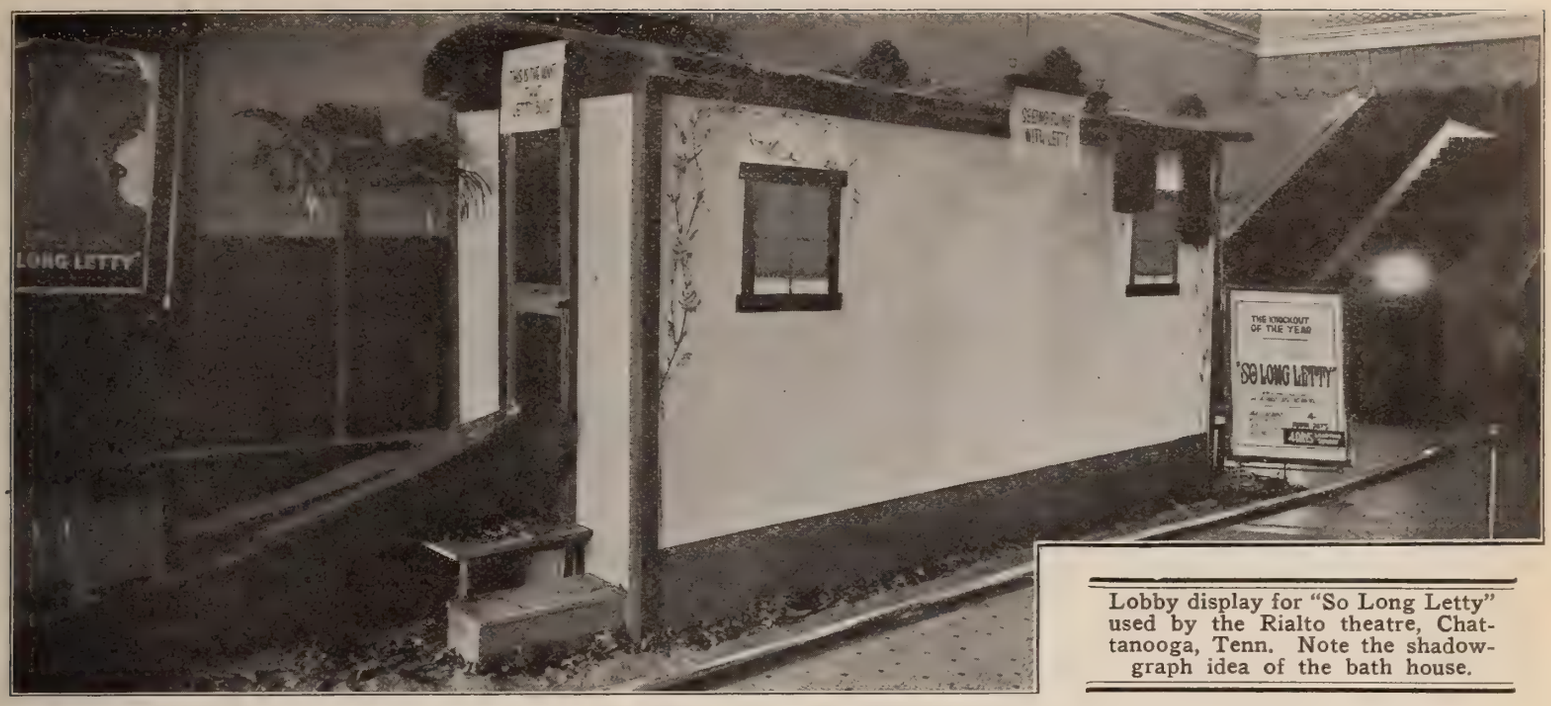
This prize-winning ad was used on Sunday preceding the opening of the picture.

Brooklyn Strand Features Scenic Subject



Surprise ideas had full play in connection with the showing of Kineto's nature scenic short subject, "The Hunting Ground of Hiawatha," when it was exhibited at the Brooklyn Strand theatre.

Manager Edward L. Hyman used for his presentation an elaborate prologue, invisible soloists, a widely known quartette and the Strand Symphony Orchestra. Almost every foot of development of the theme of the film, which virtually tells the story of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" was interpreted by music. In fact, Mr. Hyman put on a programme of music ostensibly for "The Hunting Ground of Hiawatha."



First, he introduced the scenic with a prologue which showed a fringe of trees on the bank of a stream. An Indian wigwag stood between the trees and under neath the high pine boughs Jackson C. Kinsey, baritone, attired in chieftain's war paint and feathers, sang Woodman's "The Wigwam," a colorful solo. This paved the way for the actual showing of the film, which revealed Indian life and the natural animal wonders of the forest.

As the film showed rushing and placid waters, Kathryn James, contralto, from back stage, sang "Cavaness," "By the Waters of Minnetonka." Then as a young Indian brave rode through a forest trail the Strand orchestra played the catchy "Na-jo," by Wiedoeft. The final scenes had action lent to them by the singing by the Mendelssohn Quartette of "Land of the Sky Blue Waters."

The scenic opened and ended with music and action.

Harry Crandall Adopts This Plan in Exploiting "Nomads of the North"

NELSON B. BELL, in charge of advertising and publicity for the Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C., and vicinity, put over a capacity week at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre in the capital with "Nomads of the North" as the feature by reversing the usual method of procedure.

The Metropolitan has frequently cashed in by virtue of clever teaser campaigns conducted prior to the opening of the run, with with "Nomads of the North" it was felt that an unusual twist was needed to match the many novel elements made part of the drama in Mr. Curwood's picturization of his story of "God's Country." With this thought in mind, Mr. Bell began the Monday before the Sunday opening of the "Nomads" engagement to run 50-line double column ads in all of the Washington papers. These took the form of personal, signed endorsements of the picture by Harry M. Crandall, owner of the theatre, who was made to appear for the first time in his career as an exhibitor of silent drama to take the feature of one of his bills out of the hands of his publicity department. These "talking ads" were continued for four consecutive days —or in other words through Thursday— each day's argument being the exposition of a new feature of superiority in "Nomads." The advertisements signed by Harry M. Crandall were not kept up a single day after the four legitimately distinctive aspects of the picture had been covered. As long as Mr. Crandall had anything important to say, he appeared to say it.

On Friday and Saturday, instead of continuing ads heavy with type, Mr. Bell resorted to what, had it been used first, would have been his teaser campaign— simply a line of bear tracks running diagonally across a 50-line double-column space, with the title of the picture in the upper left hand corner in small type and the name of the house in the lower right hand corner.

On Saturday a display ad 120-lines deep across three columns was run in the motion picture section of the Washington Times, a day before the opening of the picture. The same ad was run in the Washington Post on the Sunday of opening, in the Herald on Tuesday morning after opening and in the Star the Thursday afternoon of the week's run. The result of this reversal of the usual advance procedure and the spreading of the display over four days instead of shooting it all the Sunday of the opening, as is the usual Washington custom, was to open "Nomads" to the Metropolitan's absolute capacity and put it over for a week of standing room patronage.

Chicago Theatre's Presentation Elaborate

The music used in filming "Once to Every Woman," Ben Bolt, and The Flower Song from Faust, was the motif around which very charming presentation of this feature was built at the Stratford theatre, Chicago.

In the third reel of "Once to Every Woman" Miss Phillips makes her début as an opera star singing Marguerite in Faust. At this point the film was stopped while a soprano soloist sang the Jewel Song, after which the picture was resumed immediately, Miss Phillips taking the encore on the screen.

The impression conveyed to the audience was that Miss Phillips had stepped out of the screen to sing the aria, as the artist was costumed exactly as Miss Phillips was in the picture, and was seen stepping forward between heavy blue velvet curtains when the spot was thrown on her.

Near the end of the picture Ben Bolt was sung from the wings during the time Miss Phillips was supposed to be singing it in the picture.

The effect was very pleasing.

Here Is a New "Yellow Typhoon" Idea

How Manager Fisher Put Over Some Clever Teaser Exploitation

J. CLYDE FISHER, manager of the Temple theatre, St. Marys, Pa., recently introduced that city to a unique exploitation campaign, the chief feature of which led local people to believe that a cyclone was going to hit St. Marys.

The promotion was originated in the interests of "The Yellow Typhoon."

In the Monday edition of the Daily Press, the town's only daily paper, there appeared on the front page, among the local news, a short item headed:

"Storm Signals Are Out." The body of the item was as follows: "St. Marys is booked for a big storm, a Typhoon, on Thursday and Friday of this week. Typhoons are a little out of our line, but this is going to be a regular one, a Yellow one at that, so you'd better be on the lookout. We received word a little too late to go into the matter fully today, but will tell you much more about it tomorrow, for we want to read up a little on Typhoons in general, and Yellow ones in particular."

This was the leader, and was all that was said in the paper that day, care being taken to keep all knowledge of the picture from the public in order to keep the readers from considering the item as an advertisement. That night, on all sides, there was talk of the storm that was coming this way, and would hit about Thursday. He had the entire town believing that it was a bona-fide news item. Not a soul was told of the real facts and all took the supposed prophesy for what it seemed.

All Monday night and Tuesday up to the time the paper got on the streets, people were talking about the approaching storm. Then Tuesday's paper came out and carried a follow-up under the caption: "What Is a Typhoon, a Yellow One?" The article read as follows:

"Regarding the storm that will visit this city on Thursday and Friday The Typhoon, the Yellow one, we mentioned in yesterday's paper, we looked in several dictionaries and an encyclopedia, but couldn't find out exactly what a Typhoon, a Yellow one, is. We are inclined to believe, however, that we didn't look far enough, so will hand the problem over to our readers, especially those who still attend school and have access to Webster, Worcester or the New American. We want every one of our readers to answer the question, but will not give any details until tomorrow. Look up the word Typhoon, the Yellow variety, find out its meaning, derivation, antonyms and synonyms, and anything else that may lead to a better understanding of the word. Ask your mother-in-law, the policeman—oh, the dickens, ask anybody and everybody about a Yellow Typhoon and then jot down what you have learned. For the best definition we will give the very best thing a person in St. Marys can get, namely a—no, not today! Tomorrow we will tell you what the prize will be for the best definition of a Yellow Typhoon. Remember, it will be a thing that is prized highly by everybody in town, see if it isn't. Get busy now—look up Yellow Typhoon."

Then the juveniles started talking, for they were beginning to scent a "movie." They became interested, and many an adult was asked about typhoons. They asked their teachers and they spoke about typhoons at home and at play. The holding back of the intelligence concerning the premium was another stunt that kept them guessing, and talking all the more about The Yellow Typhoon, a thing which surely every advertising man values highly.

On Wednesday came the big exposé, as will be seen by this clipping from Wednesday's Press:

HAVE YOU LOOKED UP "THE YELLOW TYPHOON"?

Tomorrow is the day set for the big storm, the Yellow Typhoon, and we are very anxious to learn all about such "animals," so ask the people of St. Marys to send in their definitions of the word. As the Press will not published tomorrow we'll have to tell you all about it today.

Now, in regard to the prizes, we said yesterday that they would be the best that we could give, and so they are. For the definition of the word which the committee considers the best we will give twelve, a whole dozen, tickets to the Temple, good on night that pictures are shown; for the second best, six tickets, and for the third best, three tickets.

Now, then, get this right: Write a definition of less than 25 words on "Yellow Typhoon" and bring or send it to the Temple before 1 o'clock, P. M., Friday, November 26th. If it is bound to be the best definition received you get a dozen tickets to the Temple—enough to attend the pictures two whole weeks—if second you get six tickets, and if third, three. Get busy.

P. S.—If you can't find a good definition to the word, visit the Temple tomorrow afternoon or evening, when Anita Stewart will appear in the great First National release, "The Yellow Typhoon," in six big long reels. She will give you a good idea of what is meant by Yellow Typhoon, and you will have lots of time to write your definition and have it in the hands of the committee in ample time to compete for the desirable prizes.

Here is the way A. A. Bruce, assistant manager of the Peoples theatre, Portland, Ore., decorated the lobby for the showing of "Good References"

Miniature Stages in Lobby

Peoples Theatre, Portland, Ore., Has Novelty Lobby Display Idea

TWO miniature stages depicting scenes from the picture next to be featured, have proved to be the newest method of doing advance advertising by the Peoples theatre, Portland, Oregon.

The small scenes are in gold frames designed similarly to the stage of a regular theatre, having pillars at either side, an ornate arch at the top and minute drawn curtains. The interior of the frames, which are steel lined and electrically equipped, is 16½ inches by 17½ inches high. The exterior measurements are 17½ by 19½ inches. Cut-out figures are used and as the stages are two inches in depth added realism is attained by clever light effects not unlike those attained by regular foot lights.

For the engagement of "Good References," a recent attraction at the Peoples, on one side of the foyer a miniature stage showed Constance in voluminous, jaunty attire, strongly suggestive of Vogue's or Vanity Fair's extreme styles, standing, showing her references to a prim old maid, as quaint and conservative as the other was modish. A landscape or two on the wall, a grandfather's clock, lamp and stand added to the completeness of the scene. The other stage contained a picture of a merry, winking moon just setting behind the horizon of blue sea which intervened between the deck of "S. S. Peoples," on which Constance was contentedly sitting on the lap of a man busily engaged in kissing her. Again she was portrayed in attractive, but fantastic evening gown with great fullness of skirt and appreviated bodice.

The miniature stages with their clever scenes, are thought by Portland film men to be decidedly more decorative than the usual advance one-sheets or made-to-order cards. They possess the added feature for the Peoples theatre which has a proportionately small foyer, of consuming no standing space and because of their elevated position being visible to all at all times.

Cost of the original stages was $8.50 apiece. This included the rather intricate wiring which enables various lighting effects and makes possible a wider range of scenes. Art work of changing them each time amounts to approximately $2.50 a piece.

Write Fillers for the Editor, Says Wendt

Here's a hot tip for some of those exhibitors who are continually "crabbing" to the newspapers because they don't get enough publicity—but who never go any further out of their way than to possibly furnish their editors with press sheets and stills. "Try and be of real assistance to your editors," says Harold Wendt, advertising and exploitation man for the Rivoli theatre of Toledo. "One little thing which can easily be done and which will probably be appreciated by your editors and still get you some additional space will be found in writing them some "fillers," using dope on advance bookings for your subject matter. But make them short—just two or three lines in type. The editors will have them set up and laid aside in their galleys, using them quite occasionally for filling out their columns in their movie page, instead of other matter.

Two miniature stage settings hung in the foyer of Peoples theatre, Portland, Ore., which advertised "Good References" as told in the above story

Freak Ad. Idea for "The Untamed"

Another instance of the freak classified "ad" bringing great amount of news publicity for a picture has been recorded at Toledo, Ohio, when the Rivoli theatre was showing "The Untamed."

Harold Wendt, advertising director for the Rivoli, inserted the following "ad" in the classified columns of a leading Toledo daily:

"Wanted—A left-handed horse; one that is accustomed to doing everything just backwards; but do not want a jack; one with some intelligence that can be taught tricks preferred."

When the foreman of the composing room saw the "ad" he thought it such an unusual one that he called the attention of the editor to it, and the result was a story on page one to the effect that some one had sought the ——— want ad columns in an effort to obtain "the scarcest thing in the world." This got the necessary comment and then Wendt submitted his story—one to the effect that Tom Mix had the only left-handed horse in the world in his newest picture, "The Untamed." The editor thought the latter so good that it was given a good position in the news section as well.

Boston Gets Some Novel Exploitation Stunts

A unique tie-up was recently put over in Boston on the occasion of the release in that territory of "A Prohibition Monkey," in which "Joe Martin" is featured.

It happened that Patrick Walshe, known in theatrical circles as the best "monkey-man" in the impersonation field, was appearing in Boston at the time. Walshe is less than four feet tall, and has a make-up with which he claims to have fooled many circus simians. He also has made a study of monkey-talk and is an authority on their modes of expression.

Asher arranged a trade showing, and then the simultaneous appearance of "A Prohibition Monkey" in three of the leading theatres, the Beacon, Loew's Orpheum, and the Modern. At the same time he planted an eight-column spread in the magazine section of the Boston Sunday Post, comparing Walshe and Joe Martin, with pictures and interviews of each. The publicity story caused much amused comment in Boston and assured crowded houses for the three theatres.

Glee Clubs Appear in St. Louis Theatre

During the past three years the Mandolin and Glee Clubs of Washington University, St. Louis, have gained considerable public favor by virtue of their annual concerts. Because of the fact that the members of both musical organizations are sons of prominent local families their presence is often demanded at various musical and entertainment gatherings.

To tie up his program for the week of December 12 with some popular movement, as is the custom of Manager Schwartz of the Del Monte theatre, arrangements were made whereby the two university clubs might appear as a special feature. The program was so made as to give the impression that this was the annual public concert and that it was being given as a part of the picture program. The crowds that were attracted by this unusual bit of exploitation elevated the box-office receipts to a considerable extent.

Novelty Post Cards Advertise "Oh Lady Lady"

A deluge of post cards was the novel form of exploitation used by Myers Brothers when "Oh Lady Lady" was booked for the Majestic theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio.

The cards were unusual in that, although they were personal, they bore no names. They were sent to "Oh Lady Lady," the street address of prospective patrons following. In this manner it was possible to get the messages into practically all of the homes in the city without the use of names, and at the same time to present the attraction "Oh Lady Lady" in a most effective way.

On the reverse side of the "Oh Lady Lady" cards was the announcement of the production, some of the principal players, where it would be shown, and when.

Music and The Picture

A Mighty Crowd of Picture Musicians

By Charles D. Isaacson

I HEAR two cries coming up from the field.

On the one hand is the theatre manager or owner bemoaning the fact that he cannot put his hands on the right kind of musicians for his pictures.

On the other hand I am besieged by hundreds of musicians of the most worthy advantages seeking to find the outlet for their abilities.

Whenever a theater manager asks for the name of a man to take complete charge of his musical programs, organize his orchestra, of a hundred or one, I am happy to be able to send a list of half a dozen musicians in his section of the country with an assurance that the individuals represented are gifted with the right experience and the right point of view.

When a musician writes to us, however, it is impossible for THE NEWS to make any special effort for immediate action: the right theatrical request must be received first before an introduction can be effected.

The situation, which only three or four months ago was scarcely worth noticing, is today becoming a serious matter, and calls for a special discussion.

This department, it is clearly demonstrated, is being followed not only by managers and owners of theatres, not only by musicians now securely placed in houses where they are able to do their best—but also by many who are not yet placed in theatres or not yet placed in the right theatres.

To these latter gentlemen and ladies I should first like to speak.

I must confess that many (perhaps one out of every three) who write to me seeking a place in the motion picture field are not ready, and I wouldn't under any circumstances send their names to a theatre.

The fact that you can play well or that you have had the most serious kind of musical education in universities and conservatories, that you were with this or that famous European maestro, doesn't make any difference. What is your knowledge of pictures? Just because you have attended a picture show doesn't make you a fit candidate to take charge of the music!

Don't expect to be put in charge of a big picture palace at once when you present your card. Go out and get acquainted with picture technique. Playing picture music is something very different to playing just music, playing symphonies, or opera. You must reconstruct your entire musical understanding to make an appropriate man in a picture show. If you were ambitious to become the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, you wouldn't make an application to the directors before you had risen in the ranks, would you? Get into the smallest house you can find, and work for as little as they are willing to pay you. It's a case of experimenting on the dog, to be sure—pity the audience in the little house when you get started. Or better than that, try to get into the orchestra of a successful conductor, and study what he does. Take the last row of the second violins, and watch what is being done—and why, why, why!

A great organist writes me: "I am one of the most successful men in my profession; now, to fill in on some spare time, I am willing to take a place in a picture house of the highest standards if they will pay my price." What this gentleman says is right. He is one of the most successful recital and church organists. But he never had anything to do with motion pictures, and I wrote him that I couldn't conscientiously name him to any of my corresponding theatres. He was indignant—then he calmed down a bit, and asked what I would suggest. I said: "Spend your spare time this season going to picture theatres and hearing what the organist does. Then get in a little place, and after you've made good to your own satisfaction, I don't think you'll have any trouble landing the biggest jobs. Your name will do that for you, anyway. If it doesn't seem worth while for you to do all that, then forget pictures—or, rather, leave it to those people who are willing to concentrate on this field alone."

And of that description there are hundreds who are seriously preparing themselves. Every day I receive letters from men and women who have studied and analyzed conditions and are willing to go through all the developments to perfect themselves. They are certainly a whole lot better equipped than conservative old musicians who will not make concessions to the needs of the motion picture field. A whole lot better, I say, than the best artists who sneer at the picture public and cannot see the reason for considering that public first—not themselves and their traditions first.

WATCH FOR NEXT WEEK'S MUSIC DEPARTMENT

It will contain the program of the Musical Picture Convention. See how much you get for your three days in New York, January 23-4-5

Less than a Month for the Big Musical-Picture Conference, New York City January 24-5-6 Hotel Astor. Send reservations to Hotel Astor and News.

THE NEWS has certainly drawn all kinds of musicians into its musical department. We never would have believed it possible that in so short a time so many hundreds of picture musicians, prospective and actual, would lay their problems and ambitions in our hands.

Having indicated these facts, it then becomes a very simple matter to criticize the managers of theatres who are going on about their music business with the wrong kind of assistance. Why is it necessary to do it? Why have poor musicians when the woods are full of the good?

You say you haven't met the best musicians. Well, that's because you never had a place to meet before. Now you have. It's this department, and THE NEWS has authorized me to freely and gratuitously serve as a committee of introduction; to bring together worth-while theatre managers with the kind of musicians they seek. The classified department of THE NEWS is wide open. Now, I have no special desire to turn this column of mine into a solicitation for advertising. Those who follow what I say will notice that I do not adhere to the trade paper custom of using a lot of publicity matter and calling it an editorial department! So when I say that the classified columns of THE NEWS are open to the musicians who are seeking theatres, and the theatres which are seeking musicians, I want you to understand that I am giving you the same advice I would give myself, knowing the conditions as I do.

This does not alter or interfere with the promised cooperation of this department to assist without charge any musician or theatre manager in getting together. But the number of musicians who are placing their names with us is growing to such proportions that it becomes more and more difficult to be of quick assistance to any individual.

Yet many musicians now enjoying a good berth in motion picture theatres have been placed through this department and are continuing to be placed!

The purpose of the present article is to make THE NEWS stand perfectly clear to all the present picture musicians, prospective picture musicians who are in correspondence with the music editor.

Also it is hoped that this statement will encourage more theatre managers and owners who are struggling with the problem of finding the right musicians—to put the problem up to THE NEWS Music Department.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Eddy Eckels, president and general manager of Independent Films Association, is recovering from an attack of pneumonia that confined him to his home for ten days.

Exploitation plans that will strike an entirely new angle in the film industry were completed by Harry Rice, business manager of the Independent Films Association, on his recent trip east. Rice has just returned to the home office of his company in Chicago. "Because I'm a publicity man, some folks may think I'm exaggerating when I assert that this deal I've made is the biggest scoop ever put over in the advertising end of the film business," said Mr. Rice. "As a matter of fact, it is so new and so big that when we announce it there will be a nation-wide sensation. Nothing whatever like it has ever been attempted." Eddy Eckels and Dick Robertson are enthusiastic over Mr. Rice's coup, and full announcement is promised within two weeks.

Bert Isaacson, well known in Chicago film circles is now covering the northside of the city for Celebrated Players Film Corporation.

An unusually large crowd of exhibitors witnessed the first showing of a Stoll Film Corporation picture in Chicago last week when "Squandered Wives" was thrown on the screen in Universal's projection room. Manager Ben Beadell was host at the showing and provided a fine musical setting for the picture. Very favorable comments on this production were heard and the quality of the picture made those who viewed it predict that Stoll Film Corporation will be successful in the Chicago district if their other pictures are up the mark set by this one.

Gollos and Gollos Film Company, exclusive Illinois distributors of "The Sacred Flame," the picture starring Emily Stevens, report heavy bookings throughout the territory. In Chicago Lubliner & Trinz will show the picture at a number of their houses and the Bijou Dream will be the place where it will have its downtown showing.

Watterson R. Rothacker made a short visit to New York, returning so as to be home Christmas Eve. D. D. Rothacker, manager of the Industrial Division, is on a vacation in North Carolina. H. J. Aldous, Rothacker treasurer, is doing a rushing holiday baby business. Carl Coverdale, a laboratory developer, claimed the $50.00 reward which Watterson R. Rothacker offers for babies born to workers. It's a girl —Virginia. "You've got nothing on me," smiled W. H. Strafford, as he put in a claim for Enid Adair Strafford.

Aaron J. Jones has reached Chicago after a tour of Europe and resumed his duties at the head of Jones, Linick & Schaefer firm at the beginning of the week. Mr. Jones' trip has caused a flurry of excitement among members of his staff. After what he said about Paris, Sig Faller, manager of the Bijou Dream, immediately engaged passage for April. Norman Field, the general manager, began yearning for London and is said to have declared himself. He will sail next Fall for a sojourn in Europe—not forgetting Paris, where once he held forth as general manager for the interests of J. Calvin Brown.

Ralph T. Kettering has written a new play called "When It Strikes Home." The stock company at the Shubert theatre, Milwaukee, are playing it this week.

H. A. R. Dutton, president and general manager of the Exhibitors' Supply Company of Chicago, left Sunday for Texas with his family, on a much needed vacation. For six years Mr. Dutton has assiduously kept himself at the helm of the company, and now that it has reached the point of being one of the largest in the supply business of the industry, he feels that he and his family can spend a greater part of the winter in the warmth of the San Antonio, Texas, sun.

The Exhibitors' Supply Company this week, on the first day of a thirty day sales drive on Peerless Automatic Arc Controls, sold the Lubliner & Trinz chain of theatres thirty-four of the Arc Controls. This makes the Lubliner & Trinz chain 100% on this article. They are installing them in every one of the theatres they now operate, and have also ordered them for the new 4,650 seat theatre nearing completion at Kedzie and Madison streets.

All evidence received at the offices of the Capital Film Company indicates that "Lone Hand Wilson" is receiving a superabundance of good advertising. Wherever the picture is shown, a flood of twenty-four sheets precedes its coming.

Following is a partial list of the towns that have fallen in line on the twenty-four sheet poster campaign: Kansas City, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Los Angeles, Utica, Minneapolis and Des Moines.

"Lone Hand Wilson," from its showing some weeks ago, has stepped into the front ranks of recent Western releases and Cuneo in his first stellar picture has elbowed his way into the inner circle of Western stars.

The second of the Cuneo series, "The Ranger and the Law," now is being photographed at the Doubleday Studios at the coast. It will be ready around the first of the year.

The twenty-four sheet advertising campaign on "Lone Hand Wilson" is probably the first campaign of its kind on a state right picture of this nature.

Publicity Representative W. L. Hill, of Universal, has started a presentation scrap book in which appear clippings from MOTION PICTURE NEWS showing how theatres all over the country have put on important productions and he finds the book of great value in assisting the exhibitors to increase the value of pictures being shown at their house by proper presentation.

Salesmen from all parts of the Chicago territory met with Manager Lesserman of Universal's Chicago exchange last week for their regular bi-weekly conference and report business holding up well in theatres throughout the territory, except in a few manufacturing centers where there is a slight slump noticed. Salesmen, generally, reported that managers who are putting forth real efforts to exploit and advertise pictures properly as well as presenting them in an adequate manner, have no complaints as to business.

Manager Bradford Bradon of the Majestic theatre, Streator, Illinois, forgot all about the traditional holiday slump and went in on a big advertising campaign on "Once to Every Woman" with the result that all house records were broken during the days he played this picture. A soprano soloist was used in the presentation, singing Ben Bolt and the Jewel Song from "Faust" during the time the picture was running. Mr. Bradon is making plans to remodel and enlarge the house as he feels the need of more seats. The theatre, when remodeled, will be one of the most beautiful houses in this district.

Manager C. A. Robb of the Luna theatre, Kankakee, recently has put in all his spare time visiting successful moving picture houses throughout the state and finding out for himself why they are money makers. As the result of his investigation he has decided that the secret of their success lies in adequate presentation of pictures and will apply that theory at his house. He has reached the conclusion that good advertising must be backed up by good presentation.

Manager McGorly, of the Beverly Theatre, Woodstock, Illinois, is planning far ahead for the presentation of "Once to Every Woman," which goes into his theaatre in January. He. already has engaged the services of a splendid soprano soloist to lend atmosphere to the picture through her vocal numbers, and plans a presentation which will be unique for a town of less than five thousand people.

Manager Lesserman, of Universalsal, reports that "Once to Every Woman" is one of the most successful pictures from a box office standpoint ever released in the Chicago territory, and that bookings are very heavy, one hundred and seventy-two theatres in Chicago and suburbs already having made playing dates and a large number which have booked the picture are waiting their turns for the prints.

A new wage scale to become effective on January 1 was agreed upon by representatives of the Allied Amusement Association of Chicago and of the motion picture operators of the city at a meeting held last week. Under the agreement, which is a compromise of the demands made by the union for a larger advance, a thirty-three and a third increase in wages is granted, bringing the scale to $1.50 per hour instead of $1.12½ as at present.

President Joe Hopp of the Illinois Exhibitors Alliance left Sunday night for New York, where he will attend the meeting of the N. A. M. P. I. and M. F. T. O. of A. as a representative of the Illinois exhibitors. W. A. Steffes of Minneapolis, president of the Minnesota Alliance, accompanied Mr. Hopp East after spending Saturday and Sunday in Chicago conferring with various officials of the Illinois organization.

W. D. Burford of Aurora left for California Monday, accompanied by Mrs. Burford, and expects to spend several weeks on the Coast resting up after a strenuous winter's work.

The transfer of the Neal Hart features unit and the Leo White comedy unit from their Glendale studio to the Balshoffer studio, Hollywood, California, caused considerable speculation as to whether Pinnacle would retain the Glendale studio or not. Ollie Moore and Frank Messenger, however, settled the question with the following statement: "Yep, we'll keep Glendale. The outdoor sets and streets in Glendale in particular will be used constantly, as well as the splendid locations which are numerous in the Verdugo Hills surrounding Glendale."

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

"Woman Untamed" Booked Heavily in Illinois

Illinois exhibitors are quick to book "The Woman Untamed," featuring Doraldina, the dancer, according to a statement from Harry Weiss, president of the Superior Screen Service of Chicago, who controls the rights on this picture for the State of Illinois. Bookings are coming in very fast and the keen interest that exhibitors are showing towards the picture forecasts a new booking record in that territory.

Byron Morgan to Continue with Famous

Byron Morgan, well-known magazine writer, has signed a new contract whereby he will continue for a term of years to write original stories and scenarios for Paramount, according to an announcement from the Hollywood office of Jesse L. Lasky.

Mr. Morgan is probably best known for his Saturday Evening Post stories, notably a collection of tales of motoring called "The Roaring Road." Several of these have been produced by Paramount with Wallace Reid as the star, including "The Roaring Road," "Excuse My Dust" and "What's Your Hurry?"

Levey Completes Fifth of "Aladdin" Series

"His Magic Lamp," the fifth episode of "The Modern Aladdin" series on electricity which the Harry Levey Service Corporation is producing, depicts the evolution of light from the sun's rays to present day incandescent lamps. All forms of lighting are to be depicted, and many difficult and heretofore unattempted photographic feats will be accomplished, it is stated.

Fine Sets for Elsie Ferguson Vehicle

When Elsie Ferguson began work at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, on "Sacred and Profane Love," a William D. Taylor production in which she is to star for Paramount, she found some of the most exquisite sets imaginable awaiting her. One of these sets represents a mid-Victorian home and garden in England. The exterior shows a typically English garden. The interior is a big living room, quaintly and strikingly decorated. Other big sets represent the concert hall and boudoirs.

New Company Enters Field

Dominant Pictures Announces Two Series of Short Subjects

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week of the formation of the Dominant Pictures Corporation, a new entrant into the independent field. The announcement comes simultaneously with the resignation of Jacques Kopfstein as general sales manager of the Victor Kremer Enterprises, who has resigned to assume the general managership of the new company. Offices have been rented at 135 West 44th street, and according to Mr. Kopfstein, the new company will be well prepared to take care of the manifold requirements of the independent exchangeman and the state rights operator.

The company will specialize in the production and distribution of high-grade independent offerings, which will embrace, it is said, everything from a one-reel subject to a five-reel spectacle. In this connection, a number of special productions have already been secured.

A series of twenty two-reel Western subjects to be released as the "Western Star Dramas" is announced for distribution by the Dominant Pictures Corporation according to Mr. Kopfstein. The first of the series is "The Cowboy's Sweetheart" which features Art Acord and Edythe Sterling.

Dominant Pictures Corporation also announce for ready release in the state rights market a series of twelve one-reel comedies featuring Rosemary Theby, which are to be known as "The Newlywed Series."

"Mr. Wu," Stoll Film, Ready

Production Based on Stage Play with Lang Again in Leading Role

A FORTHCOMING release of the Stoll Film Corporation on its one-a-week schedule will be "Mr. Wu," a photodrama based on the speaking stage success of that title by H. M. Vernon and Harold Owen, in which Matheson Lang made so pronounced a hit. The screen version was directed by Maurice Elvey from a scenario by Frederick Blatchford. The art direction was by Barry Barnard.

Critics who have had previews of "Mr. Wu" pronounce it a remarkable picture, in every way sustaining the deserved vogue of the spoken version. The Asian atmosphere which was so marked an element in the success of the latter has been very successfully caught by Mr. Elvey, it is said. The scenic effects are especially attractive, particularly that portraying Mr. Wu's garden, a riot of exotic growths.

The star role is taken by Matheson Lang, the same actor whose success in the spoken role is one of the most discussed in connection with modern drama. Supporting Mr. Lang are Meggie Albanesi, Teddy Arundel, Lillah McCarthy and Roy Royston, all sterling performers of the stage and screen.

G. H. Hamilton Enters Field

Well Known Showman to Market Three Features to Independents

GEORGE H. HAMILTON, one of the oldest showmen in the picture business, who was responsible for the selling of "The Son of Tarzan" for David P. Howells, has started in business for himself with offices at 729 Seventh avenue.

Because of the rapid manner in which he disposed of the states rights for "The Son of Tarzan," selling the entire United States in a period of six weeks, the owners of the three pictures which he is now handling, who had been watching his smoke, induced him to handle their product.

The three pictures for which he has taken over the distribution, offering them on the states rights market are "Kazan," by James Oliver Curwood, starring Jane Novak; "The Mask," by Eugene Hornblow, starring Hedda Nova, Jack Holt and Mickey Moore, the greatest child actor on the screen, and a rip roaring five-reel comedy called "Hey Rube."

New Negatives for Kineto

Charles Urban has just received one of his chief scientists, F. Percy Smith, of London, a condon, a consignment of new negatives that will go into his Movie Chats and Kineto Reviews. These pictures are said to constitute an entirely new endeavor in motion picture making.

Mr. Urban is himself editing and titling the negatives. Their release will mean, Kineto states, that the motion picture will be performing the same service and function that such magazines as Popular Science, Popular Mechanics, Science and Invention, Scientific American and other such journals are performing.

The pictures will be released under the general title of "Science in the Home," and they will illustrate the possibilities of experiments at home in the same way that these weekly and monthly magazines do.

The advantage to the exhibitor is at once apparent. In the average, his price of admission is seldom as much as the cost of any one of these magazines and the lesson in the film is so much clearer than it is in the magazine. The materials employed in all of the "Science in the Home" Series are such as are to be found in any home.

Union Film Company Busy on Coast

For some time past rumors about the Union Film Company or a company similar in name have been rife around the film circles in the West, but the first to bear fruit is the one concerning the Union Film Company's actual producing activities and the announcement that the first two pictures are ready. Alexander Alt is president of the company, Miss Helen Howell, secretary and treasurer, and J. T. Whitlaw, general manager. It is said that the new concern is amply financed and able to carry out its plans, which at first call for the completion of twelve two-reel comedies starring Alexander Alt and Helen Howell. These pictures are to be completed at the rate of two every month. Distribution plans have not been made public.

The studio is located out at Sherman, California, coastward from Hollywood. The executive offices, which until recently were located in the California Building in Los Angeles, have been moved temporarily to a downtown place in Sherman. This was for the purpose of keeping in closer touch with the producing forces, which was found necessary when production commenced. As soon as the administration building, now under construction, is completed these offices will adjoin the studio. Much building and rebuilding is going on at the studio.

"Ireland in Revolt," the Chicago Tribune's picture, which shows conditions in the Emerald Isle as they actually exist today, was given its premier American showing at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Randolph theatre in the Chicago Loop last week. The material for these films was collected by Capt. Edward F. Weigle, famous war photographer of the Chicago Tribune, and the man who took, brought to this country and successfully exhibited the films entitled "The German Side of War" in 1916.

He has just returned from a three months' tour of Ireland, where he was sent by his paper, and has brought with him a remarkable series of moving pictures of raids, riots, reprisals, burning buildings and all the horrors which are today a part of Ireland's daily life.

The Tribune has not yet announced its distribution plans, but it is rumored that "Ireland in Revolt" will be put on the state right market, as was the war picture released by the Tribune some time ago.

"The Parish Priest" Has Record Opening

Herman J. Garfield returned from Wilkes-Barre recently, where his special production of the old stage success, "The Parish Priest," had its out-of-town tryout, with accounts of a stampeded box-office for three days with three thousand people crowding into a twenty-five hundred capacity theatre to see the last performance. While the picture version of Daniel L. Hart's drama was not opened in Wilkes-Barre with any thought of the financial returns but was rather one of the stages in the preparation of the picture for its New York premier, all records for theatre attendance in the city were said to have been broken.

Special Paper Prepared on Sport Pictorials

Arrow officials call attention to the unusual posters which they are supplying on their short subjects and call particular attention to posters on Sport Pictorials, a series of one-reel productions produced by Town and Country Films under the editorship of Grantland Rice. As much care and attention is given to the preparation of these posters as any special feature production.

These posters are made by the Ritchey Lithograph Company.

Mollie King Feature to be Completed Soon

Work on "Her Majesty," American Cinema Corporation's newest production, starring Mollie King, is rapidly nearing completion at the Victor studio. George Irving is the director in charge.

Stress has been laid upon the elaboration of scenic background promised, two famous "show places" owned by wealthy New Yorkers having been utilized for exterior scenes.

A Systemized Organization

Independent Films, of Chicago, Branching Out Rapidly

THE rapid progress being made in the independent or state right branch of the film industry is exemplified in the expansion just announced by the Independent Films Association, of Chicago.

The Association was organized last July by Eddy Eckels, long identified with the state right field and well known in the sales and exploitation end of the film business. Associated with Eckels at the inception of the enterprise were N. A. Woody, H. E. Belford and Dick Robertson.

Pioneering their way forward, these men were able to announce by September a list of member exchanges covering all distributing centers in the United States. From these exchanges there grew a demand for series releases six times as great as the Association was able to supply. So steps were taken to procure the right sort of productions to meet this demand. And in this, the Association found itself confronting a serious problem.

The search for releasing material was continued. Single pictures were not sought. The demand of the theatres, reflected through the state right exchanges, was for pictures in series, with stars of established box office value, so that continuous advertising could be maintained with cumulative effect.

It became evident that in order to procure the desired material, the Association would have to take up production work itself or else organize producing units that would co-operate with the Association in the manufacture of pictures that could be handled successfully by the member exchanges.

The latter course was decided upon, and to carry out the great diversity of activities that would be involved, the executives of the Association found it necessary to branch out from a two or three man concern.

Five new executives were allied with the company, and a plan of re-organization was put into effect last week by which nine separate and distinct departments were established with a responsible head in charge of each, vested with full initiative.

Department of Office Routine—Includes management, accounting and purchasing. Howard Robertson, manager; Jack Willis, M. B. Raub, advisory.

Department of Production—Considers all matters pertaining to present active production; also takes over new production matters from Department of Expansion at point where casting begins. Eddy Eckels, manager; Floyd Williams, Frank Messenger, Richard Robertson, Roy B. Dickson, advisory.

Department of Advertising—Includes publicity and exploitation; also preparation of lithos, photos, press books, cuts, slides, etc. Richard Robertson, manager; Harry Rice, E. A. Barrymore, Charles Olberg, J. R. Mahon, advisory.

Department of Sales—Harry Rice, manager; H. E. Belford, Howard Robertson (foreign), R. W. French, advisory.

Department of Finance—Eddy Eckels, manager; Nathan Woody, A. D. Jenkins, Floyd Williams, advisory.

Department of Service—Has active handling of service to exchanges and exhibitors. Howard Robertson, manager; M. B. Raub, advisory.

Department of Exchanges—Considers problems arising from exchanges after sale of territory; co-operates with exploitation factors in stimulating activity, creating interest, adjusting differences, etc. Harry Rice, manager; Arthur Lowy, R. W. French, advisory.

Department of Expansion—Initiates all movements to broaden scope of operations of Independent Films Association; analyzes markets and demand; provides for supply; develops possibilities for new producing units, new stars, etc. Richard Robertson, manager; Eddy Eckels, Harry Rice, advisory.

Department of Promotion—Primarily intended to provide funds for new enterprises or producing units initiated by Department of Expansion. E. A. Barrymore, manager; Harry Rice, Richard Robertson, R. W. French, advisory.

To Boost Cleaner Pictures

George Beban to Make "Cleaner Films" Part of His Tour Talks

"THE day for better and cleaner photoplays has arrived. Public demontration has more than proved this." So claims no less an authority than George Beban, who is about to begin a Coast to Coast tour making personal appearance in connection with his new picture, "One Man in a Million" and who, during his talk from the stages of the biggest silent drama edifices, will make a plea for the uplift of pictures and the curtailment of sex and vice productions.

Advance publicity on the sexless film product which Mr. Beban has derived has caused no little stir throughout not only film circles but men and women in private life who, with their children, are regular patrons of motion picture theatres.

During the booking tour that Mr. Beban and Sol Lesser made which extended from Los Angeles to New York, they screened Beban's latest film product, "One Man in a Million" for the benefit of local exhibitors. In nearly every instance, local censor representatives were present during the advance exhibition and Mr. Beban claims that in no manner, during the entire tour, was mention made of any suggestiveness or the possibility of any eliminations throughout the entire fifty six hundred feet of footage that makes up the feature.

And to further prove that a clean wholesome love story will "get over" with the so-called "hard-boiled" exhibitors as well as the general moving picture public, Beban further claims that they arrived in New York City with a full 100 per cent booking record, all exhibitors claiming that a human heart interest clean and wholesome photoproduction was the thing they wanted—and got, insofar as the Beban product was concerned.

Mr. Beban wishes to announce that he is showman enough to govern his routine of talk and advance exploitation and publicity on sane as to erase any signs of so-called "preaching to the public"

Launch New Distributing Plan

Chatburn Enterprises Backs Road-Show Booking Plan

ANNOUNCEMENT made from the West Coast this week tells of a new distributing plan by a new organization of national breadth which is to become effective shortly after the first of the year, under the title of T. W. Chatburn Enterprises.

"The motion picture industry since its inception, and like most lines of business, has followed the line of least resistance," is the statement made by T. W. Chatburn in announcing his plans. "Many capable and able men connected with the industry today have gone with this line of resistance, thinking that the moving picture business was something different from the legitimate theatrical enterprises. The writer believes, and conceived the idea some seven years since, that the motion picture industry is nothing more nor less than a progressive state of the legitimate theatrical business. If the prominent characters of the legitimate stage performances were in a position to successfully amuse the public by speaking dramas, from a showmanship standpoint, the same should apply whereby these people are in a position to amuse the public successfully through the motion picture medium, applying the same principle only in a progressive form.

"T. W. Chatburn Enterprises is a newcomer in the field to the theatrical man, but not a newcomer to the industry as a whole. T. W. Chatburn personally founded the plan of distribution which will be put in effect by the Enterprises under his command and which will be operated along the absolute lines of road show booking offices, handling only the largest and best product, few subjects, supreme quality, booking on a percentage basis in any and all cities throughout the entire country. Any exhibitor throughout the United States will be in a position to book a road show from T. W. Chatburn Enterprises with its presentation equipment, publicity, representatives, etc., on an equitable percentage arrangement which will guarantee that the production must stand on its merits together with both exhibitor and distributor gambling with unforeseen difficulties which have heretofore placed the burden upon the exhibitor.

"The theory is advanced that this plan of booking will dominate the motion picture field in the future, and T. W. Chatburn Enterprises is the first concern to advance the plan in its entirety. Do not understand this plan to mean that a unit show is being formed whereby the exhibitor must take comedy, drama, scenic, feature, etc., locked up and is forced to play it according to the ideas of others, but compare the booking arrangement of motion picture road shows with the identical idea of the old legitimate traveling speaking productions, and you have the policy of T. W. Chatburn Enterprises. There will be one heavy directed road show two a day unit, traveled, operated, and owned by T. W. Chatburn throughout the United States, per year, which unit is in addition to the regular road shows to be booked by the exhibitors. This heavy road show will have open time to book with progressive exhibitors after its initial exhibition run in ten large cities. The whole plan is a progressive, cooperative, showmanship idea put forth by proper operative heads, and it is believed that it will be beneficial to the entire industry both in a financial and cooperative way."

The time is now come and is at hand, declares Mr. Chatburn, when any traveling amusement production shipped in tin cans, with a small working staff accompanying it, should be so booked and routed as to be of benefit to all exhibitors and theatres where it is handled, to the extent that as long as the theatre now has chosen to accept the heaviest end of the operating expenses of motion picture exhibition, the production with its staff being the smaller end, satisfactory percentage booking arrangements should and must be put in effect.

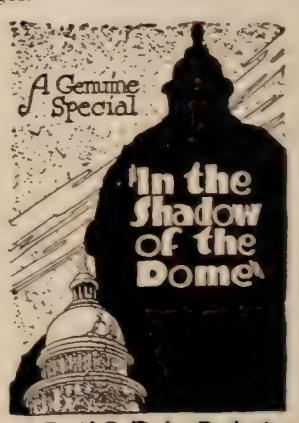
T. W. Chatburn Enterprises will have a limited amount of shows to distribute, it is stated, but the quality of production that will be presented by them, together with the booking arrangements with the exhibitor, in addition to the tremendous overhead cost of film footage and paper tonnage eliminated, the production booking department of the industry will have a new phase injected into it which we might say is not new, but as stated before the progressive idea of the legitimate traveling road shows. T. W. Chatburn Enterprises will welcome any and all exhibitors to visit their branches located in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Kansas City, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Boston and New York and thoroughly go into the matter of booking arrangements which will be gladly outlined to them. The company declares that it wants to satisfy a something that does not exist at this time and hopes that it has the plan to accomplish this purpose.

Victor Kremer, president of Victor Kremer Feature Films, Inc., announces that the name of his first special production has been changed from "Hearts and Saddle" to "The Handicap." Mr. Kremer discovered that the title "Hearts and Saddle" had been used some time ago by a program company.

A special showing of the feature is being planned for the near future, and the production is now being titled. An elaborate press book is now being prepared in which will be contained a line of heralds, throwaways, exploitation, stunts and other helps.

Harry Sherman Moves New York Office

Anticipating the widening of their producing and releasing activities Sherman Productions Corporation this week moved their New York office from the Longacre Building to larger headquarters in the Fitzgerald Building, 1482 Broadway.



With all but a few of the territories in the United States and Canada disposed of, only a few details remain to be completed before they will be ready to release the initial attraction.

The first of these pictures, "Man and Woman," written and directed by Charles A. Logue, will probably be the premier Sherman release although another now in process of production may be selected, if it fulfills its present promises as a box office attraction.

A New Method in Art Titles Developed

The Harry Levey Service Corporation announces that T. B. Messick, staff artist, has developed a new method in art titles. Working in a new medium he has discovered a pigment he makes himself which has just the proper photographic qualities for making art title backgrounds and reproductions in such a way that the full illustration is visible without in any way interfering with the legibility of the work, it is stated.

These titles are being used in connection with the Truth production "The Porcelain Lamp" showing scenes in the evolution of travel, the camel pack, the Chinese using the first brake, and other stages.

Billy West Is Popular in East

Six Weeks Show Many Bookings of Joan's Comedy Series

THE Joan Films Sales Co. established what it considers to be a new record for comedy bookings in the independent field on its new series of Billy West comedies. In the period of six weeks, a total of four hundred and eighty bookings have been reported from three territories of the East—the only section of the country that has thus far released the West series.

The districts represented in Joan's report cover Ben Amsterdam's territory—Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Western Pennsylvania operated by Joe Skirboll of Pittsburgh; and Maryland, Delaware, Washington, D. C. and West Virginia, for which Peter Oletsky of Baltimore controls the distribution rights of the West comedies. In addition to the four hundred and eighty bookings secured by these three exchanges, there are over three hundred thus far reported by Sam Zierler of New York, who is distributing the comedies for New York State and Northern New Jersey.

This number of showings is considered a flattering compliment and substantiate Joan's claims that Billy West's effort in his Joan series of two-reelers are new to the industry and the public. States-rights distributors are now making anxious inquiry for his third release it is said. Thus far, the territories that have released the West comedies haxe exhibited his first two subjects only: "Sweethearts" and "Service Stripes." Joan is therefore making every effort to speed up the production of West's releases.

In surveying the report of the bookings above mentioned, Joan states that about two-thirds of the bookings were placed in first-run houses.

The originality of West's brand of fun was said to be the source of most praise, and naturally responsible for the great number of bookings. The many devices and get-ups that this individual makes use of to promote laughter were emphasized in explaining his success. The fact that West, in his new Joan series, makes no attempt to imitate Chaplin, but introduces his own style of humor was the occasion of pleasant surprise among exhibitors, states Joan. The comedies were described as having an atmosphere of freshness and novelty that made frivolity contagious from the very start.

Among the items of approval in the West comedies were the lobby displays, posters and accessories prepared by Nat Rothstein of the Joan force, on "Sweethearts" and "Service Stripes." These are in rotogravure, and show a scene from the comedy and a full-length photograph of Billy West alongside, with high hat and cane. As the lobby display and posters are the chief "bait" used by exhibitors, the profitable box-office record achieved by exhibitors of West's subjects were ascribed to the advertising aids.

Ben Wilson on Coast

Ben Wilson, who is producing a series of five-reel western features starring Jack Hoxie for the Arrow Film Corporation, returned to the Coast this week after having completed several important deals.

Bert Lubin Back from Successful Tour

Bert Lubin, who recently went on a tour of the independent exchanges in the interests of "Honeymoon Ranch," and to make preliminary marketing arrangements for the release of a series of western features, returned to New York this week very optimistic as to the future of the independent field.

"I only want to reiterate what I said before. The bad business talk as regards moving picture theatre patronage is pure unadulterated 'hokum.' The mere fact that the Capitol and the Strand are chalking up new attendance records every week proves that. And the photoplay houses everywhere are doing the same thing. Evidently the people are cutting out the more expensive forms of amusements and attending the movies instead. And if the exhibitor has no reason for complaint then no one has, for the exhibitor is the real backbone of the industry and his demand for pictures is not lessening. There must be supply to meet demand, and as the big distributors are cutting production it only spells added business for the independents."

Scenarios Sought for "Gasoline Alley"

Russell-Greiver-Russell, who recently completed a contract by which they become producer of "Gasoline Alley," Frank King's widely known automobile cartoon, are making a search for scenarios to fit "Gasoline Alley." The scenario must be along automobile lines featuring "Walt" the fat boy in the "Gasoline Alley" strip, and must contain humorous situations. The animation will run between four hundred fifty and five hundred fifty feet in length. Special attention should be paid to the animation possibilities of all scripts. Information regarding scenarios can be obtained from the Scenario Editor of Russell-Greiver-Russell, 2nd floor Consumers Building, Chicago.

Frothingham Picture Is Re-Titled

The second J. L. Frothingham production was made under the working title of "The Living Child." This title has since been changed after a conference with the officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, to "The Breaking Point," a title which is perfectly suited to the story.

"The Breaking Point" is tentatively scheduled for release beneath the Hodkinson banner early in February.

Western Star Sales Manager of Tour

The Western Star Productions, who are producing and releasing on the State Right market, twelve William Fairbanks, five-reel Western features, announce through Phil Goldstone, that they will absolutely refuse to sell an exchange without having them first see what they are going to buy. Sales Manager Hyman is now completing a tour of the country.

Stevenson Novel Is Filmed

Arrow's "The Tame Cat" is Picturization of "Rajah's Diamond"

WITH the completion of filming of "The Tame Cat" by Director Will Bradley, an announcement is made by the Arrow Film Corporation that this picture, about which so much secrecy has been maintained, is a picturization of the novel, "The Rajah's Diamond," by the world famous author, Robert Louis Stevenson.

"The Rajah's Diamond" is perhaps one of the best known works this author has given to literature. Many producers in the past are said to have contemplated filming this story but have abandoned the idea owing to the apparently insurmountable difficulties which stood in the way of transforming this remarkable story to the screen. Director Bradley, however, had the courage of his convictions and has quietly gone about the producing of the picture.

Arrow officials are most enthusiastic over this production and state that in offering it to the State Rights buyers they are giving them a production absolutely different from anything heretofore offered on the independent market. "The Tame Cat" is a novelty and it is believed by Arrow that it will prove a remarkably attractive production for independent exchangemen and exhibitors. They point out the fact that it is possessed of unusual advertising possibilities and that the value of the author's name is evident. Stevenson is probably one of the most widely read authors of the past century, and he has a host of followers who will be interested in seeing the screen version of this story. In addition to this the unusual title of the story permit of wide advertising and exploitation possibilities which will be fully covered in the press book now being prepared.

Franklyn Farnum Popular

Canyon's Westerns Are Well Received by Independent Exchanges

REPORTS from the independent exchanges throughout the country holding franchises for the six five-reel productions starring Franklyn Farnum, report that these pictures are among the biggest money-getters that have ever been offered by state rights exchanges, state Canyon Pictures.

The De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia is reported to be booking them to the biggest first-run houses, while the Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Washington, D. C., says that they are among the most successful released that they have handled for years.

Substantially, the same reports were received by Canyon from the Greater Production Company of Des Moines, Walter A. Baier Film Company of Milwaukee, and the Specialty Film Company of Dallas.

Tucker Bros. of Oklahoma City have ordered additional prints in order to take care of the large volume of business, while the Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Atlanta has put a force of special salesmen on the road who handle first-runs exclusively, according to Canyon.

The Pittsburgh territory, which is handled by the Columbia Film Service, is among the exchanges which has placed orders for double the amount of prints anticipated, while D. M. Vandewalker, Jr., of Doll-Van Film Corporation of Chicago states that the Franklyn Farnum pictures are today the strongest independent offering in this territory. The Enterprise Distributing Corporation of New Orleans launched a big campaign in advance of the release dates of these pictures, with the result that the prospect in Louisiana and Mississippi is expected to be one of the biggest successes in recent years.

Rollo's Successful Trip

Many Sales of Clark Cornelius Product Are Result of Sales Tour

WHAT is claimed to be one of the most successful sales expeditions in recent months in the state rights field was consummated by S. J. Rollo, secretary of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation, who who just returned from a sales trip, during which he closed with ten territories for his production, "The Devil's Angel," starring Helen Gardner. Mr. Rollo was out for two weeks. In the majority of these territories he also sold "Love's Battle" and "The Fourth Face." A great many of the exchanges also purchased the Tom Moore dramas and the Wallace Coburn Westerns.

The names of the exchanges purchasing these pictures will be found listed in this issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

According to a report from Clark-Cornelius, indications are that the entire country will be sold on "The Devil's Angel" within the next few weeks. In addition to Miss Gardner as the star, this production also has Miss Peggy O'Neill, the art model; Lejaren a' Hiller, the noted illustrator, whose works appear in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines; C. D. Williams, another well known painter; Marc Connolly, a well known writer, and Templar Saxe, who has appeared in a great number of successful productions.

This picture was taken under the personal supervision of Lejaren a' Hiller. All of the interiors were taken in his studio and lighting and arc effects were originated by him.

The distribution arrangements have not yet been announced, but it is probable that the series of pictures planned by the Mesco Pictures Corporation will be released through the state rights market.

Arrow Sells Foreign Rights to Pictures

The activity of the foreign buyers is indicated in a statement issued by the Arrow Film Corporation in which Guy R. Hammond, general export manager, states that the following pictures, four special five-reel features starring Jack Hoxie, the first of which is "A Man From Nowhere," and "The Deceiver" were purchased by Neus-Hesslin & Company for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chili, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Schenck. Mr. Schenck has Miss Farnum under contract but through the arrangement which has been made, Miss Farnum will give whole time to the Whitman Bennett productions in the preparation of the scenarios and continuities. Miss Farnum will prepare the script for "Salvation Nell," the second Whitman Bennett production scheduled for release by Associated First National Pictures.

New Edition for Novel "The Tiger's Coat"

The Bobbs-Merrill Company, publishers of Elizabeth DeJean's novel, "The Tiger's Coat" from which the Dial Film Company made their production of the same name, have announced their intention of publishing a special motion picture edition of this book, which edition will consist of one-half million copies.

This, of course, offers to the exhibitors throughout the United States who play this picture a great possibility for a tie-up between bookstore and theatre, which will benefit both parties.

The book will be illustrated by scene stills from the production.

Wm. Fairbanks Western is Completed

The Western Star Productions have just finished shooting on "Bill of the B O Ranch." In this production William Fairbanks, the star, does some wonderful stunts, and it will be hailed with delight by the patrons who like big strong action productions.

Reelcraft is also represented in every other important distributing center of the United States by Independent Allied Exchanges.

"We have been compelled to open our own exchange in these cities," says President R C. Cropper, "to care for our rapidly growing business. Several other cities are also under consideration for the installation of Reelcraft offices, and announcement concerning them will be made early in the new year."

The Kansas City Branch will be under the jurisdiction of Carl Harthill, district manager of the Central States for Reelcraft. The exchange manager will be announced later.

New Exchange Opens at Charleston, W. Va.

The Southern Film Exchange announces that it has opened offices in Charleston, W. Va., and will distribute high-class State Right attractions in the West Virginia territory. General Manager E. R. Custer, formerly Paramount sales representative and manager of Metro's Cincinnati exchange for two years, will have have executive charge of the company's activities.

However, General Manager Custer intends paying New York film row a flying visit to line up a few more unusual independent releases.

Pat F. Liddy, manager of the Plaza theatre, Charleston, and Phil C. Jacks, prominent local capitalist, are associated in the enterprise

"Keep to the Right" to Open in Mid-West

The new year will see the opening of Equity's five-reel feature, "Keep to the Right," starring Edith Taliaferro, in Iowa and Nebraska under the auspices of the Reelcraft Film Co., of Davenport, Iowa.

One of the interesting novelties in connection with the exploitation of "Keep to the Right" will be the use of artistic advertising, designed and worded in the holiday mood, carrying a New Year greeting and following with an invitation to see "Keep to the Right." Arrangements are also being made to prepare handsome window-cards for display in store-windows, extending the compliments of the season to patrons and inviting them to see "Keep to the Right." Among these is a circular holly-wreath, with the enchanting smile of Edith Taliaferro in the center. Herald, throwaways, etc., are now being completed for Mr. Bridwell's, of Reelcraft, exhibitors.

The New York sales force of Sunrise Pictures Corp. is practically complete, it is announced, and will commence its big drive simultaneously with the publicity and exploitation drive on "The Price of Silence," the Peggy Hyland features, which Sunrise recently announced as its first release.

Winifred F. Kelley, general manager of the company, who left recently on a selling trip will assure state right buyers of an extensive publicity campaign conducted both from the New York office and by a personal visit to several of the exchanges by Nat Dorfman, Director of Advertising and Publicity of Sunrise Pictures Corporation. Mr. Dorfman plans to get teasers started in every state and will also arrange for a book store tie-up on the novel, "At the Mercy of Tiberius" from which the "Price of Silence" has been adapted.

Robert T. Haines, featured player in "The Victim" the super feature offered the independent market by C B C Film Sales Corporation of New York has scored another dramatic hit with Ben Ami in "Samson and Delilah" the sensational success in New York theatricals now playing the 39th Street theatre.

Mr. Haines has also recently completed a principal part in "The Foreigner" a First National release. He has been credited by the critics for years as being one of America's cleverest and most talented dramatic actors and his work in motion pictures is a valuable acquisition to the screen.

Falkner of Newark to Run Jans Special

Fred Falkner, seeking an attraction to combat the opening of the two big new theatres of Newark, N. J., has arranged for "Madonnas and Men," the big super-special produced by Jans Fictures, Inc., to be shown at his Strand theatre the week of January 9.

Mr. Falkner was enabled to get valuable first hand information from the run of "Madonnas and Men" in Detroit where his people, who live in that city, saw this picture at Kunsky's Madison Theatre and guided by the report which he received from them, Mr. Faulkner immediately secured this super-special for his Strand theatre.

Hank Mann Comedies Are Sold Abroad

Hank Mann's popularity as a comedian among the foreign film fans is attested by the number of sales closed for the Arrow-Hank Mann Comedies during the past week. Guy R. Hammond, general export manager, announces that the entire series of twenty-six two-reel Hank Mann Comedies were sold for the following territory: Mr. Suzuki, of the International Motion Picture Company, bought the series for Japan; Mr. Diaz, representing Gonzales of Porto Rico, for Porto Rico, Santo Domingo and Haiti, and Mr. Joseph K. Lamy, for Cuba.

Interest in Sunrise Film

First Announcement of Peggy Hyland Feature Brings Inquiries

IN response to the trade paper advertising sent out by the Sunrise Pictures Corporation, No. 220 West Forty-second street, last week, in connection with its super-independent special, Peggy Hyland, "In the Price of Silence," scores of inquiries from every part of the country have come in from state right buyers. This rush to close on the picture for the different territories, Sunrise points out, is indicative of the great popularity that is Peggy Hyland's.

Winfield F. Kelley, general sales manager of the company, left yesterday for Philadelphia as a first step on his swing around the country. He took with him dozens of inquiries and telegrams and will arrange to show the picture while on tour. He is also arrayed with literature and publicity compiled by Nat Dorfman, director of advertising and publicity for the Sunrise concern.

One of Mr. Kelley's prime objects will be to sign up state right buyers for all future productions to be released by Sunrise. Strong exploitation and advertising co-operation goes with the deal and a special campaign has been formulated by Mr. Dorfman along these lines.

Another feature will be a book store tie-up on the novel, "At the Mercy of Tiberius," from which "The Price of Silence" was adapted. This famous novel of Miss Wilson's has gone into seven editions with a circulation totalling more than a million.

Burnstein Back from Tour

Canyon Salesman Returns from Long Trip Through Film Centers

JULES BURNSTEIN, who has been on the road for the last eight weeks for the Canyon Pictures Corporation, has returned to New York after a tour which brought him to every important center from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

As a result of the efforts of the home office of the Canyon Pictures Corporation in New York and Mr. Burnstein's tour, more than sixty per cent of the United States and Canada has been sold on the entire series of six five-reel features starring Franklyn Farnum. It is expected that through the missionary work done by Mr. Burnstein, the remaining territory will shortly be entirely disposed of.

Mr. Burnstein, who is a keen observer of business conditions as well as one of the best known figures in the motion picture activities, brought back many impressions of conditions which cannot but be of interest to all those engaged in the production or marketing of pictures.

"In the first place," said Mr. Burnstein, "it is up to the independent exhibitor to 'watch his step,' for unless he takes every step possible to protect himself against the inroads of those companies operating on Wall Street money, he will find that he will either be driven out of business by merciless competition, or forced to sell his theatre at a sacrifice. The second point by which I was impressed was the necessity of producers making not only better and cleaner pictures, but of getting one hundred cents value for every dollar that they invested in production work. In the past, entirely too much money has been spent on pictres for which there was absolutely no return in finished product. If the producer wishes to allow his directors and stars to waste money for him, he will have to stand the entire loss himself."

"Hush" Gets Big Welcome

New Clara Kimball Young Picture Winning Advance Bookings

ONE of the significant features in connection with the advance dates scheduled on "Hush," Equity's new Clara Kimball Young feature, is the representation of new theatres, announces Equity. It appears that many new theatres are desirous of housing this Young feature.

"Among the subjects of praise," says an Equity statement, "is the distinguished authorship of "Hush." The reputation of Sada Cowen as one of the nation's ranking screen-writers was generously demonstrated and probably responsible to a great extent for the record number of inquiries received. The title of this fifth Young production was also the cause of much favorable comment. It was unanimously declared to be fetching and mysterious enough to arouse keen interest in the picture itself. It might be stated that the title is Miss Cowen's while the clever, witty sub-titling is also the result of her effort."

Early first runs are booked in San Francisco and Los Angeles on the Coast; in Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Cincinnati and Cleveland in the Middle West; Baltimore, Washington, D. C., Philadelphia and Newark in the East, and Atlanta and New Orleans in the South.

EVERYBODY KNOWS "The HALLROOM BOYS"

Russell-Greiver-Russell, the Chicago film organization, have completed negotiations with a well known Coast producer for the production of pictures to be distributed nationally by the Russell-Greiver-Russell organization, according to reports reaching Chicago from the Coast. Five reel features, special productions, comedies and other films are affected. It is understood that this move brings under Russell-Greiver-Russell control the work of several of the most prominent directors, stars, and technical experts on the west coast.

Bernard D. Russell, the coast representative of Russell-Greiver-Russell, makes the following statement:

"It is a fact that such a combination has been completed. I will say that the producing organization is second to none on the coast, and has long been known for the pictures it puts out. Work of several of the popular and better known stars comes to us through the step we are taking."

At the Chicago office of Russell-Greiver-Russell, W. D. Russell stated that the combination already has been effected, and work has been going on for some time.

Aywon Has Reissues with Popular Stars

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon, has in preparation for release fifteen two-reel pictures to be called the Success Series of Short Subjects which have been specially selected from the two-reel films in which many of the most famous stars first came into fame and fortune.

In the Success Series of Short Subjects such big stars as Henry B. Walthall, Mae Marsh, Dorothy Gish, Lionel Barrymore, Lillian Gish and others equally as prominent appear.

Plans have been carefully laid for the release and proper presentation of both the Success Series and the fifteen two-reel Mary Pickford pictures. Press material and exploitation ideas of real value have been compiled together with excellent paper and numberless stunts by which the enterprising exhibitor can get much extra money into the box office by playing these interesting pictures.

State Rights territory on both series is being snapped up quickly and the biggest circuits of theatres are booking the subjects.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

J. L. Frothingham

Lloyd Comedy Feature of Atlanta Opening

Singular tribute to the drawing power of Harold Lloyd, and to his popularity with the American public, was paid by the management of the New Howard theatre, which threw its doors open to the people of Atlanta, for the first time on Monday, December 13th.

On the opening bill of the New Howard, Harold Lloyd in his latest Pathe comedy special, "Number, Please?" was awarded a leading position. In all the advertising material, Lloyd was prominently mentioned as "The screen's most popular comedian."

"Man of the Forest" Is Zane Grey Novel

In an article which appeared in the various trade publications issue of December 25th, mention was made of "The Man of the Forest" a forthcoming Benj. B. Hampton release which was alluded to as an Irving Bacheller story. This was in error, "The Man of the Forest" is a Zane Grey novel.

Cleveland Beauty in Levey Picture

June Fuller, winner of the Cleveland Beauty Competition held last August by a moving picture concern for the prettiest girl for a part in their first production, posed in a Harry Levey Service Corporation Truth production entitled "A Chat with Ida Bailey Allen."

She plays the part of one of Mrs. Allen's students at the Cooking School, where some scenes of "A Chat with Ida Bailey Allen" are taken.

Laemmle Sees Dean Film

Universal Chief Back From Coast Enthused Over "Outside the Law"

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, arrived in New York City from Los Angeles last week, expressing great enthusiasm over "Outside the Law" the new big Priscilla Dean picture, written and directed by Tod Browning. The Universal chief acclaims it as the greatest piece of work Miss Dean has ever done for the screen, and predicts it will rank among the few great pictures of film history.

"Outside the Law" will have its premier showing at the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, during the week of December 26. Arrangements for this pre-release showing were made by appeal to Mr. Laemmle himself, during his recent stay at Universal City. The showing will be accompanied by unusual exploitation and presentation, including personal appearances by Miss Dean as well as by Lon Chaney, who supported her in the underworld picture.

No release date has been set for the big Universal-Jewel production, but Mr. Laemmle has promised his exchange managers that a first run print of the picture will be in each exchange January 2. This has necessitated a departure in the usual methods of Universal print distribution. Positive prints of Universal pictures ordinarily are made at the Universal factory at Fort Lee, N. J.

To expedite the distribution of first run prints, for this special feature, Mr. Laemmle ordered that the first run positives be made at Universal City, immediately upon the completion of the cutting and editing of the film. This was done, and the film now is being speeded to the fifty-odd Universal exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

It is expected that the picture will be shown simultaneously in many places, early in January. Arrangements are being completed for a theatre on Broadway, in which to give the picture an indefinite run. So confident is Mr. Laemmle that the picture will be the sensation of the season, Universal already has under way an exploitation campaign for the metropolitan district projected for extension well into the Spring. A similar campaign has been inaugurated in other parts of the country, for the purpose of giving Universal exhibitors extensive aid in "selling" the picture to the public.

Goldwyn Selects 4 Titles

Four Pictures Now in Production Are Permanently Titled

FOLLOWING its policy of carefully selecting titles, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation last week decided upon the permanent titles for four of its big pictures now in production.

Rupert Hughes' comedy drama of American domestic life which went into production under the working title of "Mr. and Miserable Jones" will be permanently known as "Dangerous Curve Ahead." The title selected for Gouverneur Morris' first original screen story is "A Tale of Two Worlds," which replaces the working title of "The Water Lily." This is a tale of Oriental life in China which becomes intermingled with Western life in California. It will be a Frank Lloyd Producton. The leading roles are being played by Leatrice Joy, Wallace Beery, J. Frank Glendon and Jack Abee.

"Don't Neglect Your Wife" is the title by which Gertrude Atherton's original scenario will be known instead of by the temporary title of "Noblesse Oblige," which she attached to her manuscript. It is a tale of San Francisco domestic life in the late sixties, with one episode taking place in New York's famous "Five Points" section, an exact replica of which was built on the Goldwyn lot. Lewis S. Stone and Mabel Julienne Scott head the cast of "Don't Neglect Your Wife." Other players include Kate Lester, R. D. MacLean, Arthur Hoyt, Charles Clary, Josephine Crowell and Jane Atherton. Wallace Worsley is directing the production.

The picturized version of Katherine Newlin Burt's new novel of adventure, now running serially in the Red Book Magazine under the title of "Snow Blind," will be known as "The Magnificent Liar." It will be a Reginald Barker Production and the company is now in Banff, Canada, where most of the action takes place, shooting exteriors. Russel Simpson heads the cast of "The Magnificent Liar," with Cullen Landis, Mary Alden and Pauline Starke in the other roles.

Statement Issued by Abraham Lehr

The following statement has been issued by Abraham Lehr, vice president of the Goldwyn organization, regarding the Goldwyn production policy for 1921:

"In the new year we shall bend all our efforts to the making of photoplays with strong, human, appealing stories, acted by well-rounded casts of competent players. Our goal will be fewer and better pictures. We have learned that the public wants logical, sensible plots that appeal to intelligent people. Shakespeare said, 'The play's the thing.' That's just as true today as it was the day he uttered it."

Lewis King Directing Star Ranch Western

A Star Ranch Western for early release, announces C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, is being directed by Lewis King, formerly of American and William Fox Studios. The working title of the picture is "The Gun Runners," starring C. Edward Hatton and his co-star, Frances Parks, who has appeared in Griffith pictures for the past two years and who played a prominent part in Allen Holubar's latest picture. Other members of the cast include Ray Flohre.

"Snowy" Baker to Star

"Snowy" Baker, former Olympic hero and millionaire sportsman of Australia, has succumbed to the lure of the screen and will shortly be seen as the star of a series of five and six reel pictures to be known as Snowy Baker productions.

"For the exhibitor to adopt a policy of wide retrenchment at the present time," says the heads of the Canyon Pictures, "is to court smaller returns and ultimate disaster."

Both Joseph M. Goldstein and Jack Weinberg are of the opinion that when business falls off, is the time to make every effort to attract people, who would with an added inducement stay at home, to frequent the theatre.

"This inducement must be in the form of better pictures, and exchanges must ask a higher price for better productions.

"The theatre manager who is not frightened by a slight drop in business, and who puts worth while attractions on his screen, encourages his people to stand by him. But to cut in the quality of his offering or to make drastic reductions in his musical program will drive many more dollars from his theatre than he will save.

Fairy Tale at End of Ballin's Production

With the completion of "East Lynn" a matter of days, Hugo Ballin is devoting his time to the most important of the several surprising innovations in the production. This is the interpolation of a glowing fairy tale of the moyenage in which Mabel Ballin and Edward Earle appear, produced in an impressionistic manner. Scarlet walls and blue doors vie with purple skies and golden trees, and costumes of startling originality. Nor will their effect on the screen, according to the plan worked out by Hugo Ballin, be altogether lost or even transmuted to black and white altogether. The result promises to be a revelation, according to the few who have seen the first "takes."

11 Reelcraft Pictures Are Completed

Eleven completed productions have been received during the past week by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation for its exclusive Short Subject program.

The Hollywood Studio of Reelcraft completed and shipped four single-reel comedies featuring Billy Franey under the direction of Glover Jones, "The Hunter," and "The New Member." The single-reel comedy unit in which George Clarke is featuring, also working on the Reelcraft lot in Hollywood, completed and shipped "The General" and "The Instructor."

In the Bud and His Buddies series, featuring Bud Duncan, "Puppy Love," "The General Store-General," and "Chicken Hunting" have been received by the general office.

For the Royal Comedy series, "All Balled Up" and "The Palm Missed" in which William and Gordon Dooley are featured have been finally cut and edited.

"The Devil" Booked for Strand

Plan Elaborate Presentation Week of January 16th

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS announce that "The Devil," starring George Arliss, to be distributed by Pathe Exchange, has been booked by Mr. Moe Mark for a pre-release showing at the Strand theatre in New York City, and that he has also closed contracts insuring presentation of the picture in several other houses in which he is interested.

The world premiere of the picture will take place at the Strand theatre beginning the week of January 16th and plans have been completed by Mr. Joseph Plunkett, the Managing Director, for its presentation on a magnificent scale.

One of the most elaborate prologues ever arranged for the Strand has been put into rehearsal by Mr. Plunkett and a special exploitation and advertising campaign is being arranged by the management.

Both Mr. Mark and Mr. Plunkett are enthusiastic about the picture and their opinion is shared by the few big exhibitors who have been permitted to view the production.

"It is not the policy of the Strand theatre to indulge in extravagant claims for any picture before it has been shown to its clientele and has had its approval registered at the box office," said Mr. Mark, in signing the contract, "but in the case of 'The Devil' I want to say that I regard this picture as the very finest photo dramatic triumph of the year. That is just exactly what the Associated Exhibitors have achieved. They have succeeded in turning out the very best piece of dramatic entertainment which it has been my privilege to see this season. I am absolutely certain that it will be one of the biggest public favorites. The work of Mr. Arliss is wonderful. His portrayal on the screen of the character in which he appeared for so long a time on the stage is a masterpiece in dramatic art.

"I am glad to congratulate the Associated Exhibitors on this exceptionally fine production."

Mr. Mark is giving his personal attention to the forthcoming presentation at the Strand.

Mr. Plunkett, the managing director, is equally enthusiastic, and promises the New York public a great surprise and a real treat in the prologue and musical introduction and accompaniment to the picture. He is of the firm belief that the photoplay will equal, if not eclipse the tremendous success of the stage play in which Mr. Arliss enjoyed one of the longest runs in theatrical history.

In New York City the stage play enjoyed the unique distinction of being produced simultaneously by rival managers and played to crowded houses in two theatres all winter. Harrison Grey Fiske and Henry Savage both bought rights from the author, or his agent, only to find that the play had not been copyrighted in the United States and neither had any special privileges over the other.

Fiske's version of the play ran at the Belasco theatre with Mr. Arliss starring and Savage's presentation was at the Garden theatre with Edwin Stevens playing THE DEVIL.

In addition to the Strand showing, special arrangements are being made for exceptional presentation of the picture at Shea's Hippodrome at Buffalo, at the Kansas City theatres of Sam Harding, at J. H. Cooper's magnificent new house in Oklahoma City and at a house to be selected by Mr. Libson in Cincinnati. Negotiations are under way for its exhibition in several other leading theatres and in several cities long runs are planned for the picture. It will go from the Strand theatre in New York to the Strand theatre in Brooklyn.

Variety in Educational Output

Out to Acquaint the Exhibs With Its Film Service

WITH the adoption of the slogan, "the spice of the program," Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has started an intensive campaign through all of its exchanges to impress upon exhibitors that it does not stand in the position of an organization able to supply this or that brand of short subjects, but that it can supply every portion of the program except the feature and the news weekly every week in the year.

This plan has been adopted since it was found that some exhibitors have not realized the great growth that the organization has had in the past year and the immense increase in the product that it has handled. Rather than an effort to make immediate sales the exchange men throughout the United States and Canada will be instructed to devote their time to explaining to exhibitors the variety and the volume of pictures that it is now handling.

In the two-reel comedy field Educational is now releasing a Christie every two weeks and a Chester, a Mermaid and a Torchy comedy every month. In the single reel comedies it now has a weekly release, the Vanity and Gayety series alternating. The Bruce Scenics Beautiful and the Chester Outings will hereafter alternate, affording a weekly release. In addition there will be a number of other scenic pictures, while the company will continue its policy of announcing specials in one or two reels whenever a picture is held to possess the highest degree of box office power. Other special features such as the Rufus Steele two-reel dramas will be distributed.

In addition to this Educational claims to have the largest library of any short subject organization and in many territories a large share of these have not been shown, while leading theatres, such as the Rialto, Rivoli and Capitol, often call upon this collection for pictures that have been exhibited, but which are deemed worthy of repeating.

"We are doing this," says President E. W. Hammons, "to bring home to the exhibitor realization of the fact that he has in us an organization that supplies everything he needs except the feature and the news weekly. We believe that we have now firmly established the quality of every one of our releases, but at the same time it is true that exhibitors have gotten in the habit of shopping around for their various productions without realizing that they can get them all in one exchange, in exchanges that specialize in this particular field and that can furnish them better product for all their needs and better service with it than any other organization.

"Most exhibitors do not realize that we are now working on a basis of 230 releases a year, certainly an impressive record in this field. We mean to bring home to the showman who makes money on this or that brand of two-reel comedies that our other product means as much to this theatre. To do this we have had to maintain the same high standard of product, and we feel confident that we have done that.

"The business that Educational has done since opening its own exchanges would be amazing to those who have not studied this particular field. Before more than a few months have passed we believe that exhibitors everywhere will realize that Educational is the short subject headquarters for every theatre that wants to present the best in film entertainment."

Leonce Perret, the French director who recently completed "The Empire of Diamonds" which Pathe is releasing, is making preparations for a super special to be called "A Race for Millions."

The new picture will be produced with an American cast and the distinguished French actors, Eugene Breon, greatest of Gallic stage "villains" and the comedian, Will Bourbon. Marcya Capri, a Spanish beauty, will also be seen in the new Perret production.

While abroad recently making the exteriors for "The Empire of Diamonds" M. Perret closed a five-year contract with the Stoll Film Company of London for the exclusive handling of his productions, in Great Britain.

Work on "The Race for Millions" will be begun as soon as the script, on which M. Perret is now working, is completed.

First Nat'l Paid High Tribute

A SERVICE that should be of interest to every exhibitor in the country has been instituted by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, in the publication each month of a bulletin containing an unbiased criticism of photoplays which merit the distinguishing title of "exceptional." The board reviews about 99 per cent of all photoplays published from a moral standpoint and in the announcement of the new service, the object is explained in these words:

"The National Board of Review has for some time been convinced that it could properly undertake a critique of the best of the photodrama along with its work of reviewing pictures on a moral basis. The time now seems ripe for attempting to establish an order of more serious critical appraisal of motion pictures than it has been within the policy of the trade or the press to bestow. With this in view the National Board has organized a special committee on critique whose function it is to examine those film productions which seem to have unusual qualifications and to make selections from among these for a list of exceptional pictures. Generally stated, pictures considered for this list must have outstanding dramatic, artistic, pictorial and instructive entertainment quality."

No less than two productions distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., obtained a place among the first four selected by the board as exceptional photoplays. "Passion," starring the European emotional actress Pola Negri and the Whitman Bennett production of "The Devil's Garden," starring Lionel Barrymore, are the two pictures of this one distributing company that are selected as worthy for places in the list.

The November bulletin of "Exceptional Photoplays" has this to say about the Whitman Bennett production:

"This is a photodrama that is faihful to the spirit and treatment of the novel it picturizes. In these days when so much fiction, popular and otherwise, is distorted and relabelled for the screen, for no other apparent reason than that picture makers are obsessed with the idea that photoplay action necessitates the switching around of situations, of emotional currents, of characters, and of author's purposes alike, it is encouraging to be confronted with a picture that does not do any one of these things, but seems to say: This story was chosen for its merits as it originally stands."

Classifying "Passion" as an extraordinary production, the reasons for selecting it as an exceptional photoplay include the following:

"Du Barry's story unfolds approximately against the background of fading glory which marked the decline of royalty in France. To the producer it presents the opportunity to work with bold strokes upon an historical canvas on which the whole culture of a period can be reflected. It calls for fidelity to detail in costume and manners and for authentic historical setting.

"It is very gratifying to find that this first foreign picture of importance to be shown in this country since the war sets a standard of which our best producers may well be envious. The appointments of the interior are made with a care that will bring delight to the student of the Louis XV period of decoration, while the formal garden exteriors that represent Versailles recall the works of Watteau.

"When the story plunges into the events of the French Revolution, Mr. Lubitsch shows a skill in crowd composition and the dramatic clash of massed groups which proves that he knows how to get his effects without overloading his scene. He achieves a maximum effect with an economy of means which never leads him in exaggeration."

Metro Arranges Ads for Exhibators

TO assist exhibitors everywhere in the exploitation of "Polly with a Past," the David Belasco play by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, starring Ina Claire, Metro has devoted a considerable portion to the press book supplied with the super-special to stunts and various advertising features that should achieve remarkable results. The preparation of the plan and promotion book disclosed to Metro experts in charge of devising the effective stunts that "Polly with a Past" lends itself to exploitation with perhaps greater facility than nine-tenths of big feature films on the market now, or at times previously, announces a statement from the Pathe headquarters.

Metro's publicity department has outlined two score or more special advertising features, including tie-ups with merchants, with the newspapers, etc., that should put the picture across with a bang. These were selected and are explained in detail in the Metro press book; but the very nature of the title and story of the Ina Claire production is such that when the exhibitor may have exhausted the material prepared by Metro, or in case it should not fit in with his scheme of advertising, it will be an easy matter for him to devise his own.

Of all the stunt suggestions offered to exhibitors by Metro in connection with their showing of "Polly with a Past," perhaps the most novel is the use of a parrot figure — parrots generally being known as "Polly"—in any number of interesting ways. It so happens that the Metro trade-mark is a parrot, and the employment of this feathered talker in a variety of stunts will fulfill the dual purpose of advertising not only the picture, but the company responsible for its production.

Goldwyn Has "Greatest Dozen"

THE dozen pictures for current showing released by Goldwyn are put forth by that producing organization as the strongest group of releases in its history. Several of the pictures are held to be in advance even of Goldwyn's previous highest achievements in distinctive qualities which make for great pictures.

Heading the list is "Godless Men," a Reginald Barker production based upon Ben Ames Williams' novel of adventure on the sea, "Black Pawl." This production has been seen in Los Angeles. Its success at the large California theatre was so pronounced and the demand for further showings so great that at the end of the week it was transferred to Miller's theatre where Goldwyn's "Earthbound" had its long run in Los Angeles.

Another Reginald Barker Production is included in the twelve, a picturization of Graham Moffatt's Scotch comedy, "Bunty Pulls the Strings." In the east are Leatrice Joy, Russell Simpson, Cullen Landis, Casson Ferguson, Raymond Hatton, Josephine Crowell and Edythe Chapman.

In the list is Betty Compson's first production in which she first appears as a star and her first picture since her success in "The Miracle Man." Supporting Miss Compson in "Prisoners of Love" are Roy Stewart, Emory Johnson, Ralph Lewis, Clara Horton, Claire McDowell and Kate Toncray.

Miss Rogers is represented by "Guile of Women" from a story by Peter Clark MacFarlane and directed by Clarence G. Badger. In this production Rogers is seen as a Swedish sailor and gives a character portrayal entirely different from any picture in which he has previously appeared. In the cast with him are Mary Warren, Doris Pawn, Bert Sprotte, Nick Cogley, Lionel Belmore and others.

Mabel Normand is seen in "What Happened to Rosa," from a short story in the Metropolitan. The picture was directed by Victor Schertzinger. Hugh Thompson plays opposite her. Doris Pawn, Tully Marshall and Eugenie Besserer have important roles.

Tom Moore's picture is from a story by Rupert Hughes and is called "Hold Your Horses." Naomi Childers, Sylvia Ashton, and Sydney Ainsworth have prominent parts. It was directed by E. Mason Hopper.

Frank Lloyd is represented by two productions—"A Voice in the Dark," from Ralph E. Dyar's stage murder mystery, and "The Great Lover," a picturization of Leo Ditrichstein's stage success, written by himself and the Hattons.

"The Concert" is an all-star production of Hermann Bahr's stage comedy in which David Belasco starred Leo Ditrichstein. It was directed by Victor Schertzinger. Lewis S. Stone and Mabel Julienne Scott have the leading roles. In the cast are Myrtle Stedman, Raymond Hatton, Gertrude Astor, Russ Powell, Frances Hall and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

":Song of the Soul" in Steady Demand

Reports from Goldwyn exchanges in all parts of the country show a steady demand for "The Song of the Soul," the first of the Messmore Kendall-Robert W. Chambers productions starring Vivian Martin. In many instances this picture has been backed by special exploitation in which Robert W. Chambers, the author, has figured prominently.

Here is pretty Madge Kennedy as she appears in her latest Goldwyn picture, "The Girl With the Jazz Heart"

Kremer Optimistic On 1921 Outlook

Commenting recently on the outlook for 1921, Victor Kremer, president of Victor Kremer Film Features, summarized the situation as having reached the dividing line where exhibitor and producer must choose between heavy losses, as the result of wild speculation, or a continuance of profitable business as the reward of conservative business methods.

"That perennial question, 'What does the coming year hold for me?' was never more applicable to the motion picture industry than it is this year," said Mr. Kremer.

"During the great readjustment, now being brought about in all lines of endeavor, the exhibitor and producer have their selection to make now, not later when the time may be too late.

The speculator seeking immense profits, earned easily through adopting the theory that the public must accept such as he offers, I am afraid will find his illusion early dispelled and instead discover himself taking his reward from Pandora's Box. The level-headed man who bows to conditions as they present themselves may not hope for the gifts that come as the answer to an Aladdin's wand, but he may rest assured that independent of the possible upheaval in the business world his business will prosper and as 1921 gives way to 1922 his books will balance greatly in his favor.

"Moonshine", Mermaid Comedy Finished

"Moonshine" is the quite un-Volstedian title of the latest Mermaid Comedy, starring Lloyd Hamilton which is just being completed at Glendale, Cal., studios under the supervision of Jack White. According to advices to Educational from the Coast the picture will prove Hamilton's greatest effort to date.

In this picture Hamilton has the role of a young moonshiner and as the ignorant but successful youth he supplies a number of unique comedy situations. Beatrice Monson plays opposite. "Moonshine" will be a January release, "High and Dry," featuring Jimmie Adams, being the Mermaid for December.

Box Office Reports and Advance Releases appear in this issue.

"Kismet" Reports Favorable

First-Run Houses Send Fine Reports on the Business Done

"KISMET," the Robertson-Cole super-special, starring Otis Skinner, continues in its nation-wide record-breaking sweep among American first run houses, declares a statement from the Robertson-Cole headquarters. From displays in Eastern theatres where records were broken in such houses as the Strand theatres, of New York City and Brooklyn, the Goodwin theatre, Newark, and Moore's Rialto theatre, Washington, the trend has been westward, but the results have continued uniformly the same, says the statement.

The most congratulatory messages of all sorts continue to flow into the Robertson-Cole offices from all parts of the United States on "Kismet." Clemmer and James, managers of the Winter Garden theatre, Seattle, at the close of their record-breaking week at this new house, wired Robertson-Cole as follows:

"Kindly accept our fullest appreciation of your fair treatment to us from your home office and your branch management here, also our unlimited praise for 'Kismet' which to date has no equal. We feel that nothing could have been more satisfactory for opening the Winter Garden. An immense business far beyond capacity is our reward."

As an evidence of the business which is being done in the Middle West by "Kismet," O. R. Hanson, supervisor for Robertson-Cole, reported from Milwaukee on last Monday that he saw in front of the Strand theatre, crowds awaiting admittance to a "Kismet" showing, which were so large that two policemen had to work continuously to keep space open so that people may use the sidewalks.

Coming further East, J. M. Flynn, manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange at Albany, New York, received from George W. Davids, manager of the Stratford theatre, Poughkeepsie, New York, an excellent wire of praise regarding "Kismet." In his letter he said:

"Just a line to let you know that 'Kismet' broke all holiday records at our Stratford theatre, Poughkeepsie, New York, on Thanksgiving Day. It is a first-class picture and was received with most favorable comment by our thousands of patrons."

As an aftermath to the showing of "Kismet" at the Audubon theatre, New York City, Robertson-Cole has received from Manager Ben E. Jacksen the following letter:

"It affords me great pleasure to attest the tremendous drawing power of 'Kismet' which we regard as an unusually brilliant attraction. It has proven its box office value during its run at this house on upper Broadway. Otis Skinner, already an acknowledged legitimate artist, proved even more wonderful as a screen star.

"Our attendance was big, both matinees and evenings, and we had the S. R. O. sign out practically all the time."

One of the most enthusiastic exhibitors in the whole country on the Robertson-Cole super-special "Kismet," starring Otis Skinner, is Will D. Harris, of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ohio, who showed "Kismet" successfully after one of the biggest exploitation campaigns ever put on in the country. Mr. Harris who wired Robertson-Cole gratulations on the feature as soon as he had screened it several weeks ago, wired during the week when the picture was shown, saying that he had broken his house records for Monday by $200.

Mr. Harris made the showing of "Kismet" at the Grand theatre, Columbus, an event long to be remembered there. Not only did he exhibit the picture to the public but enabled a number of lights of the show world to get their first glimpse of it. For instance, one night during the week he put on a special midnight performance for Ed Wynn and his company, who were playing at the Hartman theatre. Mr. Wynn and his associates staid up until 2 o'clock in the morning to see "Kismet" and went away very enthusiastic over it.

English Conditions Improving

So Says Pathe Executive Here for Big Conference

THE next two months will see England safely through her period of financial and industrial depression is the prediction voiced by Major A. P. Holt, chairman of Pathe Freres Cinema, Limited, who arrived from London last week for personal conference with Paul Brunet on matters intimately affecting the film situation at the present time on both sides of the Atlantic.

"The speedy return of normal financial conditions in England—which cannot be delayed beyond another eight weeks—" said Major Holt, "makes us hopeful soon of effecting some much needed reforms in our methods of film distribution, which are a hold-over from the time of the beginning of the war. I refer to our pernicious system of booking attractions eighteen months in advance. When the war broke out, British exhibitors became frightened, foreseeing, if not a film famine, at least costly delay in securing the class of product that would keep their patrons satisfied. So they ordered long in advance of needed delivery—and the practice has continued.

"This is especially hard on the distributor, who frequently sees no return for product ordered and sold until many months afterward. In the meantime many of these attractions have become passé, which decreases their value to the exhibitor through the natural dissatisfaction of his patrons. It also postpones action on fresh product. All around, the money loss has been considerable. I have gone into the subject exhaustively with Mr. Brunet and also with Elmer Pearson, Director of Exchanges, and have hopes of restoring the practical basis of distribution to English exhibitors which prevailed before the war—together with improvements which progress in the industry has brought about in America."

Major Holt also is a director of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Limited, a corporation owning and operating a large number of the leading picture houses in England outside of London. He declared himself as impressed with the number and palatial character of picture houses in New York City.

The one and only Mary in her role in her forthcoming United Artist picture, "The Love Light"

Drive on "Love" Is Started

Series of "Louise Glaum Tag Days" Expected to Obtain Big Results

A PROMOTION propaganda for "Love," the Louise Glaum special being published nationally by Associated Producers December 5, which promises to have the support of the Hearst newspapers throughout the United States as well as the cooperation of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, has been launched by J. Parker Read, Jr., the producer, announces Sig Schlager.

A series of "Louise Glaum Tag Days" are the basis for the promotion. Five hundred thousand Louise Glaum tags are being distributed to Associated Producers exchanges under the direction of F. B. Warren, general manager of distribution. These tags will be disseminated in downtown districts the day previous to first run—and subsequent—showings of "Love" by clubwomen, society buds and schoolfolk to aid local charity or in such communities where the "Community Chest" or other charity is arranged for at Christmastide the tags will merely be distributed—that is, people will be "tagged"—the suggestion embodied in the heart-enclosed portrait of Miss Glaum underlined with the star's name and the line—"In the name of 'Love'"—being inescapable and therefore constituting an ace of an exploitation stunt.

Jack Smith, of the New York American Christmas Fund, has pledged his cooperation and proceeds of the tag day or days to be held in New York will go to the American Christmas Fund.

Foreign Cast for Pickford

Miss Pickford's Latest Vehicle Shows Foreign Talent in Support

WHAT is described to be a decidedly unusual, yet particularly clever, cast of players will support Mary Pickford in her next United Artists' production, "The Love Light," which has been announced for release by Hiram Abrams, president of the corporation, for January 9th.

Entirely new faces will be introduced to motion picture fans, for in this thrilling production which had its locale in Italy, Miss Pickford was so particular about the characters to be portrayed that she chose practically all of the principal members of her cast while abroad, having them transported to Hollywood, especially for this one production.

Raymond Bloomer, Miss Pickford's leading man, although he has played many roles in America, was secured by Miss Pickford in France. Mr. Bloomer had just returned from playing an engagement in one of the leading theatres in Rome.

Fred Thompson is one of the two Americans appearing in the picture and will be remembered as the chaplain of the 143d Field Artillery, of which Miss Pickford was godmother.

Jean De Briac, who plays Antonio Carlotti, was born in Paris and for two years was leading man for Sarah Bernhardt. Albert Prisco was born in Italy and has spent practically all his life on the stage. Mr. Prisco has been in pictures for some time, but recently appeared on the stage with Louis Weller in "Discovering America," and with Blanche Bates and Robert Edeson.

Evelyn Dumo, who plays the role of Maria in "The Love Light," was brought up on the stage in Italy, and for a number of years was the best known Madonna type for artists in Italy. She appeared with Miss Pickford in "Poor Little Pepina."

To Film New Chester Story

Vitagraph to Do Sequel to "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" Stories

COLLIER'S WEEKLY is the magazine successful in a large field of competitors in bidding for George Randolph Chester's new story, "The Son of Wallingford," which will deal with the adventures of the son of the notorious "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." The new story will be run in four installments in Collier's, the final chapters appearng early in May of the coming year. In its "To Be Continued" form it will be somewhat abridged in order that it may be printed within the four-week period.

The story also will be published in book form under the title of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford's Son," which is the title it will bear in Collier's pages.

Active work by Vitagraph on the screen version will begin immediately after the Christmas holidays under the personal direction of the author. While it is expected that some of the scenes, particularly the interiors, will be made on location in the East and at Vitagraph's Eastern studios at Brooklyn, the bulk of the picture will be made in a small city in the West or Middle West. Mrs. Lillian Chester, who collaborated with her husband on the new story, will accompany the all-star cast when it goes West on location.

"The Son of Wallingford" is not to be confused with Mr. Chester's earlier stories recounting the adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford of "get-rich-quick" fame, although the father is one of the most important characters. It deals rather with his son, James R. the fight in his nature between the good influence of his mother and the questionable instincts and practices of his father. The story is replete with thrills and excitement and affords opportunities for a most spectacular production, declares Vitagraph.

Pathe Signs Up New Series

Two-Reelers Based on Holman Day Stories; Edgar Jones as the Star

MILLIONS of American readers of out-door, red-blooded stories, who for years have read "Down East," written by Holman Day, the Maine bard and literateur, will soon see his works re-created upon the motion picture screen.

This will be accomplished through a contract just arranged by Pathe Exchange, Inc., which, in its first announcement of the New Year, tells of the acquisition of "The Holman Day Series." This series is to be composed of two-reel productions starring Edgar Jones, and will be based upon the famous stories written by Mr. Day around his experiences in the Maine woods.

Every one of the Holman Day series of two-reelers will be produced in the actual country wherein the author found his atmosphere and his characters. The Edgar Jones Productions, Inc., has established headquarters at Augusta, Me., from where they can readily enter the country Mr. Day centered his stories in.

Of the pictures that have been completed, such nationally known places were used for location, as Moose Head Lake, Dead River, Lake Umbogog, the Upper Penobscot, and the Kennebec River. Mr. Day's readers are as familiar with this country, virtually, as the author himself, so vividly did he draw his pen pictures of the localities.

Edgar Jones, who is starred in these productions, is known for his striking characterization of manly heroes. He makes an ideal portrayer of the principal characters around whom Mr. Day wove his romances and his adventures.

"The Furnace" Wins Favor

Reports to Realart's Home-Office Say Picture is Scoring Everywhere

"THE best drama of real life I have ever seen." This is what motion picture patrons had to say about Realart's William D. Taylor production, "The Furnace" when it opened the Garrick theatre in St. Paul—and packed the house during the entire run.

"For opening attraction at Garrick theatre, St. Paul, we selected 'The Furnace' because we knew it would bring them in," says a telegram to Realart from Finkelstein and Rubin, Minneapolis, December 15. "It exceeded expectations. Have done capacity business. Heard patrons say best drama of real life I ever saw. Greatest emotional acting ever seen here. Exceedingly pleased with showing and look forward to wonderful business soon in Minneapolis. Congratulations."

From other sections of the country where the super special is being shown come similar reports. Inclement weather and the Christmas shopping season proved poor opposition when "The Furnace" was shown at the Palace theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.

"'Furnace' making wonderful run here in spite of bad weather and shopping season," wires Manager Howard J. Smith of that theatre. "Everyone well pleased. Several came back second time to see it."

Further evidence of the strength of the picture as a box office attraction is found in the flood of bookings coming in on the special

Newspaper reviews and comments have also been unusually favorable.

Childhood and age, with all the Years between, will take delight in this fantastic, bright romance of a wonder girl and her wonder night..

Author Cooperates with Director

Calvin Johnston, the "Saturday Evening Post" author, has arrived in New York in order to work with George D. Baker in the production of Mr. Johnston's story, "Temple Dusk," which Sawyer and Lubin are presenting as a special George D. Baker Production. Mr. Johnston refused seven other offers for his great story, because he especially desired that "Temple Dusk" should be directed by Mr. Baker, whose reputation as a director of power and vision, best qualified him for the task.

The first thing that Mr. Johnston did upon arriving in New York, from his home in Kansas City, was to congratulate Mr. Baker upon his continuity of the story, which greatly elaborated upon the fiction version as published in short story form.

Mr. Johnston has long been an admirer of the work of Anna Q. Nilsson and Robert Frazier, and after seeing them work in "Temple Dusk" he has decided to write a novel in which they will figure as the principal characters.

Mr. Baker is using the studio night and day, in order to finish the feature before Christmas. After Mr. Baker has cut and assembled the film, it will be tried out before a city audience, in order that its audience appeal may be correctly gauged. Sawyer and Lubin believe that by testing their features in this way, they will be able to release only productions that are one hundred per cent box-office attractions.

"The Silver Lining" Is Based on Fact

According to a statement from the Metro headquarters in New York, the story unfolded in the production, "The Silver Lining," is based on truth despite the unusual character of the tale. "It is a slice of real life," states Metro, "as observed personally by Mr. West, who penned the original story and then directed the picture." The heroine is a girl who is projected from the life of a small town into the giddy whirl of the life of the demi-monde, and who after many thrilling adventures, becomes a matron of high social standing unsuspected by her associates as to the true character of her earlier life.

C. L. Chester at Coast After Trip East

C. L. Chester, head of the C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., creators of the Chester Outing Scenics and two-reel Chester Comedies, released through Educational Exchanges, reached his home in Los Angeles just in time for Christmas after a trip to New York for consultation with E. W. Hammons, president of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Mr. Chester was reported as delighted with the booking reports that he was shown and further definite plans for both the comedies and the Chester Outings were laid. "Beat It," the comedy for January release, is already in the New York offices and a supply of Outings sufficient for the next six months have been completed.

Rothacker Returns from Coast

WHEN Watterson R. Rothacker returned to Chicago after a fortnight upon the Coast, he brought with him the contractor's promise to have the Hollywood laboratory completed in January. The formal opening is planned for sometime in February. Mr. Rothacker and members of the executive staff will attend.

"While in Los Angeles I saw Al Kaufman's super-feature, 'Man, Woman, Marriage,' which is one of the most expensive and portentous pictures of the year and which will play an important part on the First National program of 1921," said Mr. Rothacker. "This picture was directed by Allan Holubar with Dorothy Phillips in the leading role.

"I was among the those present crowd at a delightful dinner given by Arthur S. Kane in honor of Charles Ray, at the Beverly Hill Hotel. The dinner was marked by wonderfully enthusiastic predictions concerning the future of First National and Associated First National. We will begin printing Ray's coming production, "The Old Swimming Hole," in the Chicago laboratory the first of the year.

"I found Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven hard at work at the Chaplin studios finishing their next First National release. Louis B. Mayer is particularly enthusiastic about Anita Stewart's picture, 'Sowing the Wind,' which soon will be published thru First National. At the Mayer studios Edwin Carewe was making progress on, 'The Tornado,' starring Anita Stewart. When I left the coast Mr. Mayer was completing arrangements to receive Mildred Harris on her return to the Coast to start another Mayer-made feature.

"Mr. Fineman, of the Katharine McDonald Company, told me that Miss McDonald's next First National picture will be the biggest ever, replete with thrills and big moments.

"I was a guest at a delightful dinner party given by Gloria Swanson, on the occasion of the birthday of her husband, Herbert Sonborn. The toast of the evening was to the hostess' little daughter, who, by common consent, was acknowledged to be the most wonderful and beautiful baby in California, if not in all the world. The guests at Miss Swanson's home included Eileen Percy, Elliott Dexter, Ann Forrest, Mr. and Mrs. Al Kaufman and Major Levy of aquazone fame. Later in the evening we adjourned, for dancing, at the Alexandria Hotel, where we were joined by Adolph Zucker and Sid Grauman.

"It was my good fortune to be at the Ray studios to see the big prize fight scene which will be the punch in Ray's 'Scrap Iron.' Things are humming on the Christie lot, King Vidor is nearing the completion of 'The Sky Pilot' for Catharine Curtis Corporation. Miss Curtis and her executive staff were in consultation with a big coast producer in regards to a wonderful super-special which Miss Curtis predicts will be the box office leader of 1921.

"While there has been a bit of a lull on the Coast since the departure of Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, it was the general opinion that conditions are rapidly returning to normal and will start up with a bang again as soon as the Colonel again favors the Coast with his presence."

Statement from Benj. Hampton

THE general economic and financial readjustment as it affects the motion-picture industry is discussed in a statement just issued by Benjamin B. Hampton, the motion-picture producer. Mr. Hampton says:

"There is the same settling down process in motion pictures as in all other lines of industry today. We have been engaged in a grand financial and industrial orgy—and this is the "morning after." I suspect that the exhibition, distribution and production of motion pictures is suffering less from the general reorganization than most industries, due largely to the cash system under which the industry operates. That is to say, the manufacturing and distributing branches of this industry do business on a cash basis. No extensive lines of bank credits have ever been available to picture producers, excepting, of course, the largest corporations which are allied with Wall Street. Although these large corporations dominate the industry, the largest number of people in the industry are employed by the several scores of corporations not allied with Wall Street, and the practice of their concerns is to function without extensive bank credits.

"Consequently the moving picture business, as a whole, is practically a cash business, and when a period of financial contraction occurs there are no extensive readjustments because of enormous bank credits.

"One may say with safety that pessimism in regard to this industry is ill-founded. No one who studied the workings of the industry in the winter of 1918-19 can be alarmed by present conditions. Early in November, 1918, the armistice was signed with the result that war pictures immediately became unsalable. Then came the third great blow—the nation wide epidemic of influenza.

"Consider for a moment the meaning of these statements. Consider an industry injured by the armistice, as all industries were injured, and then think of that industry having ninety-five per cent of its outlet closed for nearly two months. What other industry could have endured such conditions and come through in the spring of 1919 in a healthy condition? Ninety-five per cent of the outlet for pictures was closed, and yet by the spring of 1919 the industry was back to normal, and by the summer of 1919 was in a highly flourishing condition.

"This present settling down experience is unpleasant, of course, but it is merely a temporary annoyance.

Daisy Robinson, playing a lead in Irwin V. Willat's "Partners of the Tide." Release by Hodkinson

"Movie Mad" Set for January Release

"Movie Mad," a two-reel Christie Comedy which will be released through Educational Exchanges early in January, is said to be the first comedy ever made that is really based on "kidding" film comedies. It is based on the admiration of a visiting young woman in Los Angeles for a comedian and the desperate means to which her sweetheart resorts to cure her of the infatuation. Dorothy Devore and Neal Burns are the featured players.

Edward Lewis to Star Gladys Brockwell

A melodramatic romance of the Pacific Coast is the latest contribution to the Pathe feature schedule from Edgar Lewis, whose elaborate production of "The Sage Hen" is to be released by Pathe on January 23.

The title role is played by Gladys Brockwell. The remainder of the cast is made up of Lillian Rich, seen with H. B. Warner in several of his Pathe vehicles; Wallace MacDonald, Alfred Aller, Arthur Morrison, James Mason and Helen Case.

Gambling Resort Used as Metro Setting

All of the famous racing and gambling resorts of Tia Juana, Mexico, below the southern boundary of California, have been converted into a gigantic picture setting to be seen as one of the unique spectacles of Metro's special production of "Sorrentina," the photo-drama by Donn Byrne in which Viola Dana is now engaged at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

Under special arrangement with the authorities at the Mexican Monte Carlo, special races were scheduled, all of the well-known characters of the tracks and gaming resorts were prevailed upon to appear before the camera, and a scene such as never attempted before has been "shot" for the screen, declares Metro.

Chester Series Announced

Educational to Release Shortly New Scenic and Adventure Series

EDUCATIONAL is soon to announce the release of what is described to be one of the most unique series of scenic and adventure pictures ever made, as the result of a trip just completed by Fred White of the Chester Outing Camera staff made on a cruise of "The Bear," U. S. Coast Guard, on its annual trip to the northernmost point of the American Continent. It is said to be the first time that a camera man has enjoyed such a privilege and that the pictures that resulted more than justified the five months' time expended.

"The Bear" has fought the Arctic ice pack for nearly fifty years. It sprang into fame in the early eighties when it was given by England to this country for a relief expedition to find General Greely. Its annual voyages begin at Seattle with the route lying through the Behring Sea to Cape Barrow. On this last cruise, which has just been ended, there were many thrilling experiences in the ice floes which the camera has recorded, far north of the route of any other vessel.

The releases will include the complete story of the seal from pup to fur coat taken on Pribiloff Islands; another gold mining near Nome, a third a trip across the Arctic ocean, flavored with Eskimo life and polar bears, another life in the Aleutian islands, a fifth the story of the King Islanders who cross Behring Strait with their wives and families in skin boats to work in the Nome mines. There is a strong touch of the international situation in another picture which tells of the trip of "The Bear" across the Behring Sea to Siberia where it sent a landing party ashore at Anadyr to relieve an American trading post which had been captured by the Bolsheviki.

Showing the score of the Chester Camera work it was at the same time that White was making the trip on "The Bear" that another cameraman was at the very southernmost tip of the world, south of Punta Arenas, making another series of Chester-Outing Educationals.

Larkin to Leave Mayflower

Will Go to Coast to Handle Publicity for Pickford and Fairbanks

Mark Larkin, who is leaving Mayflower to take charge of publicity for Fairbanks and Pickford

ANNOUNCEMENT was made today from the office of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation that Mark Larkin who for the past year has been director of publicity and advertising for that organization will leave for the Coast shortly after the first of the year to take active charge of publicity for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

Up until the time Larkin assumed charge of Mayflower's press and advertising department, he was in the employ of Miss Pickford as her personal publicity representative; so in making this change he feels that he is going back home.

Larkin will probably return to Coast immediately after the first of the year along with Hiram Abrams, head of the United Artists, and Dennis F. O'Brien, of the firm of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll, who handles the legal affairs of both Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford.

The post of publicity director for these two stars is considered to be one of the most important positions of its kind in the entire industry. Never before has the task of handling personal publicity for two stars of their magnitude been undertaken by one man, but because of his previous experience in the Pickford organization and his wide acquaintanceship in the Fourth Estate. Larkin is believed to be fully qualified to fill the place.

"We regret very much to lose Mr. Larkin," said John W. McKay, general manager of the Mayflower organization, "because we consider him the best man in his line in the business. It was because of his excellent record with Miss Pickford, during which he designed the famous Pickford Liberty Loan poster and was responsible for making Our Mary 'America's Honorary Ace' and 'Little Sister of the Navy' that he was engaged by Mayflower. While with our concern he continued his splendid work by putting over the National Salesgirl Beauty Contest."

Pathe to Release "The Killer" January 30

The Benjamin B. Hampton production of "The Killer," which Pathe has announced for release January 30th, will bring to the screen another work from the pen of Stewart Edward White, one of the foremost modern writers of American outdoor life. Frank Campeau, Jack Conway, Clair Adams, Frank Haynes, Zack Williams, Frankie Lee, and for the role of the jockey that most famous of all racing saddle experts, Tod Sloan, are members of the cast.

Dorothy Phillips, star of "Man, Woman and Marriage," a forthcoming First National release

Cleveland's many admirers of Mary Miles Minter, Realart star, were recently given an unusual opportunity to see their favorite on the screen. The occasion was the week of November 24, when six different theatres presented Miss Minter in Realart productions.

At the Mall and Alhambra she appeared in her latest picture, "Eyes of the Heart." She was also seen in "Jennie, Be Good" at the Lake View Tuesday and Wednesday. In "Sweet Lavender" she came to the Nemo Tuesday and Wednesday, to the Union on Thursday and Friday, and to the Denison Square on Thursday. "A Cumberland Romance," another of Miss Minter's Realart pictures, was shown at the New Palace.

"White Moll" Scores Again in Indiana

The Indianapolis branch of the Fox organization reported to the home office under date of December 10 that Manager Charles Sweeton, of the Northside theatre, Evansville, Ind., had expressed his delight at Pearl White's triumph in "The White Moll," as follows:

"Pearl White in 'The White Moll' opened to record breaking business. At night traffic was blocked for three hours. Wonderful story, wonderful star, wonderful picture. Congratulations to Fox Film Corporation on producing a feature of such merit."

Russell Smith Joins Celebrated Players

Russell G. Smith, after three and one-half years as service manager for Universal's Chicago office, has resigned to take up new duties with J. L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation at Chicago. He is considered one of the squarest, most conscientious and efficient executives in the film business.

Pathe announces that January 16th has been set for the release of the Jesse D. Hampton production, "When We Were Twenty-one," starring H. B. Warner. The picture is based on the former stage success of the same title, in which Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott scored notable triumphs in London in 1901 and later in New York. Mr. Warner is seen in the role of Richard Carewe played by Nat Goodwin in the spoken version.

All the aids at the disposal of the picture producer have been incorporated into the screen version of the former stage play to emphasize the dramatic effects of the situations, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters. Rich settings, fine photography and a judiciously selected cast are some of the features of the new Jesse D. Hampton production, according to the Pathe statement.

In the cast besides Mr. Warner will be seen James Morrison, Christine Mayo, Claire Anderson, Minna Grey and Claude Payton.

First Seitz Feature Is Set for December 26

Produced on a lavish and spectacular scale, "Rogues and Romance," which will head the Pathe schedule of releases on December 26th, will be sure-fire box-office insurance, declare Pathe officials. George B. Seitz has produced this, his first feature, with the many thrills and suspense of a serial, in addition to a close fidelity to correct detail and atmosphere.

Agnes Johnstone Will Write for Metro

"Home Stuff," an original story by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey, has been purchased by Metro as Viola Dana's next starring production following the completion of "Sorrentina." Coincident with this announcement came the statement that Miss Johnston has signed a contract with Metro to write a series of stories.
and scenario by Jules G. Furthman

Fox Lists January Attractions

Strong Schedule With Leading Fox Stars Announced

THE provision William Fox has made for supplying picture showmen with attractions during the first month of 1921 presents an attractive array of offerings with some of the most popular Fox stars featured. There is a definite release date set for the William Russell, Shirley Mason, Louise Lovely, Eileen Percy, Buck Jones and Pearl White attractions, with dates still to be selected for Tom Mix and George Walsh offerings that are completed and ready for exhibition.

Following the release of Buck Jones in "Two Moons," on December 19, the next feature introducing that new star in the Fox constellation will be "The Big Punch," originally announced as "Fighting Back"—a photoplay written by Jules G. Furthman who also made the scenario. The date to "The Big Punch" is January 30. In the organization Jones will be Barbara Bedford, his new leading lady; George Seigmann, Jennie Lee and others. Jack Ford directed this one with Frank Good as cameraman.

George Walsh got under way across the screens with "Number 17" in the week ending December 18, and preparations are active for presentation of the athletic Fox star in "Dynamite Allen" as follow-up, although a definite release date has not been fixed. The story and scenario of "Dynamite Allen" were furnished by Thomas F. Fallon, with Dell Henderson directing and Charles E. Gilson as cameraman. There will be an uncommonly large company presented in support of Walsh, with Edna Murphy, Dorothy Allen, Carola Parsons, Mrs. Lottie Ford and Nellie Parker Spaulding in prominent roles. Bryon Douglas, F. Thornton Baston and Brigham Royce will lead among supporting males.

Louise Lovely starts the New Year for Fox star, presenting on January 2 "Partner of Fate," a picture made from a story by Stephen Chalmers. Bernard Durning directed Miss Lovely in this offering from a scenario by Robert Dillon with Glen MacWilliams cameraman.

On January 9 William Russell will start his rounds with "The Cheater Reformed," a photoplay which was directed by Scott Dunlap. Seena Owen is Mr. Russell's leading lady in this offering, with Sam De Grasse as the villain in the case. Ruth King and Jack Brammall enact roles that are secondary only in interest to the leads.

Eileen Percy's January date is the 16th, and the play she will present carries the questioning title, "Why Trust Your Husband?" George E. Marshall, who directed Miss Percy in this offering, shares honors with Paul Cazeneuve in credit for the story. Lucian Androit was the cameraman. In support of Miss Percy the lead employs Harry Meyers, with Hayward Macks, the trouble-making villain. Milla Davenport, Janes Miller and Bess True have prominent supporting roles.

Tom Mix presented "Prairie Trails" under releasing date of December 26—as the liveliest of holiday offerings—his following attraction will be "The Road Demon," for which a definite date has not as yet been provided. As it will be offered at latest early in the second month of the year it seems fitting to mention "The Road Demon" among the coming events. This feature was written and directed by Lynn F. Reynolds, and will show Claire Anderson as Mix's leading lady, with George Hernandez in a prominent role.

Shirley Mason in "Wing Toy" is the Fox release January 20. This feature, directed by Howard M. Mitchell, was made from Pearl Dole Bell's story, with scenario by Thomas Dixon, Jr. Edward Dodds acted as assistant to Director Mitchell, and the cameraman was Glen MacWilliams. Raymond McKee is Miss Mason's leading man, with Harry Northrop the heavy and Betty Schade playing second lead.

Mention of Pearl White's January release completes the list for that month. Miss White's "The Thief" has been reported as rounding out big audiences for exhibitors ever since its release on November 29, and a sufficient time will elapse to give showmen every advantage of Miss White's popularity in "The Thief" before January 23 brings "The Mountain Woman." This feature was adapted from Charles Neville Buck's story, "A Pagan of the Hills."

Ray No Longer "Hayseed"

Plays the Village Dude in His New Story "Nineteen and Phyllis"

CHARLES RAY has added another characterization to his repertoire in "Nineteen and Phyllis," which will be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and according to report, the new role is a justification of the theory that he would be permitted to get away from the "country boy" role. In his forthcoming release, the third from his own studios, he enacts the role of the small town dude and his trials are tribulations in trying to hold his own in the clothes and entertainments line on a salary of $18 a week against his rival who is the only son of the village magnate, is said to be the most humorous series of incidents that the young actor has ever had the opportunity of portraying.

It is significant that the second production that takes Mr. Ray out of the role that made him one of he most popular stars on the screen is also the second one to be directed by Joseph De Grasse. It is understood that the procuring of Mr. De Grasse as a director of Charles Ray productions was accomplished through the wishes of the star himself because the director held the same thought as did Mr. Ray—that the actor was versatile enough to gain fame in other roles than that of a "farmer boy."

The success which has greeted "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" in which Mr. Ray portrays the part of Kid Burns, a character far removed from a "hayseed" and in "Nineteen and Phyllis," shows the actor's ability in these roles.

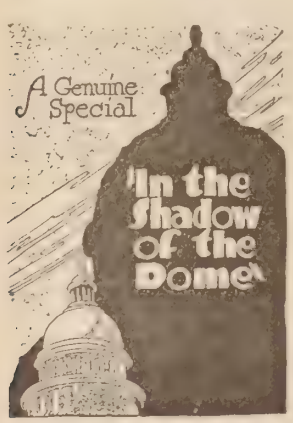
"Slave of Vanity" Scoring

Robertson-Cole's Special Plays to Big Business in All Sections



THE success of "A Slave of Vanity," the Robertson-Cole super-special, starring Pauline Frederick, is hailed by the releasing organization as another proof of the warm welcome which is being given the English dramatist in America. There is a vogue evident for the plays of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, from whose "Iris," "A Slave of Vanity" was adapted, as screen vehicles. None being shown is enjoying a greater measure of success than the Pauline Frederick production, declare Robertson-Cole officials. Released late in the fall season, this attraction has played in first run houses all over the country to big business.

Besides the list of houses recently made public which played "A Slave of Vanity" first run, many additional theatres have shown it, the newspaper reviews and the business both paying high tribute to the production. On a long list of houses which recently have shown "A Slave of Vanity" are:

The McCoy, Baltimore; The Republic, Jacksonville, Fla.; The Pantages, Toronto, Can.; The Ideal, Columbia, S. C.; The Allen, Akron, O.; The Grand, Columbus, Ga.; The T and D theatre, San Jose, Cal.; The Playhouse, Wilmington, Del.; The Lyric, Miami, Ariz.; The City Square theatre, Atlantic City; The Liberty, Houston, Tex.; The Plaza, Salem, Mass.; The Apollo, Tacoma, Wash.; The Orpheum, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

A perusal of this list will show that the first Pauline Frederick production for Robertson-Cole has played from one extremity of the country to another, having been the choice of most discriminating exhibitors, and having pleased all sorts of audiences.

The success of "A Slave of Vanity" is based directly upon its fitness as a story for Miss Frederick, the extraordinary opportunities which it gives her for emotional acting, and the sumptuous and colorful way in which it was put on the screen. Laid in England, its action shifts to Italy, and then back to the slums and fashionable streets of London.

A David G. Fischer Production

The following New Year's greeting to authors is extended by Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures:

"We want our authors to give the same time and care to their photoplays that they give to their books and spoken plays. Progressive writers have come to realize that the screen furnishes a distinct medium of artistic expression as varied and powerful as that of the written page or the spoken play. In order to get the close supervision by the authors over their stories we are willing to pay handsomely and to give their scenarios an artistry of production of which they will be proud."

New Americanization Plan

Rothacker Would Show Films in Steerage on Transatlantic Trip

IN the steerage of every ship that brings immigrants to these shores Watterson R. Rothacker would like to see motion pictures projected which would give the newcomers the right start in America.

"Last time I was in New York I had occasion to visit Ellis Island," said Mr. Rothacker. "I was impressed with the urgent need of planting seeds of Americanism among the immigrants.

"Newcomers are pouring into the Port of New York by the thousands. The melting pot will melt some of these, others will turn out to be undesirable. We should start the fire under the melting pot before the immigrants step foot on the land of great opportunity.

"Let's show them motion pictures on the way over so that when they pass the Statue of Liberty they will be on the right track toward later regarding that statue as a symbol to be preserved rather than something to be torn down.

"Let's get in the first word with these people—tell them our message of Americanism before they fall into the hands of the professional sowers of discontent.

"The conditions would be most propitious for the seeds thus sown to bear fruit. The immigrants are in the critical period of their lives as the ship plows her way over the Atlantic. They are starting life anew. Their minds are open to impressions. The slightest influence at such a time would have great bearing upon the future of these. America should waste no time in making sure that the first influences are for good.

"It would not be necessary to produce new films. There are a wealth of pictures already on hand which could be diverted to this purpose merely by retitling.

"Let's take these people into our confidence. Tell them about ourselves, our country and our ideals. Among other things tell them in advance that New York, Philadelphia and Chicago are not all there is to America—show them films of rural America where men are needed to till the soil. In the few days before they come to us let's give them a helping hand to become one of us."

"Two Moons" promises to outrank its popular predecessor in the Buck Jones series.

Besides Buck Jones, the star, and Carol Holloway, the leading woman, the cast assembled for "Two Moons" includes such favorites as Gus Seville, Bert Sprotte, Slim Padgett, William Ellingford, Louis Fitz Roy, Eleanor Gawne, May Foster, Dick La Reno, Jim O'Neill, Edward Peil and William Wallingford. Edward J. Le Saint directed.

Globe Trotter Among Metro's Writers

Some of the most remote corners of the world are destined to find their way to the screen in future Metro productions through the acquisition by that company of original film contributions by John Russell, author, globe trotter and former representative of the United States abroad.

Mr. Russell is one of the noted writers acquired by Bayard Veiller, director of productions for Metro's West Coast studios, during his recent visit to New York. Among the other additions to the company's growing staff of story producers are Montague Glass, Arthur Somers Roche and Gene Buck.

No Rest for Keaton Co. between Pictures

Buster Keaton and his company of fun-makers, who are making a series of two-reel comedies for Joseph M. Schenck, which are being released through Metro, do not believe in hesitating long between pictures. "The Haunted House," the fifth Keaton comedy, was completed one day last week and the following morning witnessed the start of number six. This latest picture as yet has no title.

Skeptical Exhibitors Now Welcome "Play-and-Pay-After"

"THIS play-and-pay afterward plan of marketing the big Mayflower specials makes a fascinating study from a dozen different trade angles."

The speaker was John S. Woody, general manager of Realart and the remark was called forth by a letter he had just received from an exhibitor who had just played the productions under the new plan. This man admitted frankly that he had been skeptical about Realart's sincerity at the outset. But he comes back handsomely, by paying a glowing tribute to the plan itself, closing with the significent remark that in the future he will know what to expect because he realizes now that "Realart is on the square."

"This man's letter is typical," continued Mr. Woody. "I do not know how it is in other industries, but in ours, whenever any radical departure in selling method is made the burden of proof is put right up to the producer; the exhibitor must be shown.

"With any move so revolutionary as the play-and-pay afterward plan it was squarely up to Realart to back up its preliminary statements with the goods themselves. That, of course, we were prepared to do. The reception of this plan, for us, is one of the highlights of the closing year. It has opened up new avenues of thought and I am sure its influence will be felt in our own sales policies of the future—and perhaps in the sales policies of many other concerns.

"At first the average exhibitor who received our proposition was dazed. It was too good to be true. He strung along with the old farmer who declared on seeing a giraffe for the first time: There ain't no such animal!' He kept looking for the joker in the deck. Finally he wrote in (dozens of him): 'Well, I'll bite. What's your game? Let's have your proposition — I want to take it apart and hunt for the catch in it.'

"But there wasn't any catch and when this simple truth sunk into the understanding of the exhibitor he was frank and square enough to play the game and sign up for the five specials.

"The exhibitor who wrote this letter touches on this very point. His first impressions probably have been used by many others. He says: 'When we read your letter stating that we could have these films at our own price it was such an unusual offer that we thought it must be a gag of some kind.'

"This man is now determined to make amends for his former lack of confidence. And to show his good faith he books other pictures.

"He is glad of our faith in him and other exhibitors and he decides then and there that he will trust Realart not only because it pays, but because honor begets honor. To quote his exact words: 'Next time we get a letter from you we will sit up and take notice because we know now that you are on the square.'

"This is only one from scores of letters, but in them all is the same fine response—and the honest desire to deal as squarely with Realart as Realart deals with exhibitors.

"There are five productions released under Realart's Mayflower Specials plan and they are opening up fields that promise great things in the future. Realart, I am confident, has inaugurated that the honor system is an honor system and that we are acting in good faith —just as we expect them to act in good faith.

"At length the exhibitor takes the pictures. He gives them a fair trial, advertises them properly and the pictures do the rest. He discovers that the offer was all Realart claimed for it. He learns that the pictures are really strong features. 'Imagine our surprise,' says the writer of this letter, 'to find every one of these films genuine features and in first class condition.'

"Yet somehow he feels that doesn't quite settle the matter. There's an explanation due, and he adds, significantly: 'Your offer was so unusual that we couldn't believe it was straight.'

"The fact that Realart puts him on his honor—and trusts him—impresses him tremendously. He wants to show us that he is ready to respond to such an appeal. He is honest and he proves it — and right here I want to say that this is one quality that keeps cropping out among exhibitors everywhere in this Mayflower pictures campaign. They are all inherently honest."

Big Cut in Production Noted

J. D. Williams Speaks of Decrease in 1921 Output

IN a statement just issued, J. D. Williams, manager of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., discusses the proposed decrease in production for 1921 as announced in recent statements from some of the principal production centers of the industry. Mr. Williams says:

"From thirty-five reels a week to eighteen reels a year is a far drop, but they are taking it.

"That, to exhibitors, is the result of producer's desire for independence, and this evolution of ideas, methods, and ambitions for personal accomplishment by the independent stars and directors reaching to every producing plant in the industry has a very important meaning to the independent theatre owner.

"Where two years ago the trade commonly accepted statements that such and such centralized producing units would provide a total of from twenty-eight to thirty-five reels of film a week, we now find the majority of producers, stars and directors making plans for 1921 with an average output per unit of eighteen reels a year.

"This is probably the most drastic and complete change in production policy that the industry has ever witnessed in a single season. It opens to debate and prediction a score of vital and purse-hitting questions of what the result will be to exhibitors and to the producers themselves.

"It is a big step forward in the evolution of the industry, and one which has been anticipated and discussed for more than a year.

"Production standards have reached the point where the method best known as 'supervised by' is no longer safe and successful.

"As recently as two years ago a number of popular stars and directors, whose pictures today are in greater demand than ever before, made and released an average of eight attractions a year.

"Now we find their schedules of activity for 1921 literally cut in half with plans for three and not more than four pictures to be made in the coming twelve months. Compare this new rate of production with that of five years ago. It is very significant. It means that each release from the capable, recognized production leaders will receive more time, more thought, more attention to detail, and far more care in the actual course of production, with the result that the finished attractions are bound to reveal on screen examination an unprecedented degree of entertainment quality as the result of an amazing curtailment in production volume with an equally amazing increase in production quality.

"Mr. Joseph M. Schenck will produce but four pictures next year in which Norma Talmadge will be starred, and but four pictures in which Constance Talmadge will be starred, in contrast to six productions from each of the girls during 1920.

"Charles Ray will make not more than four pictures during 1921, whereas previously he has made as many as eight releases a year.

"Marshall Neilan is perhaps one of the greatest present-day exponents of limited volume and quality results. He has made but four pictures in 1920, and it is neither exaggeration nor inappropriate publicity to say that there is no director who as a producer giving his personal attention to every detail of every release for which he is responsible has forged ahead more rapidly or has risen to greater heights in the estimation of exhibitors and public than the man who directed 'The River's End,' 'Don't Ever Marry,' 'Go and Get It' and 'Dinty.'

"Mr. Louis B. Mayer is another producer who has deserted the folds of the six and eight year adherents and who is going to limit his productions for 1921 to not more than four pictures, because he cannot give his personal attention to more than that number."

Vitagraph's New Serial

"Purple Riders" to Be Released Soon, to Have Thrilling Action

DESIGNED to be a classic of the West that was, "The Purple Riders," Vitagraph's new Western serial, scheduled for release shortly after the new year, will, it is claimed, delight millions of Americans and meet the new public demand for this colorful and exciting type of production. Joe Ryan, one of the few real cowboys in pictures, and a star of note, not only plays the lead in the new chapter-play, but is directing it. Associated with him are a group of the wildest riders and ropers the West can offer, men with whom he rode the plains before any of them had heard of motion pictures.

The horse riding fetes alone of the "Purple Riders" will delight thrill-seeking spectators, says Vitagraph. There are no better riders anywhere, it is asserted, than in the cast of this picture, and the star is renowned as one of the greatest horsemen in the world. Expert lariat work, and gun play with real ammunition, introduced into tense situations, make this serial one that will keep the spectators out of their seats.

"The Purple Riders," in the language of the cowboys in it, is going to be a rip-roarin' story of the old frontier and because Vitagraph has ordered them to give the public the West at its wildest, they are taking unusual chances for stunts to make the pictures thrilling.

Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffett wrote the story of "The Purple Riders," and have expressed themselves as well pleased with the filming of their creation. Seven episodes have already been seen at Vitagraph's Eastern Executive Offices.

Morosco Sees Big Advance

Stage Producer, Making Pictures, Forsees Fewer and Better Films

"FEWER and better pictures. All-star casts instead of individual luminaries being featured. More intelligent discrimination in the selection of the basic story. Greater attention to details in the orderly pyramiding of dramatic effect."

Looking into the future of the motion picture industry, says Oliver Morosco, these are some of the certain developments that are seen. They will come for film productions are to advance, and to advance there are certain definite rules that must be followed, according to Mr. Morosco.

"Camera cranks have been turning like machine guns," said Mr. Morosco. "The footage has been astounding, statistically speaking. Of course, the result must be obvious. Quantity production. There have been good pictures and the silver screen has produced genuine genius. But the day of fewer and better pictures is here.

"I so firmly believe this that while we are starting with enough proved stories and material to keep our cameras turning for at least three years, we will produce only four pictures in our first twelve months. Each of our productions will be a 'feature' for we have gone into this with the determination that each picture must measure up to our own very critical standards before being released.

"We have started our first picture, "The Half Breed," after months of careful preparation. It is my idea to achieve realism without the stilted effects. For instance, our cameraman worked for three weeks in New Mexico with 2,500 head of range before catching a certain required effect."

British Film Leader Here

Arthur Clozenberg Visits America to Confer With Universal's Chiefs

MR. ARTHUR CLOZENBERG, managing director of the Film Booking Offices, Ltd., of London, arrived in New York aboard the Olympic Dec. 23rd last, for an extended visit. This is the British film man's first visit to the United States in more than a year.

Shortly after Christmas, he will be the guest of honor at a dinner given in the Waldorf-Astoria by Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal. Mr. Laemmle and the British film magnate are warm personal friends, and were together much during the Universal chief's recent visit to England.

Mr. Clozenberg is one of the pioneers in the British film world. He formerly was connected with the Ruffels organization remembered in this country for its gigantic exploitation campaign throughout Great Britain for "My Four Years in Germany," the Ambassador Gerard film. Systematic exploitation is one of Clozenberg's hobbies. The F. B. O. now is waging an energetic publicity and advertising campaign in behalf of "Broken Blossoms" and "Blind Husbands."

Since his last trip to America, Mr. Clozenberg has contracted with Universal to handle the entire Universal output for distribution in England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland. The F. B. O. is one of the largest film distributing corporations in the United Kingdom, and has nine agencies, located in the following cities: Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, Sheffield, Birmingham, Newcastle, Cardiff, Leeds and Dublin, besides the main office in London. This arrangement to distribute Universal pictures was personally arrived at by Mr. Clozenberg and Mr. Laemmle, shortly after the Universal executive's arrival in England last summer. It assures British exhibitors of a steady supply of Universal pictures under booking arrangements not unlike those prevailing in the United States.

It is for the main purpose of becoming acquainted with the personnel of the Universal organization, in its production and distributing branches as well as in its executive section, that the Englishman has come to these shores. He will spend considerable time in New York making a first hand study of Universal methods and conferring with the officials of that company as to the kind of films wanted by the British public.

Laboratory facilities have been enlarged and every known device for the proper production and perfection of motion pictures has been installed and the future product of Ford Educational Weekly and Ford Educational Library will be of a standard which can only be attained by the best artists and the finest equipment. "Mammoth" Neilan Production

Based on Randall Parrish Story; 2,000 in Some Scenes

NEWS of a production described to be a mammoth film, in which over 2,000 persons appear and which has been going on quietly for the past four months, is disclosed in the initial announcement concerning this film, issued by Marshall Neilan. Although no information concerning it has been given out, work on this film has been in progress simultaneously with the production of "Dinty" and "Not A Drum Was Heard," and its announcement accounts for the great activity that has been evident at the Neilan studio during the past few months.

The production, which is now nearing completion under Mr. Neilan's personal direction, presents a visualization of "Bob Hampton of Placer," conceded to be the best work of Randall Parrish, whose many popular books have placed him among the foremost writers of Western stories. Among his other well known works are "When Wilderness Was King"; "My Lady of the North"; "Sword of the Old Frontier," etc. Marion Fairfax prepared the script.

Laid in Montana and Wyoming in 1876 shortly after the close of the Civil War when the Indian uprisings startled the entire country, this subject offers Mr. Neilan the biggest production he has ever attempted to portray on the screen.

One of the great dramatic features of the story and which serves as a spectacularly thrilling climax to the picture, is the famous last stand of General Custer against the Sioux. In planning the reproduction of this historic episode, it was Mr. Neilan's ambition to stage a screen version of the famous massacre so that it would stand out at all times as a genuine accomplishment in motion pictures and serve as a striking tribute to the American frontiersmen. Scouts were sent to all parts of the West to obtain data involving locations and photographic tests and months of advance preparations were made before a single scene had been "shot." Arrangements for the engagement and handling of thousands of persons to, on and from distant locations and plans for the transportation of several carloads of technical apparatus in addition to thousands of uniforms, supplies, horses, ammunition, immense generators for night photography and other paraphernalia took much time and labor, especially in view of the unpopulated plains and mountain locations with difficult approaches.

The use of a dirigible "blimp" in photographing the big scenes for this picture proved a great help in overcoming the problem of obtaining the desired effects for the screen in wild country. Two camera men in this airship were enabled to secure "shots" in a half hour that would have taken weeks of preparation to get through other methods. The advantages of taking these views from a "blimp" rather than the aeroplane are many. The slow speed at which a dirigible travels allows for greater detail than would be possible in "shooting" from a plane. In cases where continuous action at one point was desired, the blimp was anchored to the ground at the height desired, saving the erection of platforms and the climbing of difficult natural heights in search of the proper view.

Another feature of the exceptional merits of this picture, it is pointed out, is the cast. James Kirkwood, in the title role; Wesley "Freckles" Barry in a part specially written into the scenario; Marjorie Daw, Pat O'Malley and Tom Gallery are among the players.

Sub-Titles Featured by Fox

Reports Special Care in Preparation of Sub-titles for Special

WRITERS in the William Fox publicity department, when shown "Blind Wives," in its completed and ready-to-release form in the projection room of Fox Film Corporation, discovered in the subtitles an element of deftness and clearness that give the key to each of the episodes which comprise the Edward Knoblock story of woman's vanity. Those titles were, for the most part, taken from lines used on the stage when "Blind Wives" was presented in its original form as "My Lady's Dress."

These titles have been carefully phrased and distributed throughout the changing incidents in the action and in a way to emphasize the intensely dramatic nature of the photoplay, explains a statement from the William Fox headquarters. It is to be remembered that "Blind Wives" is similar in form of construction—and only thus similar to "While New York Sleeps," the Fox photodrama Mr. Brabin earlier directed with the same principal players as are employed in "Blind Wives."

The dress of a woman of fashion is basis for the entire action. The story complete in scores of scenes and minor episodes, carries as the burden of its narrative the main classifications of a gown in its material, its trimming and its making. The fur, the silk and the flowers that go toward feminine adornment provide the text for tragic episodes each unto itself. Then there is the life of a manikin to be reflected as a gripping episode, with the dream of a fashionable woman—vain, selfish and extravagant—whom is disclosed the tragedy that attends her possession of fine adornment; carrying the thread of the main story and connecting up the several episodes.

The fashion scenes will be of striking interest to women theatregoers. Director Brabin took his company into the Fifth avenue district to picture the scenes that call for a fashionable atmosphere. The most famous dressmaking shop in America was used as settings for the fashion show. Lucile's (Lady Duff-Gordon) establishment was thrown open to Director Brabin and Lucile's own models wore the Duff-Gordon creations that are shown in the Fox presentation.

Educational Starts Drive

Sales Drive Throughout U. S. and Canada Expected to Bring Results

JUST six months after the first of its exchanges opened, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week announced a sales drive through the United States and Canada to bring every office up to the fullest possibilities of its territory.

Because of the necessity of meeting conditions in the various territories and through delay in obtaining just exactly the men who were desired, various exchanges were opened during the first four months that followed the first bookings, Denver, New Orleans and Dallas being the last sections to be represented.

Although many of the territories have already exceeded their original quotas in bookings, a new mark is being set for them in the present drive and at the same time special effort is being put into those exchanges that opened at a later date. It is reported that first run bookings now total almost a hundred per cent of the possibilities and that the second and third runs make only a slightly smaller showing, so that the new effort will now be centered on the smaller theatres and on individual series that in certain territories have not equalled the average.

Educational's product now includes four series of two-reel comedies: Christie, released every two weeks, and the Torchy, Mermaid and Chester series, each one a month. In addition there are weekly releases of single-reel comedies which have just been started, the Vanity and Gayety series alternating. The Bruce Scenics Beautiful and the Chester Outings are the chief representatives in the scenic field with other special miscellaneous pictures from time to time and specials released whenever the officials of the company believe is exceptional from points of view of box office value and audience appeal.

Director Paul Powell has begun active work on his first production for the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, at their London studios. The story of the play is provided by E. Phillips Oppenheim, author of some fifty successful novels.

The story has been adapted for the screen by Margaret Turnbull under the title, "The Mystery Road," and a strong cast has been engaged for the production, including Marion May, a brilliant young Russo-Italian star, who has won marked distinction in Italy for her work in several of the Bernini films; David Powell, Mary Glynn, Percy Standing, Ruby Miller and other well-known British players.

Special Music for Xmas

Nathaniel Finston Arranges Holiday Program for Concert League

AS a result of a recent conference that the executives of the New York Concert League had with Nathaniel Finston, formerly conductor at the Rialto and musical director of the Capitol, New York City, this music-master has been added to its staff of experts. By this arrangement, exhibitors will be supplied with special orchestrations, music lead sheets and music scenarios to fit the size of their respective orchestras and to coincide with the theme of every picture they present, it is announced.

To mark its affiliation of Mr. Finston, the New York Concert League prepared a Christmas program arranged by Mr. Finston, offering a rich variety of selections for the holiday week. This program is being distributed to Exhibitors gratis. A choice of one out of four is allowed in each unit. The program begins with overture selections which include the Raymond Overture, the Dance of the Hours, etc. A light plot follows, giving directions of stage illumination. The second unit suggests the presentation of a scenic or of an educational subject, showing scenes from the Holy Land. Organ and orchestral accompaniment is also given. The third unit offers a marionette novelty, a kiddie dance or a toy specialty, with complete details and directions.

The fourth item deals with the news weekly or magazine; the fifth comprises the solo numbers rendered by soprano or tenor, or quartet. The feature picture comes next, after which the seventh unit, embracing Christmas divertissements follow. This calls for an operetta of short duration. The action is based on Santa Claus and covers a small plot with typical Christmas setting. Singing and dancing accompany the action, while pantomime also figures effectively.

Any exhibitor who has failed to receive the Christmas program can secure it gratis by addressing the New York Concert League at its headquarters, 1664 Broadway, New York City.

On the eve of the new year, J. Parker Read, Jr., member of the Associated Producers, Inc., and producer of the Louise Glaum specials, greets the dawn of 1921 with the following credo:

"I believe the producer and the exhibitor are the joint guardians of the greatest medium known to the world for influencing the thought of people, the motion-picture.

"I believe that this guardianship should be held as an expression of national confidence and that we are able to give a worthy account always of that trust reposed in us.

"I believe that everything in life that is sincere and worthy merits our most earnest efforts of portrayal.

"I believe that the screen through its universal humanity should be made to reach and speak to all men and all nations.

"I believe that since the world is our stage, we should be unhampered by narrow prejudices.

"I believe that our creative horizon expands so rapidly that what has been done in the past but faintly foreshadows the possibilities of the future.

"I believe that with the co-operation of the people, both exhibitor and producer will give to the world greater and more uplifting benefits that will contribute to the realization of the great ideal of the screen."

Trade Mark Placed on Educational Product

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week announced that it had adopted a trade-mark that would hereafter appear on all of its films and in its advertising. For the design the Greek lamp which has been identified with Educational has been retained. In case of titles on the films themselves these will be animated with the smoke spelling out the words "Educational Pictures."

All of the posters, lobby photos, etc., will also bear the same design and a campaign will be conducted through the trade papers to familiarize exhibitors with the new trade-mark.

With this ha. been adopted a slogan, "The Spice of the Program."

Since Educational confines its releases to one and two-reel subjects, it takes the position that it can supply the exhibitor with every portion of his program except the feature and the news weekly and this fact will be emphasized in all future exploitation.

Two scenes from the Metro special production, "Hearts Are Trumps"

Unique Arrangement by Metro

Selection of Armory as Studio Marks Novel Step

IN acquiring the use of the Eighth Coast Defense Armory at Kingsbridge Road and Jerome avenue, New York City, for the construction of the special London street scene in the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production, "A Message from Mars," starring Bert Lytell, Metro Pictures Corporation feels that it has done something not only unique in the history of screen production, but of such permanent value to the industry itself as possibly to modify all future production work in the East.

The decision on the part of Metro officials to utilize one of the city's big armories for the building of the street setting for "A Message from Mars" resulted from a suggestion by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro. The problem presented by the scenic requirements of the first Maxwell Karger Production starring Bert Lytell was brought to Mr. Rowland's attention, for the difficulties attending the construction of a suitable set were manifold and various.

The scenes of the photoplay called for the building of a street in the heart of the city of London, which would present all phases of metropolitan life, and be shown after dark with the ground covered with snow, for the story of the drama is supposed to transpire at night between the hours of eight and eleven. The difficulties, therefore, of building the set on any out-of-door location were manifest, owing to the necessity of working only at night under artificial light and the hazard of inclement weather which would destroy the structures as well as the snow effects.

Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street were carefully considered in the quest for a suitable interior, but the floor space of Metro's eastern production plant was deemed inadequate for the large proportions on which the street set was planned. Any exterior location was out of the question, owing to weather uncertainty and the necessity for working only at night. Mr. Rowland suggested the use of one of the city's huge armories as a solution of the difficulty.

In such a plan, it was determined, the set could be completely constructed on a scale corresponding exactly to the dimensions of the real street itself, and the snow effect created without disturbanec by the elements. Metro officials were quick to act upon President Rowland's suggestion, and the search for a suitable armory began at once. Not only was an armory needed, it was recognized, but one sufficiently large enough to accommodate the elaborate plans of M. P. Staulcup, Metro's art director, who has designed the set in the most realistic fashion.

After a survey of the armories strictly within the city's limits and the discovery that none of them were really spacious enough to permit of the construction Metro contemplated, the Eighth Coast Defense Armory at Kingsbridge Road and Jerome avenue was suggested by N. R. Nanczy, assistant to Mr. Staulcup. Investigation of the Eighth Coast Defense Armory followed, resulting in the rental of the huge military institution for the period of weeks which would occupy the screening of the exterior scenes of "A Message from Mars."

Two Paramounts in December

Lois Weber and Washburn Pictures to Be Released

DECEMBER 19 is the release date of Lois Weber's first production for Paramount, "To Please One Woman," which shares its place on the Paramount schedule with Bryant Washburn in "An Amateur Devil."

The title of Miss Weber's production, the story of which she herself wrote, epitomizes the theme. It is a drama of American life and the scenes are laid in a california seaside town and surrounding country.

The woman in this particular case is one of those dainty, selfish creatures for whom lots of otherwise sensible men give up everything to please. The man is a young country doctor who is loved by a fine girl, but he gives her up when the adventuress comes to town; the shattered romance is just one sample of the selfish woman's influence. Others are vividly given, but in the end, of course, true love wins out.

A beautiful California seaside home is the background for much of the action. The mansion stands on the famous beach at Santa Monica and is the property of a wealthty retired Californian. In making many of the interior scenes, Miss Weber embellished the already sumptuous furnishings with many of her own personal treasures worth thousands of dollars.

Miss Weber long has been known as a discoverer of stars—Mildred Harris is one of them—and in "To Please One Woman" the leading feminine role is played by Claire Windsor, her latest "find," who is both a beautiful blonde and a capable actress. Mona Lisa, she of the beautiful black eyes, is the "vamp," and others in the cast are Edward Burns, formerly leading man for Alice Brady and Elsie Ferguson and seen recently in Wallace Reid's "The Love Burglar" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female;" George Hackathrone, prominent juvenile and seen last with Bryant Washburn in "Too Much Johnson;" L. C. Shumway and Howard Gay.

"An Amateur Devil" is characterized by Paramount as a typical Bryant Washburn picture. Scenarized by Douglas Bronston from the story "Wanted a Blemish," by Jesse Henderson and Henry J. Buxton, the production was directed by Maurice Campbell.

Ann May plays opposite Mr. Washburn, and others in support are Charles Wyngate, Christine Mayo, Sidney Bracey, Norris Johnson, Graham Petty and Anna Hernandez.

Hart Hears of Success of "Testing Block"

News that his latest Paramount picture, "The Testing Block," had broken all Sunday records on the opening day of its engagement at the New York Rivoli was received by William S. Hart while the producer-star was on location at Victorville, Cal. And what made the occasion doubly pleasing for Mr. Hart was the fact that the message, which was sent by one of the Paramount home office executives, came on his birthday.

"The Testing Block" also marks the debut, as Mr. Hart's leading woman, of Eva Novak, who is a younger sister of Jane Novak, who will be remembered as playing opposite the star in "The Silent Man," "Wagon Tracks" and other pictures. Eva had not been on the screen a great while prior to her engagement with Mr. Hart, but she seemed to take naturally to the work, and in the role of Nellie Grey, the demure little maiden who plays the violin with a band of nomadic players in the Far West, she is said to have scored a genuine success.

Donald Crisp Finishes Knoblock Photoplay

The studios of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers at Islington, have entered on a brief period of comparative quiet. Donald Grisp has just concluded work on his production of Edward Knoblock's photoplay, "Appearances," and from all that one can hear, the film promises to be particularly interesting. The theme is one which is of special significance in these days when democratic feeling is well nigh universal, declares Paramount.

The story deals with the struggle of a rising, clever, but reckless young architect to keep up appearances under that outworn system of living beyond one's income.

The cast includes Mary Glynne, Langhorne Burton, Percy Standing, Marjorie Hume and many well known British players.

Week's Vacation for Christie Forces

So far ahead of schedule is the Christie Film Company on its one and two-reel comedies released through Educational Exchanges that Al Christie, director general, has decided to give every member of his companies a unique Christmas present—a full week's vacation at full pay. Following the customary Christmas tree festivities at the studio, the doors will be closed for business until January 3.

Rogers Rises in Favor in 1920

Goldwyn is proud of what the year of 1920 brought to their star, Will Rogers. Each of his pictures has been well received and he is one of the few whose names frolic in electric lights above the largest theatres. In commercial terms, Goldwyn believes, this means that Will Rogers has become a sure fire financial investment for the theatre that books his pictures.

Anders Randolph, Marion Davies and her director, George D. Baker, completing "Buried Treasure," a January Cosmopolitan-Paramount release

Elsie Ferguson Begins Work

Star Resumes Work on "Sacred and Profane Love"; Taylor is Director

AFTER six months of restful travel in Europe and the Orient, Elsie Ferguson has resumed work before the camera. Immediately after her arrival in Los Angeles she started in the star role of "Sacred and Profane Love," from Arnold Bennett's tremendous play. It is a William D. Taylor production for Paramount, with scenario prepared by Julie Crawford Ivers.

Miss Ferguson is enthusiastic over the screen version of the play in which she scored such a remarkable stage success. Rested and revived by her long vacation, the emotional artist started work in the new offering with a strength and fire betokening that the tremendous dramatic situations of "Sacred and Profane Love" will be portrayed as only Elsie Ferguson can do them, declares a statement from the Paramount headquarters.

William D. Taylor has selected his cast with a full appreciation of the production's importance, it is stated. Playing the leading male role of Emilio Diaz is Conrad Nagel, the one-time Broadway matinee idol. Thomas Holding, leading man for Olga Petrova and a score of other stars, has been chosen for the difficult role of Ispenlove, the man whose weak infatuation for Carlotta starts most of the tremendous dramatic situations.

Helen Dunbar appears as the narrow, ignorant but lovable mid-Victorian aunt of Carlotta. The "nosey" Mrs. Sardis is interpreted by Clarissa Selwyn.

The settings of the production have been arranged with the most careful attention to details. Especially noteworthy is said to be the mid-Victorian home and garden of Carlotta and her aunt. Behind its brick walls the bower of forget-menots, larkspur, hollyhocks, bachelor's buttons and roses bloom beautifully in the neat, well-ordered fashion of the period indicated.

2 Hodkinsons in January

"The Spenders," by Harry Leon Wilson, and "The Truant Husband"

TWO productions scheduled for release by Hodkinson during the first month of 1921. The first picture will be "The Spenders," a comedy drama from the pen of Harry Leon Wilson, author of "Ruggles of Red Gap," "Bunker Bean" and in "Ma Pettingill." To the production of "The Spenders" Benj. B. Hampton has given great care, as a result of which he has succeeded in turning out production, perfectly balanced, and with a cast of favorites. To Claire Adams has been entrusted the leading feminine role, while opposite her is seen Niles Welch. Robert McKim contributes a character study. Joseph J. Dowling is seen as "Uncle Peter Bines," a character.

The production which will follow "The Spenders" is to be "The Truant Husband," made by the Rockett Film Company from the Cosmopolitan Magazine story of the same name, written by Albert Payson Terhune.

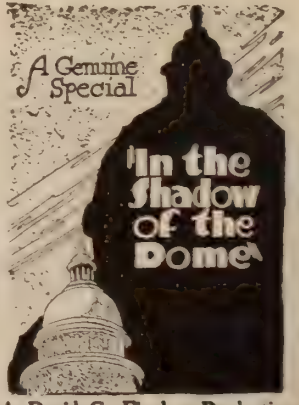
Pantages Theatre Books "The Broken Gate"

The New Orleans office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation reports that "The Broken Gate" has been booked by Pantages big new Louisiana theatre for a seven day engagement beginning December 19th.

Tom Terriss in Third Year with Film

Tom Terriss, director of Tom Terriss Productions for Vitagraph, started his affiliation with the Vitagraph Company three years ago, first directing Alice Joyce, Corinne Griffith and Earl Williams. Since then he has been awarded his own producing company under his name. With Miss Joyce he made such pictures as "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Third Degree," "The Vengeance of Durand," and "The Cambric Mask." With Miss Griffith, "The Climbers," and with Earle Williams "The Fortune Hunter."

The first picture he made with his own producing company was "Trumpet Island," written by Gouveneur Morris. Trade papers, newspapers and fan magazines were unanimous in their praise of the production. Following this, Mr. Terriss has presented the industry with another product of his company in "Dead Men Tell No Tales," the R. W. Hornung mystery story.



Forman to Finish "The Quarry" on Coast

Tom Forman is back at the Lasky studio after spending two months at the Long Island studio of Famous Players-Lasky, directing Thomas Meighan in "The Quarry," from the story by John Moroso. Paul Everton and George MacQuarrie, both well known character actors who have important roles in the production, returned with Mr. Forman.

Mr. Meighan has also returned to Los Angeles, and work was scheduled to be resumed on the picture at the Lasky studio without delay. Lois Wilson is playing the leading feminine role.

Lynch House Opens to Atlanta Public

A party of Famous Players-Lasky executives attended the opening on Monday, December 3, of the Howard theatre, S. A. Lynch's new house in Atlanta, Ga. The formal opening ceremonies included addresses by Governor Hugh Dorsey, Mayor Key and other prominent Atlanta men, all of whom paid glowing tributes to the enterprise of S. A. Lynch and Troup Howard, the Southern financier for whom the theatre was named and who was largely instrumental in its financing.

Elaborate Press Book for Marsh Vehicle

To herald to American exhibitors the return to the screen of Mae Marsh in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," which is a super-special production, Robertson-Cole has published a press book which is designed to give each exhibitor who books this picture a complete and comprehensive campaign for the presentation of "The Little 'Fraid Lady" in the most elaborate manner. The press book shows the artistic posters which have been conceived and executed for the outdoor exploitation of "The Little 'Fraid Lady," by Robertson-Cole experts. The largest of them, the 24-sheet, sets forth the fact that this production is based on "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods," a famous Marjorie Benton Cooke story, and that it was directed by John G. Adolfi. On the next page, A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, gives a selling talk on "Human Interest Stuff."

There follows, in addition to the other features, a list of accessories, including the special accessories which Robertson-Cole is publishing in conjunction with the Reeland Publishing Company, 723 Seventh avenue, New York City, by which the exhibitor may advertise the picture.

Clyde Cook Is Scoring Under Fox Banner

Clyde Cook, who until a few months ago was little known outside of his accomplishments as principal clown and pantomimist at the New York Hippodrome, is rapidly achieving, under the William Fox banner, the much coveted distinction as "the funniest man on the screen," declare officials of the Fox organization.

"The Huntsman," Cook's current picture, according to reports from the Fox offices, is doing a tremendous business throughout the country. "All Wrong," to be released January 9, promises to be even a greater success than "Don't Tickle" or "The Huntsman."

Ethel Clayton Returns to California

Ethel Clayton, star of Paramount Pictures, returns to California shortly before Christmas, according to report and after the holidays will begin work under the direction of Joseph Henabery, on "Sham," adapted from the play by Elmer Harris and Geraldine Bonner.

New studio building at 10th avenue and 54th street, New York, leased by William Fox

Fox Leases Another Building

New Fireproof Plant Leased by Fox for Twenty Years

TO MEET the needs of his rapidly expanding production interests, William Fox has leased, for a term of twenty years the four-story and basement fireproof structure lately completed by the Kelly-Springfield Tire Company at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fourth street, New York. This announcement follows closely upon the expenditure of more than a million dollars in expanding and beautifying the Fox Studios in Hollywood, Cal., the details of which were printed a fortnight ago in the tradepapers.

Also included in the immediate enlargements of the Fox establishment is the new construction at the Southeast corner of Tenth Avenue and Fifty-sixth Street, where Mr. Fox lately purchased a four-story building, demolished it and is now erecting an addition to his main studio building, which (with this addition) extends an entire block on Tenth Avenue, from Fifty-fifth to Fifty-sixth Streets, and runs back on both numbered thoroughfares—275 feet along Fifty-fifth Street and 150 feet on Fifty-sixth.

At the time the Fox New York studio was constructed it was presumed that its 150,000 square feet of floor space in what is declared to be the largest building in the world devoted exclusively to photoplay production and distribution, would be ample to accommodate the Fox activities for some time to come. When the building was officially dedicated, on May 24, of this year, it had been already demonstrated, in the three months it had been occupied, that much more room was imperatively needed.

Built to encompass the activities of 5,000 employees, the Fox studio never has been able to hold all the units of the organization. The scenario department, for one, has not been able to find shelter in the main building; the paint and sign shop is another, and in scattered buildings around town are various other departments that remain to be concentrated under the home roof.

Mr. Fox has so rapidly developed his production and the attendant distribution of films, and found his organization still so cramped for room, that he eagerly availed himself of an opportunity to lease the Kelly-Springfield building, only one block south on Tenth Avenue from the main plant. He has taken this modern fireproof structure, occupying a site 100 x 175 feet, and containing more than 50,000 square feet of floor space, on lease for twenty years at an annual rental of $47,000; the gross sum involved in the lease totalling practically $1,000,000.

The new construction at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-sixth street will provide further accommodation for the expansion of the Fox interests, and will completely fill the Tenth Avenue frontage for an entire block. At the time the original purchase of the site for the Fox building was negotiated there was a hitch in securing the one lot where Mr. Fox is now building. Rather than delay construction of the original building Mr. Fox decided to build around the property then in dispute, and is now filling in the "job" with fireproof construction to match the rest of the building to its full height of four stories.

Work is being rushed night and day to prepare the "Annex" at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street for occupancy as soon as possible. Indeed, some of the space has already been taken over by certain sections of the various departments that will ultimately be sheltered in the newly acquired Kelly-Springfield building. As this structure provides 50,000 square feet of additional space in its four floors and basement, it means that a mighty good-sized film plant is added to the Fox New York equipment plant, a stroke of rare good fortune, as its location, only one block down Tenth Avenue, makes the "Annex" conveniently accessible to all the workers in the main plant.

Completing 'Three Sevens'

Antonio Moreno Filming Final Scenes on New Vitagraph Release

ANTONIO MORENO is nearing the end of production of "Three Sevens," his new feature, and the picture will be complete within another two weeks. Director Chester Bennett is making the most of Perley Poore Sheehan's psychology in his famous novel of prison life and the picture has really worked out beyond expectations in film form.

The picture carries a thread of prison reform throughout, but is essentially a melodrama with a beautiful love story.

The exteriors were taken at Florence, Ariz., where the Governor of the State gave the Vitagraph players every privilege. Three hundred convicts were permitted to be turned loose outside the walls in a daring escape for the picture, declares a statement from the Vitagraph headquarters. These scenes, therefore, are as realistic as could be imagined, it is stated.

Tony really has two leading women in the picture as both Jean Calhoun and Beatrice Burnham have played leads alone with the principal men stars in pictures. "Bull" Montana, who played such a terror inspiring gorilla in Marshall Neilan's "Go and Get It," takes the role of a harsh character in "Three Sevens." Emma King, Dewitt C. Jennings, Edwin J. Brady, Thomas Jefferson and Hector V. Sarno, all well known actors on the screen, have the other chief supporting roles. Starke Patterson, Virginia Nightingale and Jeffery Webb are also in the cast.

The company will finish a train robbery scene at Newhall, in California's San Fernando Valley, this week and return to the studio to finish the picture. An excellent prison set was constructed at the studio to match the interior of the Arizona penitentiary. The interiors would have been taken at the actual prison, but it was impossible to light the corridors sufficiently for photography.

Press Hails "813" as Best Mystery Story

Robertson-Cole announces that the daily press throughout the country is hailing its production of the Arsene Lupin story, "813," as the best detective-interest and mystery production of the year. The picture is now playing at first-run houses all over the country. The following opinion from the Atlanta American is submitted as typical of the reception accorded by the press:

"There have been mystery stories and detective stories for years, but it has been many a blue moon's age since one has reached the silver screen with as much suspense, interest and human appeal as '813,' one of the best stories Maurice Le Blanc, internationally famous as the creator of the 'Arsene Lupin' stories, ever wrote."

Heavy Booking for the "Double Adventure"

The announcement of January 23 as a definite release date for "Double Adventure," the Brunton-produced serial starring Charles Hutchison, has elicited from exhibitors a response the measure of which may be gauged by early bookings, which are reported to be unusually large, declares Pathe. "Double Adventure" has made a promising start and in the opening days of the sales campaign is living up to the best records made by Pathe serials during 1920 insofar as it is adding new theatres to the list of serial show houses.

Good Reports Received on "The Scuttlers"

On pre-release showings and the early reports following its regular issue, December 12, William Farnum seems to have scored again for William Fox in his newest photo-drama "The Scuttlers." Incidental to the narrative, the scenes present vistas of San Francisco Harbor as well as numerous "shots" and locations at Catalina Island, where some of the more dramatic incidents were pictured. J. Gordon Edwards directed "The Scuttlers" and provided Mr. Farnum with a capable supporting company.

Kane Returns from Coast

Sees "No Cause for Worry" in the Future; New Houses Being Erected

ARTHUR S. KANE, president of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, has just returned to New York from a trip of more than six weeks which took him to the Pacific Coast and back. Mrs. Kane accompanied him. In Los Angeles he conferred with Charles Ray and other stars in whose activities he and his company are interested, and with numerous business associates. En route, he stopped in Chicago, Omaha, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Topeka, Kansas City and other cities, talking with exhibitors, exchange managers and business men generally.

"I face the future with entire confidence," said Mr. Kane, in summing up the results of his observations. "The present slight slackening is merely the let-up that comes inevitably in the theatrical and picture industries just before the holidays. Harder work may be required next year to achieve as good results as have been attained in the last three years, but men with deserving enterprises and who act with good judgment have no cause for worry.

"In San Francisco two huge picture theatres are now being erected and two or three are being built in Los Angeles. In every part of the country, indeed, fine new houses are either being projected or constructed. Exhibitors generally, far from anticipating reverses, are preparing for a business expansion. These activities, justified, from all appearances, by present conditions, assuredly give no ground for pessimism."

Charles Ray, with whom Mr. Kane in in close personal affiliation, and whom he is presenting in all his newer productions, positively will pay his long-promised initial visit to New York Cty late this winter or early in the coming spring, Mr. Kane declared. Speaking of this player's activities, Mr. Kane said:

"Mr. Ray started his career as an independent star March 1, 1920. His contract with First Natonal calls for twelve pictures in two years, six each year. Already he has finished five and the sixth will be completed a month or more before the expiration of the first year."

Ford Makes Xmas Picture

"Christmas Thought" Will Be Released During Holiday Season

THE Ford Motion Picture Laboratories have produced a special Christmas film for release during the holidays. This is unlike the usual Ford Education Weeklies in that it is a one-reel drama portrayed by actors. The film is entitled "Christmas Thoughts."

This film is released so that it can be used in the theatres of the country during the holidays, and the pathetic little story it tells will preach a sermon to many. "Christmas Thoughts" is the contribution of the Ford Motion Picture Laboratories and Fitzpatrick & McElroy of Chicago, representatives, to the Good Fellow movement of the holidays.

The story of the picture tells of a club of bachelors who, gathered in their comfortable club, decide they should share some of their comfort and pleasure with those who have none. They go to the Good Fellow's headquarters and get the names of the needy families. Then we are taken to the homes of one of these needy families living in a forlorn basement tenement. The father is just getting over an illness which has kept him away from work for three months and there is no money for food let alone toys for the three children. The kiddies, however, have faith, Santa Claus will not forget them, and the poor mother wipes the tears from her eyes as they insist upon hanging up their little stockings on Christmas Eve.

Hodkinson Starts on Trip

Executive Leaves for Tour of Field for First Time in 3 Years

W. W. HODKINSON is making his first trip in the field since the founding of his present organization three years ago. Conditions have been such heretofore that Mr. Hodkinson has been unable to get away, but as matters stand now, as he explained in a statement made before his departure, he feels that his organization is so welded together that for the time being at least they can dispense with his actual presence.

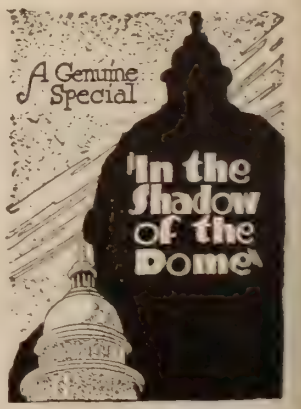
And so he is taking this opportunity of meeting the various component parts of his organization, who would not otherwise be given a chance to know the type of man for whom they are working.

That his trip may be considered in every sense of the word a successful one is best evidenced by expressions of opinion concerning Mr. Hodkinson which have come into the Home Office of the organization from men who have met him for the first time.

Goldwyn's "Bunty" Opens in St. Louis December 26

The first screening of Reginald Barker's production of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," the Scotch comedy from Graham Moffatt's successful stage play, will take place at the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, Sunday, December 26, followed by "Godless Men," another Reginald Barker Goldwyn production, on January 3. The Missouri theatre is a Paramount house and up to the present time that theatre has booked but Paramount attractions, according to Goldwyn.

Leatrice Joy plays the leading role and Russell Simpson plays the Scotch father. Others in the great cast of this picture are Raymond Hatton, Cullen Landis, Casson Ferguson, Josephine Crowell, Edythe Chapman, Howland Rushton, Georgia Woodthorpe, Sadie Gordon and Otto Hoffman.



Views of Greek Election in Fox News

Another exclusive foreign feature which appears in the latest Fox News covers the story of the Greek elections, in which the people of Greece, by popular vote, invited the former King Constantine back to the throne.

The pictures, brought from Europe by special messenger, show the enthusiastic procession of royalists through the streets of Athens. At the same time, Venizelos, the defeated Premier of Greece, awaited the result in his sumptuous home in Nice, on the Riviera. Fox News cameramen were there, too, and pictures of the exiled Venizelos in the grounds of the beautiful villa are shown in the reel, following the Athens scenes.

Star Leaves Stage to Play in Fox Serial

Rena Parker, who was the star in "Betty Be Good" in New York and on the road, has left that company to take over a big part in the new William Fox serial, "Fantomas," the first episode of which was released December 19th. This is Miss Parker's first appearance on the screen. According to those who have seen her work in the serial, she is likely to create something of a sensation with her beauty and her acting.

"THE SAGE HEN"

With

Gladys Brockwell, Lillian Rich and
Wallace MacDonald
From the story by Harry Solter
Personally directed by—EDGAR LEWIS

A "Sage Hen," in the lingo of the West, was a strange woman of doubtful character.

If a woman had that tag attached to her she might just as well pull up stakes and leave town,—if she wanted to mix with decent people.

What a horrible thing to call a good woman,—what tragedy, what heartbreak!

Of such materials has Edgar Lewis made this thrilling human picture.

Hutchison is the chap who made your audiences gasp with his dare-devilry in "The Great Gamble." He is the man who brought them back week after week to see that very successful serial.

Today he is the world's greatest "stunt" man. The harder the stunt the better he seems to like it. He does things that seem humanly impossible.

Now he is starred in a serial with as many punches as a trip hammer; jam-full of action, thrills, and gasps. Produced with some of the best photography and "atmosphere" you ever saw.

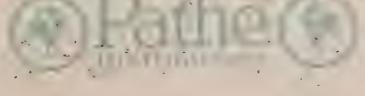
"That Girl Montana"

From the Novel by Marah Ellis Ryan

"That Girl Montana" was a Will o' the Wisp from nowhere.



The man found her in an Indian tribe where her blonde hair betrayed the fact that her blood was of the purest white.

He took her to civilization, and when he did he started one of the most dashing romances of the West.

If you like a great big western story, full of action and the atmosphere of the clean outdoors, full of girlish laughter and young love, you will like this superb production.

Blanche Sweet is seen at her best and she is supported by a notable cast.

She captured an unwilling husband; at least she made every one think he was her husband.

She was daring in her play, but she came on a man who was more daring than she.

She almost became an unwilling wife, but she didn't.

She became a very willing one.

All of these things with the gracious presence of Blanche Sweet combine to make one of the most delightful comedy dramas of the year.

So successful has been the work of Thomas J. Geraghty in reorganizing the continuity department of the new Eastern studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, wired yesterday from Hollywood appointing Mr. Geraghty supervising director of Eastern production activities. In his new position Mr. Geraghty will have general supervision over the scripts and direction of all Paramount pictures made in the East, holding the same position in the new studio that Frank E. Woods holds over all pictures, except specials, in the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

Applaud Tourneur Film at Special Showing

Forty members of the Norwich Society, an organization of former residents in the Connecticut home of Uncas, the hero of Cooper's famous Indian story "The Last of the Mohicans," were guests this week at a private showing arranged by Associated Producers of Maruice Tourneur's motion picture elaboration of this story.

The showing, which was held at the Miles projection room in the Candler Building, New York, was generously applauded by those present, among whom were Judge William H. Barnes, former state senator in Connecticut, and at present a Judge of the City Court in Norwich.

The showing followed the annual smoker of the Society held at the University Club.

Claims Made for "Back to God's Country"

"Back to God's Country," the First National attraction, has established Canada as a source of successful productions and paved the way for other big productions to follow. It placed James Oliver Curwood, the author, on a royalty-earning basis which is said to be bringing him an average of from $35,000 upwards per picture. The picture has also established Nell Shipman as a great star of "outdoor" productions, and contributed materially to the reputation of David M. Hartford as a director. It has been re-booked as many as seven times in some neighborhood houses, with an increase of business on almost every re-appearance.

Universal Duplicates Mural Paintings

Universal officials announce that the eight immense mural paintings in the two principal salons of the gambling Casino at Monte Carlo are being exactly reproduced at Universal City for Erich Von Stroheim's forthcoming production, "Foolish Wives."

From a correspondent of Universal in Monte Carlo, Von Stroheim and R. W. Day, art director, have received photographic studies of the interior decorations, together with color charts which are guiding the artist in reproducing the paintings.

Pathe Winners Are Announced

IN one of the most sensational competitions ever staged by Pathe Exchange, Inc., for its sales force, all organization records for new business and collections were shattered during the $10,000 Pearson Monthly competition in November, according to a statement just issued by Paul Brunet, of Pathe, giving the winners in the four competing districts as follows:

Western, San Francisco, W. W. Kofeldt, branch manager.

Central, Cleveland, Paul H. Tessier, branch manager.

Eastern, Albany, B. M. Moran, branch manager.

Southern, Oklahoma City, Fred B. Pickrel, branch manager.

When the terms of the contest were drawn up, it was determined to give a full prize to the branch finishing second with the national high average, and this award was won by Seattle in the Western division, Paul G. Lynch, branch manager.

The returns recorded by the winning teams, and some of their competitors, were startling, state Pathe officials. San Francisco, in capturing the Western division prize, recorded an aggregate increase in new business and collections, of 113 per cent. Seattle, which finished second, scored a 100 per cent increase, which gave it the extra prize, equal to the award gained by each of the division winners.

In the Southern territory, Oklahoma City with a 49 per cent increase, was only two points in advance of Atlanta. Albany, of the Eastern division, once more triumphing in a Pathe contest, returned a 97 per cent increase, while Cleveland in topping off the Central division teams, registered an aggregate improvement of 82 per cent over the average of collections and new business for August, September and October.

Harold Lloyd and company in his new comedy, "Number, Please?" released by Pathe

The winning teams were composed as follows: San Francisco, W. W. Kofeldt, branch manager; G. Glosser, booker; O. W. Helwig, cashier; H. Henrioulle, W. C. Green, M. A. Hulling, and R. Pielow, salesmen.

Oklahoma, Fred B. Pickrel, manager; H. R. Falls, booker; L. C. Sipe, cashier; P. D. Fielding, March Wood, G. Lancaster, and E. S. Hochstim, salesmen.

Albany, B. M. Moran, manager; J. H. Krause, booker; Wilhemina Wenzel, cashier; J. H. Loughborough, J. L. Rose, A. R. Hummell, L. Carboni, W. L. Elliott, and S. Hochstim, salesman.

Cleveland, Paul H. Tessier, manager; O. J. Ruby, assistant manager; Henry S. Laws, booker; D. E. Pratt, cashier; L. S. Fleischer, D. Stearns, B. F. McCoy, W. H. Windsor, H. E. Smith, W. S. Ainsworth, R. A. Morrison, and R. E. Flagler, salesmen.

Seattle, Paul G. Lynch, manager; L. A. Samuelson, booker; Mrs. H. E. Manogue, cashier; F. N. Haas, and F. W. Normand, salesmen.

The order of finish in the different divisions, was as follows: Western—San Francisco, Seattle, Spokane, Portland, Denver, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles. Southern — Oklahoma City, Atlanta, Dallas, Charlotte, Little Rock, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Kansas City and St. Louis. Eastern—Albany, Philadelphia. Boston, Newark, Pittsburgh, New York, Washington and Buffalo. Central—Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Des Moines and Indianapolis.

The competition was exceptionally keen, too. In three of the four divisions it was not until ten days after the close of the contest that a definite line was obtained on the winner. One of the pleasantest features of the whole "Pearson Month" episode—even in the estimation of the money-winners—was the thoughtful and gracefully expressed acknowledgment made by Mr. Pearson, who went on record to this effect: "My thanks are due, and are most heartily given, to every member of the Pathe organization. For, while the splendid results of 'Pearson Month' display on their face a triumph of salesmanship resource and enterprise, yet it is undeniable that every department of Pathe Exchange contributed with tireless energy and expert service."

1920 Busy Year for Tom Moore

Made Six Films and is Now Finishing His Seventh

NO player at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., has had a busier year than has Tom Moore during 1920. During the twelve months this popular Goldwyn star has made six pictures and is nearing the end of the seventh. The character and quality of the pictures he has made in 1920 have greatly increased that Tom Moore's following as the steadily growing demand for Tom Moore pictures by exhibitors indicates, declare Goldwyn officials.

"Duds," from Henry C. Rowland's adventure tale, one of his first 1920 pictures, is a rattling good story of mystery and intrigue in which the star played the part of an ex-army captain turned detective and he walked away with it as to the manner born.

Then in "Toby's Bow," the comedy drama by John Taintor Foote in which Norman Trevor was starred on the stage, he gave a quiet, forceful characterization of the writer bored with New York's gay life who went to Virginia and fell in love with the daughter of a once wealthy and proud family.

"The Great Accident," from a story by Ben Ames Williams gave Mr. Moore an opportunity for action of a still different sort. He had the part of the good-for-nothing son of a severely upright father who, though a practical joke of the politicians, was elected mayor of his city instead of his father, the party's candidate. He made the sudden bracing up of the new mayor and the ridding of the town of crooks and gamblers entirely credible through his ability to get inside the skin of the character he was playing.

Then Moore was given an opportunity to demonstrate what he could do with farce and the picturization of Austin MacHugh and Winchell Smith's famous stage success, "Officer 666," was entrusted to him. He emerged so triumphantly from the test that he was at once cast for another farcical role, that of Jimmy Doogan, the crook in "Stop Thief!" Caryle Moore's farce that ran for a year on Broadway.

In sharp contrast to those two roles came that of Canavan in "Hold Your Horses," from a story by Rupert Hughes. Canavan was an Irishman lately over from the old country who acted as "chambermaid to Fifth Avenue," as he called it—in other words a member of the city's cleaning force. Run over by a coach he hadn't the courage to return to that work and joined the dynamiting gang of a building contractor. He was given the red flag to stop street traffic and the little taste of authority went to his head to such an extent that he not only became master of his own home, but of his ward and eventually of the entire city. And Tom Moore acts the part so sincerely and unaffectedly that it is plausible from start to finish.

Now as Barnes in Archibald Clavering Gunter's old novel and play, "Mr. Barnes of New York," which is nearing completion at the Goldwyn West Coast studios, the star has a role of different sort from anything he has hitherto done. And he is scheduled to play the part of a fireman who marries a New York society girl in a screen version of William J. Hurlbut's play, "Made in Heaven."

Mae Murray in Robert Z. Leonard's forthcoming production for Paramount release, "The Gilded Lily"

Californians Generous to Filming Units

Walter Reed, location director at the Lasky studio, is doing his part in maintaining and strengthening the confidence of property owners in Southern California in the motion picture companies located in and about Hollywood, the Western film capital.

"The property owners of Southern California are no longer backward about allowing reputable motion picture concerns to use their homes and gardens as scenic backgrounds for film productions," says Mr. Reed. "A while ago however, owing to the carelessness and negligence of some directors who represented small companies, the industry as a whole was given a black eye, and even the most reputable company was severely handicapped when trying to obtain permission to get a few scenes on someone's private property."

May Allison in Strong Dramatic Role

In "Big Game," soon to be filmed at the company's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Cal., May Allison will have an opportunity to show her versatility, for the role calls for strong dramatic acting. It is a virile story of the Northwest, nearly all of the action taking place in a trapper's cabin somewhere north of Quebec.

"Big Game" is from the stage play by Willard Robertson and Kilbourn Gordon, which enjoyed a New York run last season. Mr. Veiller has not yet announced members of the cast supporting Miss Allison.

Novel "Snipe" Advertising "Blind Wives"

One of the novelties to be used by William Fox in advertising "Blind Wives" is a "snipe" on which only the word "Blind Wives" appears. In each of the words in the title there appears, in place of the letter "i," a drawing of the human eye, set wide open. This method is used to follow out the Fox slogan for this feature: "'Blind Wives' Will Open the Eyes of the World."

Mayer in Optimistic Mood

Hails Slowing-Up in Production as Favorable Sign for Industry

LOUIS B. MAYER, producer releasing through Associated First National, places a very optimistic construction upon the recent curtailment of activities in some of the Coast studios. In a recent interview, he said:

"The old slogan of 'fewer and better pictures' is finally coming into its own. For years it has been bantered about the trade with semi-humorous intent, regarded rather as something to talk about than as something to strive for. But its day has finally come, and I believe that it represents a sound, healthy development in the advancement of the industry.

"Several years ago, when I sold out my theatres and entered the production field, I had the idea that money spent plentifully, even extravagantly, to insure a good production, would be wise expenditure in the long run. My plan included securing stories that had strength and real merit, casts that represented the cream of the acting profession, and directors of proven ability.

"The first two men I talked to on the proposition laughed at me. They were both successful producers and prominent figures in the industry, but they labeled my plan as ridiculous. They even went so far in their criticism as to say that I would become a menace by spending so much money on pictures.

"If it were not for Mr. J. D. Williams and First National, I would probably never have seen my pet idea on production put into practice. We had no trouble getting together on contracts because Mr. Williams saw the wisdom of concentrating effort and finances on good pictures rather than just grinding out films for release dates, and in First National he had an organization consecrated to the work of making each production stand up alone."

"Producer Is Responsible"

So Asserts Alfred Walker in Discussing the Blue-Law Agitation

THE current agitation regarding the blue laws and the so-called cleaning of the motion picture industry has brought to light a discussion of whether the exhibitor or the producer is to blame for the country-wide criticism.

That the exhibitor is in no way to blame and that he should not be condemned either by the newspapers or the public is the opinion expressed by Alfred Walker, director general of the World Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Walker calls attention to the fact that nearly eighty per cent of the picture showmen of the country book pictures and pay for them in advance, without seeing the productions until they are offered on their own screen to their patrons.

Mr. Walker contends that the producer alone can rectify all wrongs relative to questionable pictures. It is within his power to produce pictures that the public cannot criticise yet of such entertaining powers as to bring the exhibitor a maximum amount of revenue. Although the general outcry against the picture industry is unwarranted, it is admitted, that too many pictures with vulgar themes and questionable scenes have been offered to the exhibitors under the guise of spectacles and advanced art. The producer responsible for such productions is to be criticized in that he has prostituted one of the greatest dramatic mediums—the motion picture. To such individuals should all criticism be directed, Mr. Walker states. He also predicts a time when the members of the industry will take action against any such producer.

Willat Film in February

Hodkinson Delays Release Date: Producer Promises Big Picture

"PARTNERS OF THE TIDE," which was formerly scheduled for release on the Hodkinson program on January 19, has been put back to February for the reason that the taking of this picture has proved to be a task of greater magnitude than was anticipated. Irvin V. Willat, his staff, and his company, have been busily engaged in the making of this picture for many weeks and it is expected that Mr. Willat will achieve some big results.

"Partners of the Tide" was written by Joseph C. Lincoln, author of "The Portygee," "Shavings," "Cape Cod Folks" and many other colossally successful novels. It is a story which deals with the life of the hardy mariners of the Atlantic seaboard, and in it Mr. Willat has been enabled to inject a great deal of undersea stuff that helped toward making "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface" such extraordinary productions.

A very strong cast will be seen in "Partners of the Tide," playing the lead will be Daisy Robinson, star of a number of past successes; Gordon Mullen, a "heavy" of prominence; J. P. Lockney, Jack Perrin and many others.

New Exploiting Twist for "Over the Hill"

Every old trick has a new kink and "kick" when the right man gets hold of it, and the business of exploiting motion pictures is largely a matter of giving new twists to things that have been done before. If there really is anything "new under the sun" your motion picture exploiter is not waiting until he discovers it—he's making the "old stuff" look new.

Which same is proved in the postal cards William Fox is issuing to patrons at the Lyric theatre, New York, where "Over the Hill" has passed its third month on Broadway. Because "Over the Hill" has been shown only at the Broadway theatres there is an unusual interest to out-of-town visitors in this attraction.

There are found different designs on the cards Mr. Fox gives to the throng that is patronizing the Lyric. Very attractive and effective scenes from the photoplay are engraved on one side of the card, while half of the address side carries this message:

"We are here enjoying 'Over the Hill' highly. The acting in it is marvellous. It is simply wonderful, and you must be sure to see it. Wish you were here."

There is a dotted line for the name of the person to whom the card is addressed and another line for the signature of the sender.

Chicago Exhibitors in Lively Meeting

The Chicago branch of The Illinois Exhibitors Alliance, the state organization affiliated with M. P. T. O. of A. has reached a membership of one hundred and seven, a large number of theatre men joining the organization at the well attended meeting held on December 10 at Fraternity Hall, 19 W. Adams street, Chicago.

It was decided to conduct the Chicago branch under the commission form of government, and twelve commissioners were elected to hold office for one year, each to act as chairman for one month during his term of office. The meeting also fixed the registration fee at ten dollars, and already more than seven hundred dollars is in the treasury.

A committee of seven was named to confer with the operators as to working conditions, wage scale, etc., and also will take up the matter of employing maintenance men with the union officials.

Jimmy Aubrey Finishes "The Blizzard"

Jimmy Aubrey has just finished his latest comedy under the temporary title of "The Blizzard." Vitagraph officials say this picture is the best Aubrey has made in his many years with the company. Jess Robbins directed. "Babe" Hardy, Maude Emory, Vincent McDermott and Jack Lloyd prove apt foils for the comedian's efforts, and a surprise finish tops the whole picture.

Boy Star in Katherine MacDonald's Cast

Wesley Barry is to be one of the principals of a strong cast supporting Katherine MacDonald in her present production, the first scenes of which were shot last week. B. P. Fineman, producing manager of the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation secured the "kid" actor through special arrangements with Marshall Neilan, who has the youngster under contract as a star.

To Do Original Stories Only

Wm. DeMille to Make Only Original Stories Done by Prominent Authors

BECAUSE he considers that it is impossible successfully to adapt plays or novels to the screen, William DeMille announced yesterday that in the future he will confine himself entirely in his Paramount productions to original stories by famous authors.

Edward Knoblock, who is at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, is now completing the script of an original story which will be Mr. DeMille's next production for Paramount. It is being written around an idea which Mr. Knoblock has had in mind for some time, and the story was worked out by the author with Mr. DeMille before the latter left Hollywood two weeks ago.

The producer of "Midsummer Madness" explained his decision to abandon adaptations as follows:

"Although there are several good plays and novels available, they are good merely as stage productions or as books. They are rarely of any use as motion picture material, for the reason that they were written to be produced on the stage or to be published between covers. The motion picture medium is entirely different; it is a new art form, and authors with hope to see their stories or plays on the screen must realize that fact. They must realize that if they are going to have their works put into motion pictures they must go into picture studies and learn their new medium. I have adapted several plays in the past, and novels, too, but I am convinced that the maximum of success can only be achieved when the author learns motion picture technique and works in close co-operation with the continuity writers and directors.

"This is what Mr. Knoblock is doing now on the next picture I shall produce. When he arrived in Hollywood he went at once to our studio, literally took off his coat, rolled up his sleeves and started to learn the craft from the bottom up. This is the same procedure being followed by Sir Gilbert Parker."

Baker Selects Strong Cast

Anna C. Nilsson and Robt. Frazer Head Line-Up in "Temple Dusk"

COMPLETION of what is described as one of the strongest casts ever assembled for a motion picture is announced by Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of S-L Pictures, for the forthcoming George D. Baker Production of "Temple Dusk," that is now being made at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street. Metro will release this big special. Featured at the head of the all-star cast is the lovely Anna Q. Nilsson.

"Temple Dusk" is the second S-L production to be made at the Metro studios, the first having been "Love, Honor and Obey." "Temple Dusk" was adapted by George D. Baker from Calvin Johnston's feature story in the Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Baker is also directing the production, which, it is predicted, will be one of the picture sensations of the year.

Care in the selection of the cast for "Temple Dusk" resulted in the engagement of Miss Nilsson for the featured role and of Robert Frazer for the part of the profligate young Marlowe, who marries the girl, Ember, portrayed by Miss Nilsson. For the role of Bunny Fish, the gambler and man-about-town, who inherits the Versailles gambling house and seeks to win Ember Marlowe while her young husband is overseas, Mr. Baker engaged Robert Schable.

Three-in-One Gives H. C. L. a Black Eye

The high cost of living would not mean anything in the life of Hollywood stars if they would only take a leaf from the book of Miss June Day of Los Angeles.

In International News reel No. 87, just released by Universal, Miss Day demonstrates a three-in-one costume made from a silk scarf. First she wraps it around her in such a way that it makes a fetching street dress. Next, while you are reading a sub-title, she changes the wrapping and then you see her in the chic-est bathing suit ever seen East of Venice - California. Her third change—besides proving that the hand is quicker than the eye—metamorphoses the scarf into a stunning evening gown.

Educational Comedies on B'way

"High and Dry," seventh of the Mermaid Comedies released through Educational Exchanges, is being shown at the Strand theatre this week. Jimmie Adams is the featured player, while opposite him is Thelma Percy, a sister of Eileen.

"Shuffle the Queens," a two-reel Christie which is described as a bedroom farce without a bedroom, is on the bill at the Rivoli. It is a fast moving farce of complications with a cast including Eddie Barry, Vera Steadman, Charlotte Merriam, Neal Burns and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

Author Praises Screen Version of Story

J. Parker Read Jr., producer of "The Leopard Woman" picturized from the novel of Stewart Edward White, has just received the following from the author, concerning the screen version of his story:

"The sets, the directing, the composition of the picture, are all beyond praise. Miss Glaum and Mr. Peters did most excellent work; and I should also want to commend the man highly who did 'Chake' and the little gun bearer. Withal, I was very much pleased and cannot too highly praise it."

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

ABOUT DIRECTORS

THERE will be new officers of the Motion Picture Directors' Association e're long. Nomination of candidates took place at the regular meeting on Tuesday. It is rumored that several new members have been passed upon and await initiation.

Robert Ellis, following a recovery from a recent and extended illness, is once again at work directing Selznick pictures, this time, with Owen Moore as star.

Chet Withey, directing Constance Talmadge, has an aversion against what is termed "cheap pictures" and opines that the best way to eliminate cheap pictures is to set a standard, which he says could be done by the establishing of a motion picture school, one with such a high standard of excellence that it would give the directing novitiate an education and training that would make him a credit to the photoplay realm. Mr. Withey offers the camera man for an illustration. "He must start at the bottom and serve an apprenticeship with a camera that first of all must make the man thoroughly familiar with everything about the mechanism. He must know everything there is to know about the camera. So it should be with the director. He should be called upon to know every part of the work in every department, yet it is a positive fact that the demand for films and the increase of production has forced the amateur director and assistant director into the breach, but the man who does know the practical as well as the artistic side of his work will be unable to obtain satisfactory results."

Thomas Ricketts, secretary of the M. P. D. A., Los Angeles, will "act" again, according to the information that he has been engaged for the role of the priest in "Sorrentian," in which Viola Dana will be starred. Francis McDonald, Jackie Saunders, Fred Kelsey and Edward Kennedy make up the other important members of the cast. Mr. Ricketts has appeared with Miss Dana before—as the minister in "Please Get Married."

E. Mason Hopper, one of the directors for the Goldwyn Company, should have some special recognition from the Red Cross for the work he has done for it. Usually, when Mr. Hopper is directing a picture, he seems to have attention for nothing else, but when the Red

Lule Warrenton, who scored an individual success in "The Sin That Was His," starring William Faversham

Cross enlistment is at stake, then its different.

The same was brought forcefully to the minds of the actors working in Rupert Hughes' picture "Dangerous Curve Ahead" which Mr. Hopper is directing. He noticed that not all of them were wearing Red Cross buttons. When he mentioned this, they all said they meant to buy, or they had buttons at home, or something of the kind.

But Mr. Hopper felt that was not enough, so he sent to the nearest Red Cross station and bought buttons for every one in the company. Just for good measure, he bought a number extra, and whenever he saw anyone without a button, suggested he buy one, but that until he did so he could wear one of the emergency ones. It didn't look well, so Mr. Hopper said, for anyone to be seen without a Red Cross badge.

Byron Munson has been cast for an important role in the Metro all-star production of "What Is the Matter with Marriage?" which Philip E. Rosen is directing. Milton Sills, Ora Carew and Nigel Barrie head the cast for this production of Jack London's novel, "The Little Lady of the Big House," which was adapted for the screen by Edward Lowe, Jr. The story has been re-titled for screen purposes.

Originality of the sort that makes picture plays which are "different" is placed at a premium at Metro's West Coast studios through a system under which directors are given the most generous credit for the entire production on which they are employed.

No director handling a megaphone at the company's studios on the Pacific Coast finds the way barred to the fullest employment of his personality in the screening of the stories placed in his hands.

Each Metro film released is known by the name of the director who was in charge of its picturization, as his own production. Bayard Veiller, director of production at the West Coast studios, works with the directors of each production throughout the making of the picture, but without hampering the director in the expression of his own ideas.

"The director can make or mar a production," said Mr. Veiller. "It was not intended that he simply should take a 'script and carry out the thoughts of the scenarist. Many touches that would find no place in the written story may be added in the making of a camera version of the story. It is in the handling of these details that a director proves his worth."

Metro's West Coast directorial staff now includes Philip E. Rosen, Dallas M. Fitzgerald, Rex Ingram and Wesley Ruggles.

A virtual Salon of the Cinema established by the National Board of Review is hailed as an important step in the artistic recognition of motion pictures in America.

Heretofore passing on films only from a moral basis, the board has instituted a Committee on Critique to select the most signficant film achievements for a list of exceptional photoplays. Only four have so far been named.

The honor of heading the list has been given Reginald Barker's production, "Godless Men," by Ben Ames Williams. This is said by the reviewers to bring "that peculiar exaltation which the true tragic masters have always been able to extract out of the very heart of pain."

The other exceptional photoplays namer are "Passion" and "The Devil's Garden" (Associated First National) and "The Sin that Was His" (Select). "Godless Men" (Goldwyn release) is the only one of the four made in the West.

To be considered for the roll of honor two-thirds of the reviewing group must agree that a picture has "outstanding dramatic, artistic, pictorial and instructive entertainment quality," according to the first bulletin of the critical committee. The general committee of the board then discusses the film while the committee on critique sits as jury. The new committee consists of eleven persons chosen for wide knowledge of the motion picture and its audience and for trained critical capacity.

Philip E. Rosen is directing "What is the Matter with Marriage" and among others in his well selected cast will be Byron Munson,

Chet Withey, director, and Constance Talmadge, star of "The Man from Toronto," a Chet Withey production

Milton Sills, Ora Carew and Nigel Barrie. The story is an adaptation from "The Little Lady of the Big House," a novel by Jack London.

Wallace Worsley, one of the best known of motion picture directors, has renewed his contract with the Goldwyn company. He directed Gouverneur Morris' story "The Penalty" and also held the megaphone on "The Highest Bidder," a current release starring Madge Kennedy. He is now directing "Don't Neglect Your Wife," Gertrude Atherton's first original photoplay.

Mr. Worsley was formerly on the stage, having made his first appearance in 1901 under the management of Charles Frohman. Later he had his own stock company. He went into motion pictures as an actor in 1916, but soon became so interested in directing, that he laid aside the make-up box for the megaphone.

It will be most difficult to follow the Rupert Hughes picture directed by Sidney Olcott, "Scratch My Back," one of the most delightful comedies, requiring the most artistic direction with delicate touches ever produced. However, Goldwyn will release another Hughes story, entitled "Dangerous Curve Ahead." It is a story of married life and reports have it that it is most amusing and is of special interest because it is the first story which Mr. Hughes has ever written directly for the screen. It will be directed by E. Mason Hopper.

called on her and returned her purse with the contents intact. Such honesty was remarkable, thought Miss Valli, especially in these days of bold brigandage; but she decided that the finder looked so prosperous that the money did not tempt him. Imagine her complete astonishment, therefore, when she next saw her "wealthy" Sir Galahad—she was attending a holiday tea at one of the leading hotels and there she met him again. He was the waiter!

Which reminds us that Miss Valli is creating the role of Lady Alice in Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy" under the direction of John S. Robertson.

The baseball championship of Hollywood motion picture circles is the property of the Buster Keaton studios. The Keaton Komics, led by Buster, recently won decisively over the nine representing the Brunton "lot." The game was played at Washington Park, in Los Angeles and the final score was 19 to 12.

The contest was witnessed by numerous screen celebrities and proved highly exciting—until the second inning, when the Keatons registered nine runs and sewed up the pastime.

Buster was the individual star of the contest, rapping out five hits in as many trips to the plate. Three challenges already have been received by the Keaton Komics and they are expected to defend their title shortly.

Just before playing the championship game, Buster completed his fourth comedy, "Neighbors," for Joseph M. Schenck, which will be distributed exclusively by Metro Pictures Corporation.

W. T. Benda, the celebrated colorist, has completed a crayon study of Marion Davies wearing a Spanish costume of the Sixteenth Century, which Miss Davies wears in her latest starring vehicle "Buried Treasure" which will be released about January 1.

Gordon H. Standing, who will be seen as the minister in "The Foreigner" upon its release, is spending his odd moments compiling a record of the work of the American Medical Corps unit attached to the Second Division, with whom he served, in France. The tentative title of the book is "The Caduceus at the Front," so called from the insignia which the medical corps of the United States Army wears. Mr. Standing served in this branch of service during the war and has many interesting facts to record. The remarkable courage of the American doughboy will be revealed from many new and novel angles. Gordon has not forsaken the screen, despite the fact that he is now appearing in the leading male role of the Barrie playlet, "Half an Hour," in vaudeville.

June Caprice, the appealing blonde, who is co-starred with George B. Seitz in the new Pathe Special "Rogues and Romance," states that she seeks no controversy with those stars who design their own gowns, but that as far as she is concerned the geniuses who create fashions have no reason to fear the coming of a day when they will have to look for a new profession, for June believes in letting some one else plan and make the striking creations she wears in her pictures. "The experienced actress, in my opinion, is better qualified to 'wear' clothes than to design them," states June, the little lady of great promise, who believes in choosing one's vocation, and lending one's entire energies thereto!

Robert Schable asserts that he is not the "villain" in "Temple Dusk," the George D. Baker Production now under way. He is the "heavy." "The difference lies in the man typifying either appellation," says Schable. "A villain is a blackguard who knows exactly what he is doing in executing his despicable plans. A heavy is a man who acts natural; who is only doing what he has always done, and is simply doing things in accordance with the environment he has lived in." Whatever any one may deem a "heavy" or a "villain," Schable certainly carried out the "realistic" and the "natural" requirements of his "heavy" definition.

Promotion to the rank of stardom has finally come to Vera Gordon, although her first screen characterization in "Humoresque" led exhibitors everywhere to feature her above the nominal star of that production. Similarly in "The North Wind's Malice," a Rex Beach-Goldwyn picture, Miss Gordon was featured by the producers on the strength of her popular reception in the earlier photoplay. It was Harry Rapf, however, who first accorded stardom to Vera Gordon and it is this, his first independent production in some time, that has just been bought by Selznick Pictures Corporation for distribution as a special. Originally titled "Devotion," the present name of the picture is "The Great Love" and it gives the star another "mother role" in which it is said she rises to supreme dramatic heights.

At the present time Vera Gordon is appearing in person as the star of "Lullaby," a vaudeville playlet in which she is supported by Stanley L. Price. This act is booked solid until the middle of April, 1921, and gives her myriad screen admirers a chance to see Miss Gordon in person. Official reports indicate that they are taking advantage of this opportunity in great numbers.

Rockcliffe Fellowes, who will be seen opposite Ethel Clayton in "The Price of Possession," the new Paramount picture, is completing his part in the new screen offering. Hugh Ford directed the picture and it is regarded as the best in which Miss Clayton has recently been seen.

Fellowes, who has never played anything but "leads" since his screen debut, has appeared with Miss Clayton in many of her most successful photoplays and the combination has always proved a happy one.

"The Price of Possession" was adapted for the screen from the Winifred Boggs story of the same name and in the screen version Fellowes portrays a dual role.

The picture, which is being made at the Famous Players Long Island City studio, will be completed within the next week or ten days.

Dorothy Phillips on "Shortage of Good Films"

DOROTHY PHILLIPS, whose first independent production made under the direction of Allen Holubar, for Associated First National, is "Man, Woman, Marriage," declares in a statement just issued that the scarcity of good productions is due to a lack of good actors and actresses. This no doubt, is quite a blow to those who have contended that the dearth of stories is responsible for the scarcity of high standard photoplays, and Miss Phillips' declaration should prove of exceptional interest to the industry as a whole.

Miss Phillips says:

"It is not a dearth of stories adaptable for the screen that is causing the scarcity of really good pictures which it is said, exhibitors are beginning to feel. It is the scarcity of capable actors and actresses. There are no limitations to the camera in depicting thoughts, ideas or actions that have yet been discovered and I do not believe that any limitations ever will be discovered. A sufficiency of capable people to depict stories will relieve the shortage of good pictures.

"There are more people available for casting now than ever before. Really capable actors and actresses are being discovered every day, but a year ago a star was thought capable of turning out at least twelve features a year, it has been found that four is the maximum, and the number that they can do justice to in the course of a year is steadily decreasing. In my own case, for instance, I have just ended eight months spent on 'Man, Woman, Marriage' under the direction of Allen Holubar and not a minute of time was wasted.

"That is the result of the demand of the public for better pictures. A director finds a story that will take considerable acting to make it good. He finds most of the capable actors working on pictures that may take from four months to a year to complete and he can't get a cast together which would be capable of making the best of the story. The result is that he is forced to abandon the better story and if he produces anything it is an inferior story that doesn't require the same high degree of talent on the part of the cast. These stories are made up chiefly of action and therefore require "pep" on the part of the cast rather than real emotional ability. It is true that direct action stories are scarce but the mine of good literature available for screen purposes has hardly been touched.

"Thought is action, despite the word of many eminent directors and motion picture judges to be contrary. Human beings naturally think in terms of people and objects with which they are familiar. Their thoughts are mind pictures and anything that the mind can picture the camera can. There is nothing quite as elusive as instinct. It is unconscious thought. People are not aware of the pictures in their minds that cause them to experience certain emotions, and it is these unconscious thoughts that are grouped under the general term of instinct.

"They are distinct pictures, however, and the camera can show them, and Mr. Holubar has attempted to prove it in "Man, Woman, Marriage." Take, as an example, there is not much action in a man and woman looking at each other and realizing that they are meant for each other. It is called instinctive liking. As a matter of fact it is the conclusion of subconscious thought based upon actual happening in the most stirring times of the history of the human race. As such it can be pictured and in addition to making a gripping narrative story, it is educational in a most entertaining way.

"The man who reads nothing but stories with the idea of selecting them for the screen and then turns it over to some other man to direct, cannot appreciate what can be done with the camera. The Associated First National Pictures, Inc., idea of leaving it entirely up to one person, a star or a director to be responsible for the whole production is the right idea. A director can see things in a story he can do that a scenario writer would pass up as impossible. A star knows better what he or she can do, than anyone else. But it all takes time and they must give the necessary time to accomplish the results they are seeking and necessarily keep a cast working with them.

"As the regular intervals of releases become an antique system more and more actors and actresses of ability will be in demand. The era of production of more careful and necessarily slower, preparation has just started and people of ability for casts are the prime necessity of the industry and will continue to be for many years to come."

Peggy Shanor with Seitz Again

Peggy Shanor, whose screen career began under the direction of George B. Seitz in "The House of Hate," returns to play an important role throughout "The Man Who Stole the Moon." Miss Shanor, like many others, has forsaken the legitimate stage for pictures. With this invaluable background, she is a decided acquisition to the Seitz cast. Although she has returned to the stage since the days of "The House of Hate," she has always shown preference for the screen. In fact, she was rehearsing a sketch with Vera Gordon, when this opportunity to join the Seitz Company came along. Miss Shanor is decidedly ambitious and admits that for a while, she thought perhaps she was jeopardizing her career to play in serials. But when you consider how many more people you reach throughout the medium of the serial, it is decidedly worthwhile.

In "The Man Who Stole the Moon," the latest Seitz serial, Miss Shanor, although apparently in league with the heavy, assumes a romantic, sympathetic role with a subtlety which only one experienced in dramatic art, could do. Her vehicle of locomotion throughout the serial, is a highly powered aeroplane, which makes her entrances and exits most spectacular. A specially designed costume which Peggy dons with becoming grace, adds much to her spectacular and mysterious romanticism. Thus Miss Shanor makes Tharen, an individual and strikingly convincing personality,—undoubtedly her most striking characterization since her entrance into silent drama.

The Shipman Clan

FROM pulpit to stage, in photography and before the public, the "Shipman" is fast becoming a "name."

Rev. Dr. Herbert Shipman, pastor of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, electrified New York City by his original poem on profiteering recently read to his fashionable Fifth Avenue congregation, and exploited at length in the New York press. Dr. Shipman is contemplating the making of a feature picture upon this theme.

Samuel Shipman has written a great number of stage successes and bids fair to figure strong in both the legitimate and motion picture fields of the future.

Nell Shipman, as star in three of James Oliver Curwood's successes, including "Back to God's Country," is now at the head of her own producing organization and is just completing a feature picture in which she is starring.

Joseph Shipman, proprietor of the Shipman Process of Los Angeles, has a plant in operation night and day, in the heart of the film colony, from which he produces the largest photographic enlargements in the world. His reproductions and inventions are creating a national interest.

Helen Shipman has astonished Chicago by her unique stellar work in the musical comedy "Irene."

Rev. Montagu A. Shipman, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, Pasadena, is a strong advocate for motion pictures both in the church and the home.

Frederic Shipman has effected a contract with David F. Howells and Morris Greenhill for the exploitation of First National and other pictures in the Far East.

Edna Shipman has just finished three two-reel comedies as co-star with John Junior, for the Legend Film Corporation.

Ernest Shipman and his associates have made a unique record within one year by building on the success of "Back to God's Country" to such an extent that they now represent fourteen pronounced successes in the motion picture industry.

Betty Blythe Signed by Ince

Betty Blythe has been signed by Thomas H. Ince for the leading feminine role of the C. Gardner Sullivan story, tentatively titled "Mother," to be directed by Fred Niblo. Miss Blythe was signed by Ince immediately upon her completion of the star role in the "Queen of Sheba," the Fox spectacle in which she is said to attain stellar place by reason of her brilliant delineation of the famous queen.

Among the current releases in which Miss Blythe is featured is First National's "Nomads of the North," "The Truant Husband" and Robertson-Cole's "Occasionally Yours."

In addition to Miss Blythe the cast is composed of such distinguished players as Lloyd Hughes, Joseph Kilgour, Claire MacDowell and Betty Ross Clark.

Rich in story value, investiture and historic power, "Mother" will be a worthy successor to "Lying Lips," the Ince special to be released in January.

About Players

The story created a sensation when it was published and it is said that the picture is even more thrilling.

Leatrice Joy says that with a little condensation or judicious cutting hers is a perfectly good Chinese name and that while she is playing in 'The Water Lily" Gouverneur Morris' story of China, she will use it. The name? Why—Lee Joy, of course.

May Allison, blonde Metro star, suffered three fractured ribs as the result of an afternoon of fun with some of her little admirers. The vivacious May was granted the rare privilege of an afternoon off from work in her latest starring picture, "Are Wives to Blame?" Being a great lover of children, she gathered all the young ones of the neighborhood at her palatial home in Beverly Hills and arranged a tea party for them on the lawn. Soon, childish games were indulged in, and in a game of "tag" Miss Allison stumbled, fell, and in some unaccountable way fractured three of her ribs.

"I didn't pay much attention to it at first, as there wasn't much pain," said Miss Allison, "but the next day the pain was exquisite.

"I just made up my mind I would grin and bear it as best I could. I can assure you it was very hard to turn a smiling face to the camera, all the time suffering untold agony."

Ray Gallagher to be Starred

Arthur Henry Gooden, well-known writer for the screen, has turned producer, and Director Bob Hill is already putting the finishing touches to the first of a series of two-reel farce comedies featuring that popular comedian, Ray Gallagher of Christie fame. The clever young star is ably supported by beautiful Mary Cooper and splendid cast.

Nineteen-twenty-one resolutions ripe.

Samuel Goldwyn is still in town.

Charlie Chaplin is back in our city.

Regg Barker reports plenty of winter at Banff.

Winney Sheehan has quit our town cold and gone back to New York.

Myrtle Stedman by way of diversion is playing her first heavy role.

The Del Monte Hotel is entertaining Director Wallace Worsley and Goldwyn Company.

Naomi Childers claims her ambition is to design the costumes for a costume picture.

Eddie Cline tips off the information that Buster Keaton's next picture will be "Hard Luck."

Tony Moreno has two leading women for his play, "Three Sevens"—Jean Calhoun and Beatrice Bernham.

Wesley Barry fell from a horse last week and his injuries are reported by Pete Smith as being the loss of two freckles.

A volcano is being built at Universal City. Wonders never cease. Norman Dawn is responsible for this in "Hidden Fires."

Chas. Richmond has blossomed out as an author and Bernie Fineman has bought from him "The Love Wager" to star Katherine MacDonald.

Universal Publicity Department has been announcing the return of the Stroheim Co. from Monterey, Calif., weekly for the past several weeks.

We are advised that Howard Hickman never wears putties even though all other directors do. It's great to be different.

Jesse James, grandson of Jesse, himself, is to play the lead in a film based on the wild life of the bandit.

Allen Holubar is still seeing "Man, Woman, Marriage" on the ceiling while he continues to nurse his appendix.

Jess Robbins has finished one with Jimmie Aubrey, "The Blizzard." It was all made in the sunny clime of Southern California.

The boys—Eddie and Lee—Lyons and Moran were guests of honor at a big dinner party the other night. It was not titled, "One Awful Night."

And now we are to be honored by the presence of Mr. S. Barrett McCormick, who is to do the honors at the Kinema and Ambassador theatres for G. B. and S. L.

Russ Simpson, a native son of Cal, is up in Canada, where the mercury is playing hide and go seek with 40 degrees below. Russ sent his B. V. D.'s home by express.

There is such a sad scene in "Mr. and Miserable Jones" that Mason Hopper, director, and Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix were all crying at one time.

Appendicitis has been playing havoc with several of our well known citizens. Tom Santchi, Allen Holubar, Mitchell Lewis, and others have been attacked.

Universal City laboratorymen have found a liquid used in cleaning film has an alcoholic kick that does its work by inhalation. The number of applicants is increasing daily.

Jack White has a new leading woman in the person of Joey McCreery, who has adopted the name of "Elinor Lynn," for the screen. Why turn down a good Irish name like that?

Our town was given the privilege to see "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" when the world premier was held at Miller's theatre on Christmas Day. Emmett Flynn put this one over.

And now the story reaches us that Pauline Stark, who is playing the part of a girl who becomes blind in "Snow Blindness," is suffering with an affliction of the eyes, which in reality is snow blindness.

Sessue Hayakawa is responsible for the statement that the English language is called "The Mother Tongue" because father does not get a chance to use it—all of which has nothing to do with the making of films.

Tod Browning has fallen into the ways of these prohibition days and purchased Mrs. Browning a four o'clock tea car. It is of the sedan type, has a regular engine, and everything, with a lot of things out of sight.

Bill Keefe, who invaded Europe for a star is now going to Mexico City to get scenes for "The Unfoldment," Florence Lawrence's first come back film. Geo. H. Kern, general manager of the company, went along to see that Bill came back.

Benj. B. Hampton has killed off the words "scenario" and "continuity" and all the people around his place who have anything to do with the writing of productions for the screen are known as "dramatists"—elevating one's self by his own boot straps—as it 'twere.

Just think what Mack Sennett has done toward up-lifting the industry. All of his girls have been leaving comedy to get into drama. Look at the list—Gloria Swanson, Alice Lake, Mary Thurman, Juanita Hansen, Ora Carew, and now Dale Fuller steps out to do her first dramatic work. She will be seen as the emotional maid of Stroheim's "Foolish Wives."

Colin Campbell needed a cat to take on location for "Black Roses" and while they were on location the cat ran away. The owner then claimed it was a pedigreed cat and worth $500.00 and demanded payment for the cat, but Colin, Scotchman as he is, answered the request in a Scotch manner, by saying, "We would pay you for the use of the cat, but it broke its contract by running away."

A Chicago paper speaks of Micky Neilan as the most American of all the directors, and then goes on to say, "There are no limits to him, no fences to his imagination, no regards for traditions, no hobbies, no theories, nothing but boiling, bubbling, instinctive cleverness, insight and unerring showmanship. A mocking, laughing, thrilling, crying genius." All of which answers the question of why Micky decided to take a vacation.

Will "Passion" Make Pola Negri in U. S.?

TO Pola Negri, the Continental emotional actress, whose debut in this country is made in "Passion," released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is attributed the faculty of exercising that same peculiar quality of appeal that marked the personality of Bernhardt, Nazimova, Petrova and other notable foreign exponents of histrionism. That appeal is the more puzzling in that it has never been quite analyzed, but every so often reviewers and the public form an opinion that there is mystery surrounding a new star, and results at the box office are, as a consequence, notable.

A quality ever present in the personalities of all the women of the stage that have created dramatic history in their day is the quality of mystery—an eerie appeal behind which the soul of the real woman is never revealed to the public. This quality of mystery is one of the characteristics attributed in great measure to the striking Polish actress, Pola Negri, who is star of a European photo-drama, "Passion," which Associated First National has secured for presentation in America. In her the "eternal feminine" assumes a sphinxlike stature to beguile, allure and charm.

Playgoers who remember the furore created when Nazimova sprang overnight into the glare of prominence under Henry Miller's management on Broadway after enduring a season of obscurity in an East Side Russian stock company, know how this personality and mystic appeal won her fame in a single night. Bernhardt's perennial appeal is no less an extraordinary manifestation of the "eternal feminine" expressing itself in characters as remote as Joan of Arc and Camille. Duse, Rachael, Guilbert and Modjeska, to name but a few stars of past and present greatness, confirm belief that in a supremely great actress there must dwell the element of the enigmatic.

If these be standards wherewith to measure the art of present applicants for fame, then Pola Negri seems destined to win immortality on the screen, since her impersonations and her individual personality are declared to radiate this charm of mystery suggesting now an Orientalism and now an Occidental fire and energy.

Her play brings into immediate comparison the names of a galaxy of the world's greatest actresses who have been seen (and heard) in the plot's leading role. The heroine of the story is Madame DuBarry, chief and appealing figure in much dramatic and fictional literature. The episodes taken from the life of this temporarily glorified Parisian milliner are suited to the capricious, luxurious genius of the actress.

The South Feels Proud of Its Latest Picture Theatre

Atlanta Gets Credit for Location of Million Dollar Howard

THE Howard theatre, Atlanta, the newest link in the S. A. Lynch Enterprises chain, and which is owned by Mr. Lynch, personally, and Troupe Howard, is the most beautiful theatre in the South—and, indeed, one of the most beautiful in the entire United States.

It has been two years since the ground was broken for this building, and when it opened its doors on December 13th it had consumed $1,500,000. The house itself has cost an even $800,000, and is the most completely equipped and most up-to-date theatre in the South.

The Howard seats 2,700 people—1,700 on the main floor, 900 in the balcony, and 100 in loges and two boxes. There are 27 fire exits, any one of which brings one, with breath-taking suddenness, from the heart of the theatre to the open street and safety. The house is as nearly fireproof as any theatre can be built—but it is a comfort to know that fire-exits have been so carefully prepared.

The front of the theatre is in the Roman temple style. Save that there is no sweeping flight of steps to lead one to the loggia, it might have been lifted bodily from Rome itself. It is in beautiful polished marble, and the cashier's booth—the box-office—will occupy a very small space, but will be in perfect tone with the rest of the front, being built of marble and equipped with the latest and most complicated system of Automaticket machines. This booth alone cost $4,000.

Entering the storm-doors, and just outside of the loggia, one finds ornate, specially designed lobby-frames, cunningly lighted, and with special, hand-drawn posters. Inside another set of doors, the loggia proper commences. It is very large, and done in cream and gold, with touches of new-leaf-green and soft, dull blue. The walls, up to shoulder height, are of travertine, above that, cream and gray marble.

From the center of the loggia rises a beautiful marble staircase, of cream and gray marble—and in this marble there are faint, elusive tones of pink, barely p ceptible, and not to be seen unless looks closely.

This staircase branches, at a wide la ing, leading left and right up a sma staircase and into a section of seats wh sell at a lower price than the main part the balcony. There is a large, arc doorway leading straight back from main staircase, which brings one to balcony-loges and the main part of balcony.

Downstairs, on either side of the gr staircase, leads into the main floor. the left of the staircase is a coat-ch room (something no other theatre, e the legitimate houses, in Atlanta hav and on the right are Mr. Ralph DeBrul offices. (Mr. DeBruler is the manage the Lynch houses in Atlanta, and manage the Howard.) room, furnished in antique mahogany. There will be a waiting room, furnished in mahogany, and Mr. DeBruler's secretary will have a smaller office, just between the main waiting room and Mr. DeBruler's office.

The theatre, as a whole, has the color-scheme of cream and gold, with the touches of leaf green and warm blue. The seats are handsomely upholstered in leather, very thick and well cushioned, and are thirty-four inches apart.

The stage is hung in gold and purple—at the top, across the proscenium arch, are draped curtains of pale gold satin and brocaded velvet, caught up with heavy gold cords. Leading from this arch back to the top of the screen is a ceiling of golden yellow silk, drawn taut. From the arch across the proscenium top to the floor of the stage will fall graceful, heavy draperies of purple velvet, held back with golden cords. The two arched doorways through which the musicians will enter the orchestra pit are curtained in gold-and-purple velvet. At times during the presentation of pictures, these draperies will be drawn back, to reveal paintings, well lighted, that will carry out the spirit and character of the picture.

The orchestra pit accommodates forty-five musicians, but the Howard will open with thirty-five. This will be augmented later with others, as Mr. DeBruler finds musicians he wants particularly. Beneath the stage there are six beautiful little dressing-rooms, decorated like private boudoirs, and curtained in cretonne. There is also a smoking and lounging room for the musicians, with forty lockers, shower-baths, and every possible convenience for the comfort of these men.

The stage is supported by tall, graceful pillars of cream and green marble, while the two boxes, each at balcony height, have similar columns. These boxes are fitted with gold Italian chairs, and each is lighted by a tall, beautiful cathedral lamp, whose estimated age is between two and three hundred years, and which was imported from Italy at a cost of several hundred dollars each.

The carpets for the entire theatre are almost an inch thick, in a pale buff, crossed with a thread of very deep blue. The balcony loges are carpeted with this, and furnished in tan wicker chairs, upholstered in buff-and-blue cretonne.

The promenade, at the head of the grand staircase, is somewhat similar in shape and space to that of the Rialto, New York City, with a very high dome, silvered, and in which is hung the companion to the two cathedral lamps—a very rare and beautiful old Italian candelabra, with more than twenty lights, each with a pendant of crystal. The candelabra is richly carved, in the well-known Italian filigree design.

The promenade, carpeted in buff and blue, is furnished with comfortable lounging chairs of tan wicker, upholstered in buff and blue, with tall standing lamps, shaded in yellow silk, over which dark blue has been drawn taut. At the right of this promenade, a ladies' writing-room, done in cream and gold, and furnished in

Tivoli Is Latest Acquisition to New York Theatres

New House to Be Equipped with Typhoon System of Heating

A HANDSOME, new theatre is shortly to be added to the already large list of New York picture houses. In the vicinity of the well-known Capitol theatre, this new structure occupies a large site on the northwest corner of Eighth avenue and 50th street, and will be known as the Tivoli.

In the directorate of the Tivoli theatre will be found many of the names long identified with the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises, and the success of the new project is doubly assured by such association with these progressive exhibitors.

The Tivoli will contain 1,600 seats, and, in addition, there will be a roof garden accommodating 1,000 people where pictures will also be shown. Special attention will be devoted to the musical program and provision has been made for the construction of a small stage for solo music by well-known artists.

In addition to the theatre proper, the operation includes the rebuilding of six store and apartment buildings, adjoining the theatre and facing Eighth avenue.

The front of the theatre building portion is designed in a free adaptation of French Renaissance with sgraffitto decorations in various panels. The design is enhanced by means of an imposing open balcony flanked on both sides with Ionic columns, and all parts of this front will be built in terra cotta with a rich limestone effect. The balance of the Eighth avenue front of the building will be faced with pressed brick, designed in Colonial feeling, all of which has been well studied by the architects to make harmonious combination with the terra cotta theatre front.

The theatre and roof garden are entered from Eighth avenue through a lobby two stories high with vaulted ceiling. Elevator and stairs to the roof garden open into this same wide lobby.

The interior of the theatre is designed in Italian Renaissance of imposing proportions and unusually fine detail in its ornamental parts. The stairs to the balcony will be in marble, and in other respects the interior will be finished with the finest and most substantial materials.

The roof garden will be provided with novel features of subdued lighting. The screen and the roof will have an illuminated arcade on either side, forming an artistic setting for the pictures. The roof will be enclosed with picturesque pressed brick piers, separated with stucco faced panels, simulating the Colonial Garden effect.

The design and erection of the Tivoli is under the direct supervision of Simeon B. Eisendrath and B. Horwitz, architects, 18 East 41st street, New York City. They have shown unusual skill and artistic feeling in producing in one building so unusual a combination of styles. This becomes especially noticeable when consideration is given to the difficulties of incorporating the remodeled old buildings and the new theatre building into an artistic ensemble.

The question of heating and cooling the Tivoli was given much attention, and the final decision of the owners and architects calls for a combined Typhoon System of cooling and ventilation.

The system as finally approved by the architects requires two No. 16 Typhoons for heating the theatre, one on the east side of the auditorium delivering the heated air through a grille in the ceiling and one at the west side delivering the air through ornamental grilles in the side of the stage, thereby insuring thorough distribution of the heated air throughout the auditorium.

The cooling of the theatre will be accomplished by two No. 16 Typhoons and four No. 15 Typhoons. Two of the No. 15s will be set in close proximity to the heating fans and the other two will deliver their cooling and refreshing breezes directly over the balcony.

A portion of the air delivered to the auditorium will be used for cooling and ventilating the mezzanine, and positive results in this direction are insured by the installation of another No. 16 Typhoon located in the space over the mezzanine ceiling, the air being drawn from the orchestra to the mezzanine and passing out through a grille in the mezzanine ceiling.

Each Typhoon will have its individual motor drive, and it will be possible to handle each separately. In this way the entire Typhoon System will prove very flexible and adaptable to all weather conditions and temperature changes.

In a later issue we hope to present more detailed information regarding this notable addition to New York's amusement palaces, showing photographs of the interior and exterior treatment and complete plans of the mechanical equipment.

Reilly and Hall to Draw Up Plans

The new Strand theatre at Schenectady, N. Y., will be designed by Reilly and Hall, architects, of New York City, according to a sign which has just been placed in the arcade leading to the present Proctor house in that city. The new building will adjoin the Proctor theatre, the sign marking the proposed entrance to the lobby. Operations will get under way within the next few weeks, according to reports.

Cream Glaze Terra Cotta with Sculptured Frieze and Pediment

RUBUSH & HUNTER, ARCHITECTS

An ALL-DAY, ALL-WEEK, YEAR-ROUND Advertisement for Your THEATRE

IF you study this Circle Theatre building carefully, you will see how well it carries out the idea of a high class "feature" theatre.

The architect has made for this theatre owner a front which is attractive because it is designed with full appreciation of the material in which it is executed. Not only the flat surfaces but the modelled ornament and the sculptured frieze and pediment are of beautiful, fine-textured Terra Cotta.

Terra Cotta gives you not only beauty and variety of form, but of color, too. The color of this Circle Theatre building is delicate creamy-white glaze—unfading, always clean and attractive.

Terra Cotta is a permanent structural material.

The owner of the Circle Theatre is enthusiastic about Terra Cotta. He has had four years in which to test it. Other theatre owners, after ten years or more, tell the same story. They say Terra Cotta not only attracts the night crowds, but is a permanent advertisement all day long, seven days a week, and a sure business puller.

Before you decide, get the facts. The brochure, "The Theatre", is full of pictures of beautiful theatres from Coast to Coast. Write for it today, to National Terra Cotta Society, 1 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

Data on Eastman School of Music

A recent copy of the Building Progress Bulletin, from which the illustration on this page of the lobby of the Eastman School of Music was taken, has this to say about it:

"This sketch of the lobby of the motion picture-symphony concert auditorium conveys an idea of the architectural design but not of the beauty of the color scheme. The lobby is in the shape of a perfect ellipse, and will be 36 feet wide and 72 feet long. Entrance will be from the corner of Main Street East and Gibbs Street. The ceiling will be 12 feet high and slightly domed. The walls will be finished in Botticinno marble, with six columns of black and gold marble. The entire floor will be of Travertine stone, which is cut from the lava beds in Italy.

"Entirely in Italian renaissance style, the lobby will be lighted by two bronze tripods, with smaller ornamental lighting fixtures placed on the pilasters. One of the features of the lobby will be two mural paintings, each 5½ by 10 feet, directly opposite the main entrance. Entrance from the street will be by six pair and two single doors; there will be three pairs of doors leading into the Music Hall. The lobby will be furnished with several carved marble seats."

Comerford's Capitol Open in Wilkes-Barre

THE new Capitol theatre, recently opened at Wilkes-Barre, is one of the finest vaudeville and motion picture play houses in Pennsylvania. It has a seating capacity of about 2,600 and is located in the very center of the city, on the Public Square and in a territory where it will cater to the amusement wants of over 300,000 people.

The Capitol is owned by the Metropolitan Theatre Company of which L. A. De Graf is president. It is under the management of the Comerford Amusement Company of Scranton and Wilkes-Barre, of which M. E. Comerford is managing director. The Capitol has been playing to capacity houses every day since it opened and demonstrated the wisdom of its promoters in adding another to the many excellent theatres in the Wyoming Valley.

The heating and ventilating system is one of the most elaborate ever installed in any theatre. For cold weather the theatre is heated and ventilated by a hot blast system capable of supplying thirty cubic feet of warmed fresh air to every occupant each minute and a similar amount of cooled air in the summer time. This ventilation is supplied in such a manner as to make the theatre free from drafts. The system is the Webster Vacuum type.

Atlanta Proud of New Howard

Italian gold chairs and spider-legged writing tables, holds stationery of an odd shape, with the name of the theatre engraved on it. Across from this, is a very large rest-room, paneled in black walnut, furnished in wicker, with a telephone booth, and furnished with the daintiest of boudoir necessities and luxuries. A "retiring-room," with a dozen toilets and wash-stands, with walls mirror-outlined, is done in white tiles and white enamel. A maid will be on duty here all the time, and will have a plentiful supply of face-powder, rouge, and similar feminine requirements.

At the other end of the promenade is a men's writing room, a masculine version of the ladies'. It is paneled in walnut, and furnished in a style well calculated to appeal to the masculine sex. A smoking room, of unusual size, and a booth with two telephones, all sorts of smoking things, and the like, will have a distinct appeal to men.

There are any number of features that are not found in the average movie theatre. At the left of the stage is a soundproof reviewing room, where Mr. DeBruler will screen pictures for booking, and where he and the orchestra leader may plan out musical settings and prologues. For prologues and musical acts of merit and beauty are to be a permanent feature of the Howard's presentation of pictures.

The Howard is purely an Atlanta enterprise—backed by Atlanta capital, designed by an Atlanta firm of architects, Hentz, Reid and Adler, decorated by W. E. Browne Decorating Company, of Atlanta, and built by Atlanta labor. The only piece of work in the building that was not done by Atlanta hands is the beautiful ornamental plastering, which was done by Jacobs & Co. of New York.

The stage of the Howard is 20 feet deep and 40 feet wide. The small proscenium arch is 25x26, and can be made larger, if necessary.

The operating booth, which is situated at the top of the balcony, is, in effect, a building entirely separate from the main theatre. It is built of solid concrete and steel, and houses three specially built Simplex machines, and one stereoptican machine, for color effects and "dissolves." Four operators will be on duty throughout the day. The room is very large, and one end of it has been fitted up with rugs, comfortable chairs, while the other end has been made into a "wash-room" with two toilets and the latest and most sanitary facilities for the comfort of the operators. A door at the left leads out to the roof of a three-story building, and also gives access to a platform on which is built the tremendous electric sign, one of the biggest and surely the most beautiful in Atlanta.

There are two ventilating systems used —washed air and "mushroom." The heater room is beneath the grand staircase, and, from the outside, it looks, in all its white and gold and blue beauty, like a well-designed bit of ornamentation.

There is a beautiful specially built ert Morton pipe organ, which cost a $35,000.

Throughout the house, the ligh three-color, screened in pale gol taut-drawn, with small gold tassels.

The admission prices will be 85 for the loges and boxes and these may be reserved for any perfor designated. The main floor will cents; to the first cross-over in th cony, 55 cents; from the first to th ond cross-over in the balcony 45 and back of that 35 cents. Equipment Operating— Projection Questions Answered

The Importance of Selecting Proper Generating Equipment

To Get Better Pictures Requires Better Current Control

BY A. D. CAMERON

AS the motion picture takes its place in the theatrical, industrial and educational field, there is constantly growing demand for BETTER PICTURES. Producers are equipping studios with the very best equipment for scenic and photographic effects. Exhibitors are building theatres which are unrivalled in magnificence. Yet the favorable impression created by this tremendous investment may be nullified by the selection of improper equipment for controlling the electrical supply for the projection lamps. An appreciation of this fact is largely accountable for the increased demand for G. E. motor generator Compensarcs.

General Electric motor-generator, type A.C. to D.C. compensarc

It is in the box office where the ultimate value of any equipment for BETTER PICTURES is determined. The theatre which offers its patrons first class films projected without flicker, shut-downs or annoying waits between reels, is the one which draws the largest audiences. People go where they know quality entertainment can be found and the way in which a picture is shown is quite as important as the picture itself.

The Way to Better Pictures

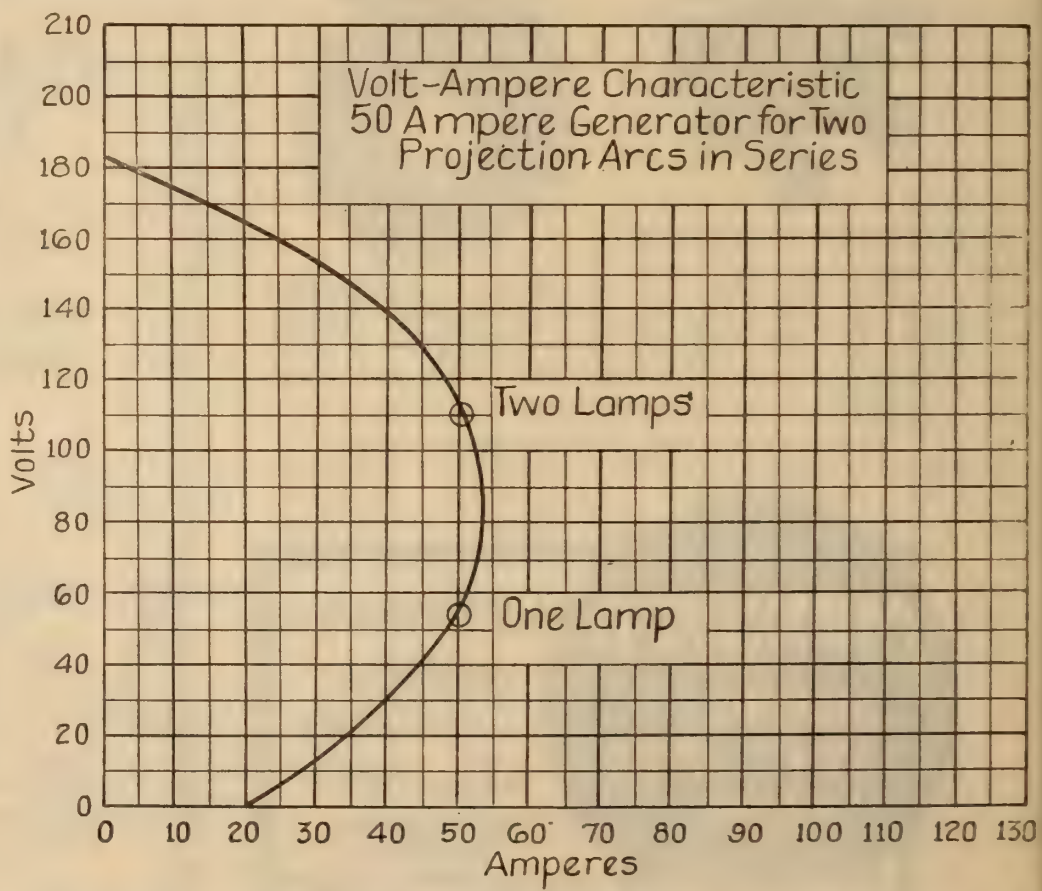
G. E. Compensarcs have been designed to provide two important aids to BETTER PICTURES:

First—To operate two lamps at the highest possible overall efficiency.

Second—To permit perfect projection by an inexperienced operator, particularly on two-lamp operation.

These features afford the following advantages:

Steady arc; simple outfit; quiet operation; reasonable overload capacity; maintenance of current at set value; quiet arc strike and "settle down"; white light free from discoloration; ease of repairing in case of emergency; ease in raising or lowering current at arc; constant screen illumination at changeover protection from changes in supply voltage conditions.



The Elusive Kilowatt

Efficiency can no longer be neglected in selecting generating equipment for projection purposes. The voltage supplied by the power company must be reduced to the voltage required by the arc by the most economical method because the theatres that used 35 and 50 amperes for projection a few years ago, are now using 100 and 125 amperes. Where alternating current only is available, the conversion to direct current for the arc must not be attended by the use of wasteful resistance. This is particularly true where direct current is available. The initial cost of the theatre is an investment and enters into the annual cost only in the overhead items of interest and depreciation. Power bills are maintenance charges and must be met every month. The best equipment is the best investment because it pays regular dividends in the form of deductions from these power bills. It is an interesting fact that not only may the projection be improved but the operating costs may be reduced by the use of the proper G. E. Compensarc.

(To be concluded)

Notice! and Warning

The Projection Department of the NEWS has received a notice from Philadelphia to the effect that a Powers mechanism No. 36,317 was stolen in that city on December 9th. If a mechanism of this make and number is offered to you kindly get in touch with this office by telegraph and we will do the rest.

This curve was prepared to show how it is possible to operate either one or two arcs from the same compensarc

Exhibitor's Supply Adds to Staff

The Exhibitors Supply Company of Chicago, has had perhaps one of the most phenomenal growths of any of the concerns in the industry engaged in the selling of theatre equipment.

Only five years and one-half ago, H. A. R. Dutton, now president and general manager of the Company, K. R. Douglas, vice president and G. A. Lincoln, treasurer, started the business in a small room in the Mallers Building. Today the business has grown to such proportions that offices and stores are located in five cities, Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Indianapolis.

Mr. Dutton, who has been in full charge of purchasing, sales and advertising reached the point where he felt it was more than one man could handle and he wisely added an advertising and sales promotion man and a purchasing agent.

George E. De Kruif, who has had twelve years experience in such work has been put in charge of advertising and sales promotion.

W. J. Ryan, formerly assistant purchasing agent for the American Steel Machinery Company will sit in at the purchasing agent's desk.

Another move to better the good service the Exhibitors Supply Company has been giving the exhibitor is the placing of Joseph J. Duffy, as manager of Chicago Sales, releasing Mr. Lincoln, for general sales work.

Projection Room of Branford

THE Branford, Newark, New Jersey, which opened on December 16th is the newest, largest and finest in the State of New Jersey. The Branford seats two thousand in the orchestra and fifteen hundred in the balcony. There is little doubt that a thousand more could have been secured had the management cared to sacrifice the comfort of the patrons. The Branford is built fan-shape, widening out from the orchestra so that there are no objectionable side seats. The balcony has been well cut back over the orchestra, which gives an unusually spacious effect but reduces seat capacity. Houses as large as the Branford usually have a gallery and the absence of this floor further cuts down the number of seats. The orchestra seats are also unusually wide.

Although the Branford is one of the largest theatre in the world, there is not a single supporting pillar in the entire building and every seat gives a plain view of the stage and screen. Jacob Fabian, owner of the Branford, has gained an enviable reputation in New Jersey as an enterprising and successful exhibitor. He makes the following announcement regarding the Branford. "Two years of strenuous efforts and almost two million dollars have been expended by myself and associates to provide the city of Newark with the finest motion picture house in the United States. Every known device that would serve to protect the safety and comfort of our patrons, every architectural embellishment that could lend beauty and dignity to a refined place of amusement has been employed."

There is no doubt that Mr. Fabian has succeeded in providing his patrons with everything that money could buy for a great modern picture house. What, however, has been done by Mr. Fabian to make the "Heart of the Picture House" equal other parts of this splendid building? Have the owners, architect and contractors cooperated to make the projection room as fine as it should be in a house such as the Branford? Is the projecting room properly equipped with the very latest devices, and is it as comfortable and safe as it should be? It is a pleasure to state that the Branford has one of the best equipped projection rooms in the United States and does great credit to all those connected with the building of this theatre.

The projection room proper is large, well-lighted and well ventilated. It contains three Powers 6B type "E" projectors, Power's Speed Indicators for each machine and Peerless Arc Controls. The speed indicators are arra to show in the manager's office and also b the orchestra leader. Ammeters registerin current passing through the arc are mou with Power's Speed Indicators, on panel tween the machines. In view of the impor of this theatre, and taking into consider the fact that it was impossible to complet installation of some of the equipment as will be permanently arranged, the plans further details of the Branford proje rooms will be given in a later issue.

The picture is projected a distance of feet onto a Minusa screen.

Mr. Fabian is an experienced and succe exhibitor fully recognizes the importance o human element in projection and unques ably has done everything possible for the s and comfort of his projectionists. The b is far more spacious than would appear f the photograph and there are windows a those in the picture. Two connecting ro containing the balance of the equipment connecting doors and open onto the roof. projection room has its lavatory and als shower bath.

The projectionists have been with Mr. Fa in his other houses and all of them have f ten to fourteen years experience in their ch profession. The projectionists are H. De J. Corbett and T. Burns. Edward McGr also shown in the photograph, came over f Mr. Fabian's Paterson Theatre to look the stallation over for the opening shows. It s justifiable in this instance to emphasize good judgment of Mr. Fabian in employing jectionists who have thoroughly proven th selves reliable and experienced and then viding conditions and equipment which ins good work.

See next week's news. It will tell you of the music convention and what it will bring you.

Competition Open to Cameramen

TO stimulate interest in and further advance work for the screen, the Maryland Institute of Fine Arts of Baltimore, Md., offers a gold medal as the high award in a "still" contest to be conducted under the auspices of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

This contest is the outgrowth of a recent visit in New York by Professor Alon Bement, director of the Institute, at which time he was the guest of honor at an A. M. P. A. luncheon.

Details and preparatory work in connection with the contest were worked out by Mark Larkin and Samuel D. Palmer. The terms are as follows:

"In recognition of the motion picture as a distinctly American art, the Maryland Institute of Fine Arts, in order to stimulate interest in it and further advance work for the screen, offers the following contest, eligible to bonafide motion picture cameramen and still photographers regularly employed by motion picture companies, the winner to be rewarded with a suitably engraved gold medal.

"Judgment in connection with this contest will rest on the following pictures submited by the cameramen:

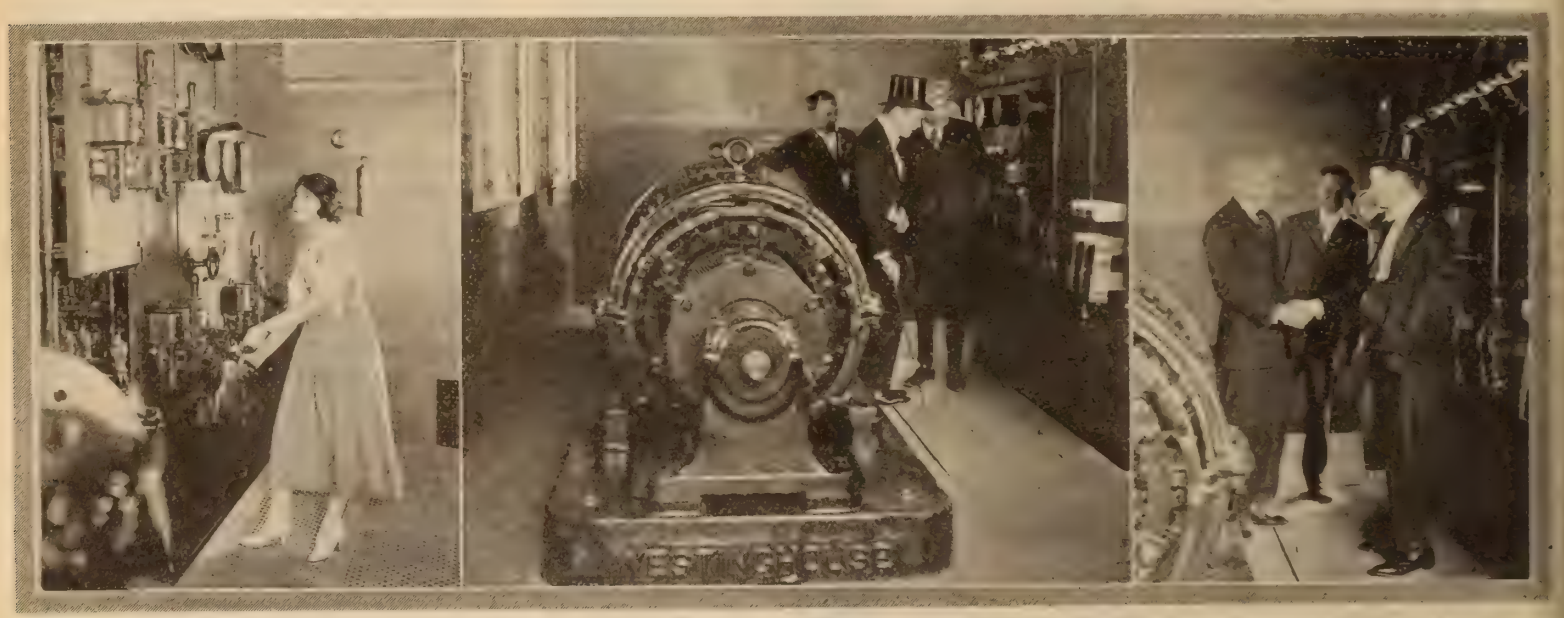
"The best two artistic pictures (one, soft focus if the photographer so chooses; and one straight photograph for magazine publication.—One of these pictures should be a portrait of the leading lady or star, and the other a study of, say, three of the leading characters. If it is a study of the three leading characters, it should be a picture that tells a story—a picture that illustrates the climax of the story or some particularly spectacular moment, or a situation wherein the composition of the picture or arrangement of characters has a distinct artistic value.

"The best two pictures for newspaper reproduction.—These should be particularly clear and contrasty, with every line sharply defined. One of them to be a portrait of the star or featured player the other a production still showing not more than three figures. These pictures should be distinctive for their news value. In other words, they must have in them a particular appeal to the dramatic editor, art editor, or news editor. The reproductive value of these pictures should be a great factor in deciding upon them.

"The best set of six pictures for lobby display purposes.—One of these pictures must contain in it elements sufficiently striking to give it the qualities of a poster. In other words, it must be a photograph that will prove particularly interesting to the passer-by. It must be so powerful and compelling that when displayed in a frame in the front of the lobby, it will catch the eye of a person standing on the curb and lure him into the lobby. The other pictures should show to the best advantage the most interesting pictorial features of the production. At least one still should show the most spectacular feature of the photoplay and if the costumes are particularly attractive, then at least one still should sell the clothes idea. Then, too, at least one still should deal with interior sets, showing their beauty, grandeur, etc. At least one other photograph should deal with exteriors. This picture will give the cameraman a splendid chance to turn out a thing of beauty, because he can play around with composition to his heart's content.

"The date of the contest is from Feb. 1 to April 16."

New Features in Prizma's "If"



IN addition to the general excellence of the Prizma natural color specialty titled "If," now showing at the Criterion Theatre, in New York City, this short feature contains some points of interest to the technical workers in the industry.

In the first place the double coated stock usually employed by Prizma in its natural color films has been supplanted in this case by a single coated stock. That means that the two colors popularly known as blue-green and red-orange have been combined in the single emulsion. This is the same emulsion by the way that is received from the film manufacturer and the color is produced without recoating or resensitizing in any way. Needless to say this in itself is worthy of mention because it has been thought that Prizma was essentially a double coat process. As far as the eye can tell the quality obtained in this last release has not suffered one whit by the employment of the single coat.

Secondly: a large number of the "shots" in this film contain the "Transformation" feature. In fact the picture itself is based on the results obtainable through the use of this idea.

The picture first shows the pictorial subject in flat black and white, then gradually the color is "faded in" until the subject is shown in all its natural colors.

This release is one of the finest ever put out by the makers and marks a real advance in color cinematograohy.

Soon we may expect feature films with the power plant as a background. At the left, Ann May is throwing the oil switch on a 200-h.p. Westinghouse set at the Metro Studio. The two views at the right show H. F. O'Brien, of the Westinghouse Co., instructing Charlie Ray in the eccentricities of the modern switchboard. These latter stills, by the way, were taken just before Ray indulged in a free-for-all battle with burglars which just naturally ruined his evening clothes

A New Year's Overture

Last week we told of the uses of music in seasonable situations, and in creating atmosphere for specific holidays. I listed a number of days: Christmas, St. Valentine's Day, Easter, Washington's Birthday, Hallowe'en, and along with each day was indicated the kind of music which could be used. I said then that while it may be practically impossible to book pictures which are in season, the atmosphere can easily be provided with music. In placing the Christmas list of music I said that I have purposely waited until the last moment to offer some thoughts, so as not to interfere with any plans which you may have had on foot. My purpose in these articles is to be suggestive rather than purely serviceable, to arouse the imaginations of the readers, that they may follow their own inclinations along the lines I have started.

It is with the same plan in mind that I now publish my New Year's Overture*. (As you read this over, can you not see how you make a Springtime Overture or a Winter's Eve Overture?)

Charles D. Isaacson's New Years Overture

1920 THIS TEXT APPEARS UPON THE SCREEN	1921 THIS IS THE MUSICAL SCORE-SHEET.
A—Solemnly the dying year is carried in state by the universe; to be entombed in history. Humanity follows in naked feet, treading the icy snow, heads bent, mourning the passing of a mighty year, a year fraught with tragic memories and vain hopes. A year of love, of passion, of sometime joy and sometime sorrow A year of mumbling discontent and hunger, of misery and pain. The purple procession mounts slowly the interminable peak of time.	A—Beethoven, 3rd symphony, Second Movement (Adagio Assai) down to the end of C minor—(eliminate C major.)
B—Black and blacker becomes the atmosphere, until not a sign of light can be seen. It is the dark before the dawn.	B—Write in an interlude of two bars of slow restrained chord for full orchestra.
C—From the earth below rise the sounds of souls that murmur, praying for surcease of pain, praying for the coming of a newer life and a finer day. "Bring us to see the sunshine; bring us to see the light of love; bring us to see the birth of a diviner peace on earth." "Something better, something sweeter. "Something purer, something never known before "Something before which the past will seem puny— "Something new—we pray, we hope, we plead."	C—Blend into Nocturne in E flat (Chopin) arranged for violin solo (not necessary to play it all—just about eighteen bars).
D—As if in echo of those who seek the unknown, lifts this voice of the soul that yearns only for the past: "The hours I spent with Thee, "Dear Heart.— "Memories that bless and Burn— "Memories—memories."	D—Blend into "The Rosary" for soprano solo.
E—Now silence, awful blackness and Infinity of Silence. Then procession is at the peak of the world. The emperor of time has dug the grave—Lower the bier, lower the dead. 'Tis the end of the year.	E—Blend into about nine bars of Ase's Death (Greig).
F—Hark! Midnight. From a myriad of spires the churchbells ring, Midnight, and the birth of Time. Off with the old—on with the new. The King is dead—long live the king. Confusion! Madness! Join in—come, lift your voice. 'Tis Babel!	F—Twelve slow solemn blows on the bell, against a vox humana organ background, blending then into a development of chimes to represent church bells, this building up a clanging of the whole orchestra, the use of all the traps—a mad New Year's greeting.
G—Now like the Mardi Gras, the whole world goes Dancing, Lilting, Screaming a Welcome. To the New King; to the New Year, Happy New Year, Happy New Year. Draw the curtain aside now.—We will see the intimate secrets of a Bohemian New Year's party. Shocking! Drain the bottles. Shocking! Kiss the women. Shocking! Dance the orgy.	G—This blends into the "Fete of Bagdad" (Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade") about twenty bars before the violin solo ONLY.
H—Yet one hears the soft whisper of violins.	H—Violin soloist plays about six measures of strain. Dead pause.
I—Now the old-time songs. In the streets, the laughing, harmonized songs of goodfellowship. The inebriation of cheer and beer! (Oh ancient rites, oh obsolete words.)	I—Now frankly medley of New Year's fun. Chorus fragment—"Jingle Bells," into fragment "Merrily We Roll Along," into fragment, "There's Music in the Air."
J—Yet again tender songs of motherhood, childhood and sweethearts.	J—Fragment "Annie Laurie." Fragment "Auld Lang Syne."
K—All over the world. The new year is greeted. By Sister France, by England of old ruddy days, by native Italy.	K—Fragment "Marseilleise." Fragment English anthem. Fragment Italian song.
L—And even—in this day of a newer life—even by repentant Germany. Then the Nation of Peace and Felowship—the Earth's king.	L—Slight pause. Fragment "Wacht am Rhine." About ten bars of "Star Spangled Banner."
M—It is early New Year's morning. It is early New Year's morning. It is early New Year's morning and the world keeps right on. Keeps on. A mad world, gentlemen, a mad world, but a happy New Year to you. To you.	M—Rapid close, about twelve bars ending "Scheherezade."

* Editor's Note: Under the title of Charles D. Isaacson's New Year Overture, 1920, 1921, this is being shown New Year's Week in the Brooklyn Strand Theatre (Edward L. Hyman, managing director, Alois Reiser, conductor, Katherine Stang, violinist, Olive Nevin, soprano and mixed quartette of voices. This is where the Interpretative Overture of Marche Slav (Tschaikovsky) was played with such great success with a screen text of Mr. Isaacson's running during the progress of the orchestral playing.

The New Music Forum

(Under this heading the new ideas, queries, suggestions are gathered. This is where the motion picture fraternity gets together on music.)

FROM THE MUSICAL INDUSTRIES

Music Editor:

The writer fully appreciates the opportunity to cooperate with this big movement of bringing more closely together those who are interested in music and the motion picture interests.

In that connection would say I think the proper man for you to enlist would be Mr. Richard Aldcroft, who is president of the Music Industries Chamber of Commerce, with headquarters at 105 West 40th St. This chamber represents a business of about a million dollars.

I would also mention the name of Mr. Alfred L. Smith, their general manager; also Mr. C. M. Tremaine, who is the head of the Bureau of the Advancement of Music.—Spambach Piano Company.

Dear Editor:

I want to register for the Motion Picture Music Conference. Please advise me of the necessary steps. Certainly you know how to put a thing over, and I presume the conference will be a great success from outward appearances even if it will be impossible to do much practical good at so young an art.—T. Scott Burnham, Editor, American Organist.

Dear Editor:

Your letter of November 24 received and it interests me very much, as the question of better music for pictures is most important and you can rest assured that the writer will be in attendance on the specified date.

If there is anything further you may do regarding this, please be sure to notify me.—James B. Kelly, Managing Director, World Motion Picture Corp.

FROM A CELEBRATED ORGANIST

My Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have taken the society of which I told you. Frank Seymour Hastings is its president and its vocal make-up—there are many quite prominent soloists enrolled—excellent. I am hoping to make it one of the best of New York's male choruses.

By the way, my plans have so shaped themselves that I could, with advantage to myself, take a relief organist's job in a decent New York (or nearby) theatre.

I'm very interested indeed in the conference and expect to be "right in it." I certainly hope so!—Richard Henry Warren, Conductor, Singer's Club, N. Y

Music Editor:

I hope the thing will prove an immense success. In fact I am sure it will, for I see in your columns that you have aroused nationwide interest—and upon this I must congratulate you.

In fact your columns in Motion Picture News are really the most interesting, helpful and delightful reading matter I have ever come across in any magazine, and I am so glad it is being backed up so well by your Mr. Johnson. Surely both The News and you are making for yourselves a niche of fame and usefulness that will establish forever your names in the history of motion picture development. With best wishes for your success I am ever loyally yours, Joseph Carl Bresl.

Music Editor:

Notwithstanding my lack of ability in all things musical, I appreciate the wonderful music that is arranged for some of the pictures by the orchestra leaders of the motion picture theatres. I think it materially aids the presentation of the picture and gives the audience the right perspective and feeling for the incidents that are being portrayed.

I shall be very glad to attend the conference of picture executives, exhibitors and musical authorities that you are arranging to be held in New York City on January 24th, 25th and 26th.

My musical education has been sadly neglected. About the only instrument that I can make a sound on is a Jew's Harp. That was an accomplishment I had in my boyhood days. Don't know whether it has stayed with me or not, as I haven't tried it for thirty years.—Oscar A. Price, Pres., Associated Producers, Inc.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

When I wrote you last, I had just started playing at the uptown theatre I mentioned to you, as contractor and director. The last letter I received from you was, I believe, dated September 10, in which you advised me to get in touch with concert bureau.

I have had the orchestra in this theatre for nearly three months now and several things have occurred of late which makes it desirable for me to look around for another house for the near future. After opening with them, they decreased my orchestra to twelve. Several weeks ago I received instructions to cut to ten, and recently to cut to eight on account of a more or less mythical drop in business.

This is quite discouraging, particularly when I had such an exceptionally fine aggregation of musicians assembled, and on the next cut, I will be forced to sever my connection with this house, for I do not care to lead a six-piece orchestra.

It is possible that at this time you may know of a New York house who wish the services of a conductor with a large library. My library, you will remember, now covers over six thousand concert numbers. I have spent over a thousand dollars in augmenting it during the past three months, and for an orchestra of twenty-five men or less, it compares favorably with any theatre library in the city, not even excepting the large Broadway houses.

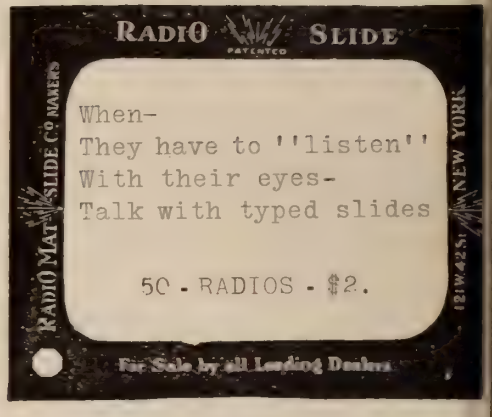
Work to Start Soon on Electric, in K. C.

Construction work on the most unique, as well as elaborate, motion picture theatre in Kansas will begin about February 20. The new structure, which will be erected in Kansas City, Kan., by E. J. Grubel and F. C. Grubel, who operate a chain of motion picture houses, will represent an investment of $500,000.



Among the many features of the Electric theatre, as it will be known, will be a children's playroom on the main floor. The theatre proper will be 80 feet wide and 49 feet high and will have a gray and green glazed terra cotta front. The center over the canopy will be of art glass, back of which will be operating constantly colored lights. The theatre, which will be entirely fireproof, will have a main lobby 30 by 40 feet, with a maximum ceiling height of 60 feet. A concealed system of lighting and the latest devices for manipulating lights will be in force, while the stage will be of ample size to accommodate the largest road attractions. This is merely a precautionary measure against a time when the theatre might be used for other purposes.

A spacious mezzanine lounge floor, directly over the foyer and under the balcony, will be constructed. The seating capacity will be approximately 2,000.

CANADA

Morris Kashin, formerly manager of the Broadway theatre, New York, and the Holman theatre, Montreal, has started out to build up a chain of theatres in Montreal for himself. His latest expansion has been the acquisition of the Victoria theatre in the Point St. Charles' section, which has a seating capacity of 660. Mr. Kashin is busy with a transformation process at which he is an old hand, his specialty being to popularize worn-down-at-the-heel houses. He declares that, if necessary, he will put on an absolutely free show at the Victoria and ask the patrons for contributions as they pass out, providing they have liked the show.

Three Rivers, Quebec, is a town that has two moving picture theatres which are noted for the magnificence and efficiency of their projection equipment. One of these houses is the Gaiety theatre, the proprietor of which is Mr. A. J. B. Robert. The latter has made a particular study of projection and has carried out the policy of equipping his theatre with fine facilities to insure proper presentation of pictures. It is interesting to note that the Gaiety, which has about 1,000 seats, has no less than three Powers projectors in regular use and the equipment also includes generator, transverter and gold fibre screen. Each of the projection machines is connected up with an inductor. The Gaiety is about five years old and has been remodelled.

The Imperial theatre is the other house in Three Rivers which is finely appointed. This house, which is under the management of Mr. T. H. Crow, has two Simplex projection machines and other necessary details. The Imperial also has about 1,000 seats and has been operated for about one year.

There is considerable rivalry between the two theatres regarding the quality of projection and, although the place is a comparatively small community, Three Rivers lays claim to having picture projection that is well up to accepted standards.

The Albee Building, which is the new moving picture exchange building in Montreal, Quebec, is to have a splendid private theatre for the use of the various exchanges which will have offices there. This screening room is being fitted with two Mazda Simplex projection machines.

All the offices have not yet been occupied in the Albee Building, which is located on Mayor street, near Bleury street, but practically all floor space on the many floors has been taken and exchanges in the district are moving in one after another.

The new manager of the Holman theatre, Montreal, Quebec, is Mr. Louis Garand who was formerly the assistant manager of the theatre under Mr. Morris Kashin. Mr. Garand has been with the Holman for a number of months previous to which he was an advertising writer with a local French newspaper. Mr. Garand served with distinction during the war as a member of the Canadian Expeditionary Force.

Mr. Garand has taken hold of the Holman theatre in fine style and is securing good crowds with Universal and Selznick pictures. He is using special fronts and has been presenting features in one week runs in a theatre with 950 seats.

The Amalgamated Exhibitors' Circuit, Limited, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax, N. S., has lined up a series of twelve feature releases for immediate booking and has also secured the Canadian distribution rights for a variety of new comedies and novelty subjects.

The short releases secured include twelve Comedyart two reel pictures, twelve each of the Ford Sterling, Chester Conklin, Louise Fazenda, Gail Henry and Billy Ritchie comedies, six new Alice Howell comedies, twenty-six Comiclassics, consisting of 1,500 feet of comedy and 500 feet of scenic, twenty-six Moranti comedies, fifty-two "Clay Play" one reel specials and fifty-two hand colored scenics and travelogues known as "Sunset Burred."

The twelve special features which have been secured for Canada include, "The Inner Voice," starring E. K. Lincoln; "Thoughtless Women," Alma Rubens; "His Brother's Keeper," Martha Mansfield and Roger Lytton; "Midnight Gambols," Marie Doro and Godfrey

Tearle; "Stolen Moments," "What Women Want," Louise Huff; "Her Majesty," Mollie King and Creighton Hale; "Finders Keepers," Violet Mesereau and Edmond Cobb; "Place of Honeymoons," Emily Stevens and Montagu Love; "Neglected Wives," Ann Luther and Claire Whitney; "Eternal Mother," Florence Reed, and "Beyond the Cross Roads," with Ora Carew.

Phil Hazza, the general manager of the company, has also secured fifteen two reel Westerns, featuring Harry Carey, which have never been shown in Canada.

The big features are to be released every two weeks in Eastern Canada.

Maurice M. Davis, general manager of the Davis Amusement Enterprises, Toronto, has secured the Canadian rights for "That Something," which is a film feature of direct interest to Rotary clubs. Mr. Davis has undertaken to arrange for the presentation of the picture in various Canadian cities under the auspices of local Rotary organizations. To aid in this exploitation, Mr. Davis has secured a number of books which tell the story of "That Something" and he will distribute these among Rotarians and others. He is making arrangements to appear before several of the Rotary clubs to explain the purpose of the feature.

The organization has been effected of Loew's (Canada), Limited, with a capitalization of $20,000,000 to take in the Loew theatre enterprises in various cities of Eastern Canada. The new company is really a consolidation of Loew interests and it is yet subject to the ratification of shareholders and bondholders who are associated with the various companies.

The huge capital allows for the absorption of the Loew theatres at Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Windsor and probably London. It is understood that there has been some delay in arranging details at the Loew house in London but this will be settled in time. There are three Loew theatres in Toronto, one of which was opened a few months ago. A new Loew theatre is now being opened in Windsor, Ontario, and Mr. Terry Turner, a Loew representative from New York, is now in that city to supervise the opening. The Loew house in Ottawa was opened on December 8. The Loew theatre, Montreal, was opened three years ago and the Francais theatre, St. Catherine street, Montreal, is being remodelled as a Loew theatre as well, it is declared.

David M. Hartford, of the Hartford Productions Corporation, Los Angeles, was a recent visitor in Calgary, Alberta, where he conferred with W. R. Marshall, head of Motion Pictures, Canada, Limited, regarding details for the shooting of various scenes in Alberta for forthcoming Hartford releases. Mr. Hartford is well known in Calgary because of his work in connection with the making of "Back to God's Country," which was produced in Alberta.

The Isis theatre, Calgary, Alberta, is being held on a tax title by the city, according to recent announcement, and, if arrangements can be made the theatre is to be converted into a dance hall by R. S. Shogron who has offered to take the building on a five year lease. The city has not yet taken complete possession of the premises although the rents are being collected by the city to apply against arrears of taxes. So far it has been found impossible to complete a deal for the proposed use of the theatre because the city is not recognized as the absolute owner, it is stated.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

"We are building too many garages and motion pictures theatres in Buffalo today and not enough homes and apartments," said Health Commissioner Francis E. Fronezak at the Buffalo Real Estate board luncheon in the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce. "For every house being built there are seven garages and movie houses going up," continued the commissioner. This may be true of garages, but it is not true in regard to picture houses, as there have been but three or four new picture theatres built in 1920. These are the Shea North Park, the Rivoli, the Capitol and the Criterion, which is the old Star remodelled. There has been nothing but remodelling and redecoration in the neighborhood theatres.

Eddie Weinberg of the Mark-Strand theatre is going to try an experiment with Otis Skinner in "Kismet," which will be the attraction at this theatre the week of December 26. Eddie had planned an elaborate exploitation campaign to put this picture over, but a week before the presentation date, he decided to cancel the entire program and let the picture stand on its merits. He did not even use an inch extra space in the newspapers. Eddie believes that a picture of the calibre of "Kismet" should go over big without the aid of exploitation.

The Rex theatre, Corry, Pa., was opened to the public Thursday evening, December 16, under the management of Manley Parker. The Rex was erected at a cost of $75,000. The house stands on the site of the old Rex theatre which was burned last winter. The new house has a seating capacity of 1,200 and is fireproof throughout. The decorations are elaborate.

Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres in the North Main street section of Buffalo, has been elected secretary of the new Twentieth Ward Luncheon club, which has just been organized to promote community spirit in the section in which the theatres are located. Elmer is there when it comes to boosting the community idea. He has been one of the most popular men in the North Main street section for several years as a consequence of his work.

The beautiful Goodwill theatre in Johnson City was opened Thursday evening, December 16. This house, which was built at a cost of $240,000 by George F. Johnson of the Endicott-Johnson shoe manufacturing company, has been leased by William H. Mack. The opening attraction was Wallace Reid in "What's Your Hurry." Mr. Mack also operates the Endwell in Endicott and City theatre in Binghamton. The house has a seating capacity of 1,600 and is decorated in ivory and gold. The architectural style follows somewhat the Rivoli in New York, acocrding to Fred M. Zimmerman, president of Nu-Art Pictures, Inc., who attended the opening as the guest of Manager Mack.

Bill Colhan, assistant manager of the Palace theatre, Buffalo, has returned from Syracuse where he was temporary manager of the Palace, recently taken over by Howard J. Smith of Buffalo. The new manager is H. L. Bradner, formerly manager of the Lyceum theatre, Elmira. The Palace is the old Top theatre and when Mr. Colhan finished placing a large Palace electric sign over the old Top display, a Syracuse newspaper declared that Bill had put the Palace "Over the Top." Bill likes Syracuse, but he would rather be in Buffalo, he says.

The Rev. Charles A. Stewart, of the North Presbyterian church, Buffalo, launched forth with an attack on the motion picture from his pulpit on Sunday, December 12, saying among other things that most of the movie shows are immoral. In behalf of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association, Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Criterion and North Park theatres, issued a statement in defense of the motion picture which was published by most of the local newspapers. Mr. Franklin gave some excellent arguments in refuting statements made by the Rev. Mr. Stewart.

When Otis Skinner comes to the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, Manager Arthur Skinner should have some job on his hands taking care of the crowds that undoubtedly will respond to the big exploitation campaign he has outlined. Arthur is some exploitation artist and he is going to wake the natives up right with his "Kismet" campaign.

Hugh Rennie, manager of the First National exchange, was host at a big gathering of exhibitors in the Hotel Iroquois, Buffalo, Monday noon, December 20, when the franchise was discussed. Moe Mark, president of the Strand theatre, New York, was one of the speakers. E. O. Hayes, city sales manager and Mr. Rennie also spoke briefly. Luncheon was served.

William McKay, formerly with Universal and who was to have gone with Nu-Art, died suddenly last week.

Howard Brink, Robertson-Cole manager, journeyed to Jamestown, N. Y., last week and signed up a lot of business. H. C. Bissell sent in a number of big contracts from the Southern Tier. Ray Powers is now special representative for Robertson-Cole and is handling all the big productions, including "Kismet."

Henry W. Kahn, manager of the Metro office, is pointing to the fact that Buster Keaton in "Neighbors" was given credit last week for attracting capacity audiences to Shea's Hippodrome. In fact business was so big that Mr. Franklin held the comedy over for the entire week.

"Buck" Taylor, general manager at the Gardiner exchange, reports the closing of a contract with the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, for an extended presentation of "The County Fair," "Before the White Man Came" opened at the Park theatre, Akron, N. Y., last week and broke all attendance records.

The Bertis Grand in Auburn has taken on the entire output, including the new Lillian Gish subjects. Mr. Zimmerman will screen "Before Dawn Came" next week in the Hotel Statler.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Merit exchange in the Palace theatre building, has signed up second run on "The Hawk's Trail," at the Plaza theatre. This serial is receiving a record number of bookings.

CLEVELAND

Louise Fazenda, one of the screen's funniest little comediennes, was in the city on Friday and Saturday of last week. Miss Fazenda is on a vacation. No sooner had Miss Fazenda gotten herself comfortably established at the Cleveland Hotel, than Bill Hoffman, local manager for Special Pictures Corporation, for whom the comedienne is about to make a series of two reel pictures, began arranging for her appearance at the leading photoplay houses.

Miss Fazenda was widely entertained while in Cleveland, and was the recipient of much social attention. She left Saturday night for Cincinnati. She expects to spend Christmas in La Fayette, Indiana, the place where she was born, not so very long ago.

Manager J. A. Maddox of the Southern theatre, Columbus, Ohio, has been busy looking at all the big feature productions on the market. He wanted one that would be appropriate for anniversary week at the Southern, which starts on January 16th. He has selected "The Last of the Mohicans" as most suitable for the event. event.

H. A. Bandy, manager of Associated Producers, out in these parts, went over to Toledo on the noon train last Friday to meet Fred Warren, who was on his way east.

Harry Skirbol, manager of the Ohio Exchanges for Educational Films, feels he has a right to enjoy a merry Xmas, after his labors of the past six months, since he first came into this territory with Educational pictures. Among some of the spectacular bookings that Br. Skirbol has to his credit, the most conspicuous is with the Euclid theatre, Cleveland. The Euclid played "Four Times Foiled" the week of June 27th, when the exchange first opened, and has shown an Educational comedy every week since that time, with the exception of one week when Buster Keaton in "One Week" was put on. Some record!

Federated Film Exchange Company, which holds the Federated franchise in Ohio, has taken over the distribution of the product of Special Pictures Corporation in the state. This announcement was made the end of the week by Maurice Lebensberger, manager of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland, through which the physical distribtuion of Federated pictures is being conducted. This is to go into effect within the next sixty days.

NEW ORLEANS

The Mars theatre gave a benefit December 20 to furnish some of the funds being raised in New Orleans to buy toys for negro children.

Col. Charles E. Bray, former theatre man of New Orleans, was back in the city last week, coming from San Francisco to hasten the work on the new $600,000 Orpheum being built in New Orleans. He said he hoped to have the theatre completed early in 1921.

He asserted that the threatened slump in many lines of business is unlikely to effect the show business adversely. On the other hand, he said, a decline of the cost of living will boost the theatre business because it will leave in the hands of the working man more funds for amusement. The passing of the saloon he described as a God-send to the amusement business as much money heretofore spent for drink now is spent for shows. More strict enforcement of the prohibition laws was forecast by Colonel Bray and he declared it would be a good thing as most of the money now spent for "bootleg" liquor would be spent for amusement also.

The Globe theatre has been changed by the Saenger Amusement Company from a second-run house to a first-run theatre. This has been done because of the large number of excellent films being booked by Saengers now. This also has resulted in the Liberty theatre being changed from a two program a week house to a seven day run house.

Saengers originated the Saturday opening and now they have gone a step further and for several weeks have been starting their seven-day runs at the Strand theatre on Friday.

MINNEAPOLIS

The Film Board of Trade has elected officers for the coming year, consisting of E. S. Holmes, Vitagraph, president; Benjamin Friedman, Friedman Films, vice-president; C. S. Stombaugh, Pathe, secretary, and L. "Mickey" Coen, treasurer. Close cooperation is being accomplished with the United Theatrical Protective League.

George Beban, the character actor of the screen, and Sol Lesser, the producer, stopped off recently for two days in Minneapolis on their way to New York with Beban's latest picture, "One Man in a Million." They conferred with representatives of the motion picture industry here and were well pleased with the facilities of the modern picture houses of the city for showing their productions.

G. Carroll Johnston has been transferred to the New Lyndale theatre to succeed Chauncey Teorey, who became manager of the recently opened Loring theatre.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Cowboy Jazz"

(S. & E.—State Rights—Two Reels)

"COWBOY Jazz" presents the champion cowboys and cowgirls of the world in competition for world's supremacy in various pastimes of the West.

The reels are full of action beside which the feats of the old "Buffalo Bill" and "101 Ranch" shows were pleasant pastimes. The picture introduces many hair-raising stunts which are so thrilling that one is kept in a constant state of excitement from the opening scenes up to the very last foot of film. This is caused by the unique arrangement of the scenes and the subtitles which vary to a great extent and to the dare-deviltry of the riders who seem to face death every instant in their anxiety to make the scenes thrilling.

Among the exciting scenes are broncho busting, wild steer roping, lariat throwing, fancy riding and "bulldog steering." These latter scenes include the unusual stunt of "bulldogging" a wild buffalo, which means riding this wild beast. The cowboy is seen mounting on his back and "sticking to him" from one end of the arena to the other—a new and interesting stunt.

Many close-ups are also shown of the champion riders, among whom are: Joe Gardner, champion steer roper; Guy Scholtz, champion steer bulldogger; Chester Boyers, champion lariat thrower; Tommy Kirnan, champion fancy rider; Bryan Roach, champion broncho buster and numerous cowgirls including Rose Henderson and Bee Kirnan.

The picture, which was made under the auspices of the Benevolent Order of Elks, is interesting and exciting from start to finish and is a splendid vehicle for any program.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Number Please"

(Pathe—Harold Lloyd—Two Reels)

HAROLD LLOYD'S latest is filled with action and gags. From the moment the opening scenes are thrown upon the screen when Lloyd is seen alone in the rear seat of a roller coaster car much amazed because the hats of the gentlemen in front, have a tendency to "blow off" and bang him on the head, up to the last scene, there is not one dull moment.

The situations are all laid at a beach resort with Lloyd running the gamut of its amusements.

Among the most amusing incidents are Lloyd's scenes in a telephone booth which is always occupied when he tries to use it, and on securing a "seat inside" finds that he has forgotten his sweetheart's telephone number, which results in many comedy situations between the telephone girls and those seeking admittance to the booths; the scenes in which the star attempts to dispose of a pocket book which always comes back to him, and those about a "merry-go-round," around which the comedian chases a dog tied to a railing while the "vehicle" is in notion.

In the latter scenes, Lloyd uses two good comedy dogs, which are a welcome addition to the cast.

Although many of the gags used are not new, they are served in such a way that one is bound to forget their originality.

Another good comedy for Lloyd.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Broadway and Home"

(Selznick)

"BROADWAY AND HOME," Eugene O'Brien's latest is pleasant entertainment. There is nothing startling or thrilling in the story and with the exception of a few dramatic moments which appear in the last reel, it runs along smoothly from beginning to end with a few ripples apearing here and there to give it incentive.

The locale is laid in the small town and the big city, the latter scenes having some rich interior settings, one in particular, that of a ball room scene in which dancing girls are introduced in a novel way, being worthy of especial mention.

The star appears in the role of a country boy whose longing for the city is realized when he meets a rich New Yorker, who invites him to the big town and agrees to act as his guardian.

At an entertainment given by the latter, the young man becomes enamored of a girl whom he afterwards marries.

In a series of rather exciting incidents, the young woman proves to be the mistress of the wealthy man. Jealously is called into play and when the latter tries to force the young woman to abandon her husband, she kills him.

In a rather strong climax, the girl dies in the former home of her husband, in the small town, as the police arrive to claim her.

The picture does not run above the average, although it is well produced and has a popular cast including, Frank Losee, Eleanor Fair, Frank Andrews and Eileen Casidy.—FRANK LEONARD.

"A Fireside Brewer"

(Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

(MORAL). "If you must have your home brew be sure to keep it at home!" Thus Mack Sennett sums up the argument of his latest comedy, "A Fireside Brewer." He takes the sting out of the Eighteenth Amendment for those who look through dark glasses at it. Summed up it spells quite an enjoyable twenty minutes. A husband attempts to indulge in his morning exercise (shaving) and the constant interruptions of his wife offer moments of humor. But the real fun starts when another husband, accompanied by Louise Fazenda as friend wife, a little boy, and the great Dane, attempt to have an outing. They climb into their flivver with a trailer on behind, loaded down with home brew. the car stops traffic before it reaches the beach. The big laugh is when one of the wheels rolls off the trailer and Louise is forced to jack it up with a wheelbarrow and wheel it herself.

This is the only original trick aside from incorporating the trailer. Hubby, wife, and child get into their swimming togs and cache their brew in the sand. But before the afternoon is over, the bottles are either given away to make peace or are broken. The Sennett bathing girls are presented in a series of long shots with a push ball, which seems to be endowed with intelligence the way it rolls over the amusing Miss Fazenda. The final shot discloses the family at a pop stand. The titles are in the best Sennett style—crisp, brief and full of punch. The comedy is not up to the usual Sennett standard as far as measuring out humor. Still it is more genuine than the trick stuff which has been made out of the home brew idea.—LAURENCE REID.

"If"

(Prizma-Selznick)

HERE is a Prizma which has a peculiar effect upon the spectator. It gives him a healthy appetite. After seeing "If" one feels like journeying to the nearest fruit store and buying a luscious apple or a nice juicy pear or one of those purple bunches of grapes. It is excellent propaganda for the fruit dealer. Of course the picture has to do with the coloring of the various articles. Viewed in the ordinary state they present a drab appearance and certainly do not contain a tempting appeal. Which is proof that one's taste is most often guided by the color.

Take the red out of the apple, the yellow from the pear, the purple from the grapes and in all probability these fruits and most of the others would be left rotting on the ground. The Prizma shows the difference, and the manner of presenting such a kaleidoscopic color scheme with all the natural touches intact. It certainly extracts praise for Nature's paint brush and the Prizma process. The "If" of the title finds its meaning in the "before and after" effect. It is a pleasant filler, one which gives the spectator a healthy appetite for the succeeding picture and his particular brand of fruit. It is not a misstatement in declaring it the best Prizma ever conceived because it gets away from the "red" for the most part. This vivid color hasn't reached the state of perfection of the blue or yellow or orange. Length one reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"When Dawn Came"

(Hugh Dierker Production—Released by Producers Security Corp.)

THIS picture is heralded by its sponsors as a "picture revelation." And it is truly a revelation in some respects — for its photography with its peculiar coloring is in places most excellent, and it possesses a few real dramatic thrills that really sway the emotions in a way equaled only by the highest class of pictures. But if it rises to heights, the production also sinks into mediocrity. There is a tendency to emphasize the non-essential details by repetition, and as a result there is a draggy, unstimulating feeling. The entire absence of comedy and even lighter moments adds to this effect.

Mr. Dierker's production certainly has a theme, but his message is vague and again not quite convincing. He opens his story with a most hackneyed series of incidents. A young surgeon is devoting his life to charity, when a young society girl lures him away from the slums and the old priest, into the position of a society doctor. He finds that she is unfaithful and he takes to drink and the downward path. Then the action shifts to an old mission in Southern California, to which the old priest has been transferred. It is really here that the drama is brought in, and it is Colleen Moore, playing Mary, a blind girl, who is largely responsible for it. She neither overplays nor yet forgets her part for a moment, and it is a sympathetic scene that shows her ability when she opens her eyes after a successful operation to see for the first time in her life. Moments such as these are a credit to Mr. Dierker's direction. The young surgeon is brought back to faith and a higher life through the influence of the little blind girl with whom he is in love. There are scenes which are forceful and powerful as the director seeks to bring out the idea of the man's "denying God and hating men."

L. C. Shumway gives an impressive interpretation of the role of Dr. Brandon. He is best when playing the embittered, drunken "down and outer." We give Colleen Moore the honors, although she does not make her appearance until the picture is half over. James Barrows gives an intelligent characterization of the old priest. There is none of the eye-raising, hand-clasping, and flat-hatted clergyman about him. He is human. The other two principals, Kathleen Kirkham and William Conklin, are up to the mark.

There are some splendid exteriors of the California mission. The photography is another study in contrasts. In places it is unexcelled, and elsewhere it is the average.

Whether an average audience will fully appreciate this theme of Faith or not makes little difference. It is a production which you can guarantee will impress an audience by its few good points and the depth of its thought, despite its slow moving action and occasional jerky continuity.

It will be distributed on the state right market. Commonwealth Film showed the picture to the trade of New York. Length six reels.

MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Price of Silence"

(Sunrise—Six Reels)

A HECTIC picture of a woman's persecution is offered in "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland. Hardly a ray of sunshine penetrates the six reels which are given up to painting in sombre colors a sob sister story of misery and despair. It has a melodramatic flare and offers some mystery in the disclosure of a murder case. But the suspense is never made dominant because the suspect is firmly planted in the spectator's mind. There is much talk—too much talk about a certain weak brother and an ivalid mother.

The plot revolves around a disinherited woman who asks aid of her stern and relentless father. She is to undergo an operation to prolong her life and her daughter is dispatched to the proud old man to obtain the necessary funds. But mother dies because daughter never returns home, although it seems reasonable that she might have intrusted the money to a messenger. She is accused of murder and convicted and sentenced to prison. The courtroom scene sort of violates ethics in the conduct of the case. The story becomes real hectic and rambling in its account. A flash is given up to the persecuted heroine at prayer in the chapel of the prison and other flashes are presented with a prosecuting attorney harassing her at every opportunity.

If offers many convenient situations. For example, the aforementioned attorney resigns when he finds himself falling in love with the fair tenant of the prison. But she repulses him by calling him Tiberius Caesar. Her sorrow continues even after her release is effected until, for the purposes of the story, the director finds it convenient to end it, with the final shot showing her happy with her erstwhile persecutor. The picture is told in a series of flashbacks as far as the melodramatic incident is concerned and this process destroys the suspense. The title finds its meaning in the determination of the heroine to keep silent regarding her brother, painted as a weak character. The direction is not inspired in any sequence and is decidedly amateurish in the comedy relief. Was there a murder? No. The stern relative died from a stroke of lightning. The players haven't been handled skillfully and appear to be mindful of their efforts—self conscious, so to speak.

LAURENCE REID.

"All Wrong"

(Clyde Cook Comedy—Fox—Two Reels)

BUILT up around a novel theme, the Cook comedy is more spontaneous in its humor and more refreshing in its originality than its predecessor, "The Huntsman." Cook is a soldier and the whole picture bristles with things military. Unlike Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," the Fox comedian is not a member of "the awkward squad." Instead, he is surrounded by perfectly drilled infantrymen. This makes the contrast more decided, and when Cook about-faces the wrong way, and halts at the wrong time, flanked by men who move with machine-like precision, we consider it just as funny as the opening part of "Shoulder Arms." A burlesque of army life has not been seen for many a day, yet it comes at a time when thousands of ex-service men will appreciate it to the extent of many a loud roar of laughter.

The action is laid on the Mexican border. Cook is assigned to guard duty. Here is one of the best bits of hokum in the picture. A signpost marks the border, and a very wild looking Mexican soldier walks side by side with Cook, and when the latter unwittingly bends backward into Mexican soil, he is quickly sent back Americawards by the end of a bayonet.

Then comes "the whiskey smugglers." Cook is sent in plain clothes to get evidence against the bootleggers. He discovers a building, half of which is in Mexico and half in the U. S. The bar is conveniently swung from one side of the building to the other when a suspicious character enters. Thus when Cook's superior officer arrives he finds the bar in Mexico and the American cowboys drinking milk.

The comedy ends when Cook rescues the captain's daughter from the hands of the villain. He rides to the rescue on top of a huge, slow-moving horse, and is just as funny here as he was in "The Huntsman."

The comedian carries on his policy of remaining perfectly serious under the most ridiculous circumstances. He uses his contortions less than in his previous pictures.

"A Tale of the Fur North"

(Educational)

IN a most interesting manner, "A Tale of the Fur North" depicts incidents of the Eskimos' life in the far north.

The reel does not aim entirely at instructional value for a pretty little romance is interwoven, which lends added interest.

The opening scenes show the Eskimos on the march to the trading post in the springtime, with their bundles of skins.

After the tents are put up, one of the old men of the tribe tells the story of his life to a member of the trading post and in this way their various modes of life are pictured.

Among the most interesting are their methods of fishing, the natives appearing in their skin-covered canoes with peculiar oars which they wield with great dexterity, and their methods of handling the skins of wild animals and packing them for market. For interest some of their games and dances are introduced together with their ideas of love making.

The sub-titles are expressive and in harmony with the character of the story. The reel should interest wherever played. FRANK LEONARD.

"Sand Witches"

(Gayety Comedy—Educational)

"SAND WITCHES" is just an average comedy which will give fair entertainment.

The scenes are laid principally at the seashore with the comedians injecting more action than comedy into the situations and the bathing girls rushing hither and thither in an endeavor to keep up the tempo.

The cast, which includes Vera Steadman, Charlotte Merriam, Neal Burns and George George, is up to standard, each member working hard in a vain endeavor to inject something funny into the many situations.

The scenes at the seashore are of the usual variety, with the comedians engaging in fights over their sweethearts or the girls running, screaming or huddled together in bad "formation."

This comedy isn't up to the usual standard, the direction being more on the old-time idea of "noise," if it may be called that, than the up-to-date manner in which comedies are produced today. FRANK LEONARD.

"No Hope for the Drys" and "Silver Silences"

(Chester Sceenic—Educational)

THE cameraman takes us under water in the first half of this reel and in exploring the unknown depths shows us life as it exists there.

The crab and the various members of his family or clan are brought into close inspection and then for contrast various birds, such as the seagull and pelican, are brought before the eye of the camera as they "perch themselves" upon the rock bound shores of the Pacific Ocean.

"Silver Silences" is the title of the second half of this reel. The locale is laid in the Canadian rockies with its snow-capped mountains and crystal caves.

Some beautiful shots of Lake Louise are also taken showing tourists "boating" on this northland lake and hiking and riding through the mountains which surround it.

A good educational. FRANK LEONARD.

Vignola Leaves for Bahama Islands

The "interiors" for "Redemption Cove," the fourth special Robert G. Vignola Production, for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, are complete. The screen version of Donn Byrne's story was adapted by Doty Hobart and the location for exteriors calls for the Bahama Islands.

Director Vignola expects to spend about three weeks in the tropic clime, which means that he will ring out the old year and ring in the new in a land where Mr. Volstead and the Eighteenth Amendment are impotent. Mr. Vignola has practically completed all of his interiors several days before Christmas, but he postponed leaving for the South so that he might spend Christmas with his parents in Albany—his second Christmas at home in nine years.

Immediately after the yuletide celebrations were over he assembled his company and entrained for Jacksonville, Florida, where they boarded a ship for the Bahama Islands. Owing to the heavy passenger traffic southbound at this time of the year, regular accommodations were not to be had, so a special car was attached to the train for the Vignola company.

Among the party besides Mr. Vignola are included Phil Carle, assistant director, E. K. Lincoln and Seena Owen, who play the male and female leads respectively. Al Liguori, chief cinematographer, and a large staff of players, technical men, camera men, property men, While most of the exterior scenes of "Redemption Cove" require tropical settings, Mr. Vignola chose the Bahama Islands because of their unusual beauty and picturesqueness.

Wood Praises Glyn Story

"I ALWAYS like to direct a picture written by an author of experience," declares Sam Wood, "and in Elinor Glyn Paramount has a writer who knows life and can describe it with great verisimilitude."

"The Sheltered Daughter" is the tentative title of the story which Elinor Glyn has written which will serve as a vehicle for Gloria Swanson. Mrs. Glyn is now at the Lasky studio and will work in the closest co-operation with Mr. Wood who states "I have had many talks with the author," "and I find that she has the 'picture sense' keenly developed. She knows life and can describe it so nothing has to be supplied. It is all there and the continuity leaves no doubt as to its clarity; therefore is almost ready made. True certain alterations are generally needed to render a story capable of visualization, but I am satisfied that in this picture we have a wonderful plot, stirring incidents, much human interest, and I am looking forward to a really great production. Also it is different—very different—from the ordinary type of film story, as might be expected. I can truthfully say that I am enthusiastic."

Mrs. Glyn is also inspired by the possibilities of the production and is highly pleased with the facilities afforded for the work.

The production of "The Sheltered Daughter" will probably start immediately after Cecil B. De Mille completes "The Affairs of Anatol," in which Miss Swanson has a leading part.

Rena Parker, appearing in "Fantomas," the William Fox serial

Entertainment Given by Terriss Company

Tom Terriss, who has been in the South with an all-star company making scenes for his next Vitagraph special production, treated several hundred of the residents of Natchez, Miss., with a pleasing and novel entertainment on Thanksgiving night in appreciation of the hospitality of the citizens and the assistance they had given him and his company. The entertainment was held in the big Independence hall, which was crowded to capacity.

Edith Stockton to the Fore

The rise of Edith Stockton to the front ranks of leading women of the screen is interesting because of the steady progress she has made through sheer merit, beginning at the very lowest rung of the ladder and working up gradually but surely to her present position in the film world. Originally a stenographer at a Chicago mail order house, Miss Stockton's first professional experience was as a model for still fashion photographs and later for the motion pictures along the same line, which were included in the weeklies of that day. From this work she drifted naturally into being an "extra" at the Essanay plant in Chicago, where she was living at the time, and soon won the leading roles in that company's two-reel comedies. With a cessation of activities there, Miss Stockton came to New York in the chorus of Raymond Hitchcock's Revue, where her beauty and personality soon brought her film engagements. Her first feature picture was with Edith Taliaferro in "Keep to the Right," and since that time she has played with a number of the leading film stars; in addition, she was also featured in a series of Plympton Epic Productions, of which "Through the Storm" is the latest completed.

Miss Stockton has just finished filming "Out of the Chorus" in which she played the leading role in support of Alice Brady in an unusually realistic portrayal of the off-stage life of a couple of chorus girls. In fact, the entire picture hinges on the friendship—and later the rivalry for the affections of the same man—of the two girls, depicted by Miss Brady and Miss Stockton.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to September 11, 1920.

"ROGUES AND ROMANCE"
(Pathe)

Good Production Given Thrilling Story

GEORGE B. SEITZ has given "Rogues and Romance" a splendid production and this together with an interesting and exciting story which borders at times on the serial order, should place this picture on the list with those which have afforded patrons good lively entertainment.

Seitz works very hard in this production and credit should be given him for the way he has handled the detail and arrangement of scenes and for the manner in which he has written the story, for in this picture he is actor, author and director.

In order to inject real atmosphere into the story, the exteriors and some of the interiors have been taken in Spain, but it cannot be said that any great advantage has been gained in doing this for the scenery of the open country is of the scraggy variety and detracts from the poetic or romantic value.

In other scenes where the views are of houses and narrow passageways so well known in Spanish architecture, it seemed as though the cameraman had not used his best judgment in selecting the shots, for he did not get enough out of them.

Still, the action makes up for any losses which may detract in any way from the picture's value for it starts at the opening of the story and is "fast and furious" throughout.

The big scene is taken in the "court house" square and shows hundreds of soldiers and civilians in one of the biggest battles ever produced upon the screen. Many views are also taken of the cavalry and infantry as they march through the streets, viewed by the populace from the roofs of the houses and the adjoining thoroughfares.

The plot tells of a young American who follows his sweetheart to Spain only to find that she has fallen in love with a revolutionary rogue, whom she thinks is fired with a great purpose. The Spaniard sees in her ransom that will buy guns and ammunition for his outlaw gang.

The young American fights with all his might to save the girl who has turned him down and in the end wins out, the Spaniard going back to the girl of his own race who has previously in a jealous rage tried to kill her rival.

June Caprice and Marguerite Courtot play their roles in a rather convincing manner and are supported by a capable cast including Harry Semels, William P. Burt and Frank Redman.—Length, 5,827 feet.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

George B. Seitz who has provided thrilling moments for film fans with "Bound and Gagged," "Pirate Gold," "The Phantom Foe," "Velvet Fingers," and a number of other Pathe serials, will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ———— sharing honors with June Caprice and Marguerite Courtot, in "Rogues and Romance," his latest Pathe production.

Several thousand feet of this picture were taken in Spain, where Seitz and his company journeyed for the filming.

The story is that of a young American who falls in love with a beautiful girl and follows her to Spain, where she spurns her. A bold and reckless rogue had strummed his guitar and she had fallen for his songs and mustache. She thought she had found real romance at last but was suddenly thrilled when a Spanish siren drew a stiletto in jealous rage.

And because two women loved one rogue, a revolutionary plot did not go according to schedule. True, the city plaza was a riot of mad, fighting, hard riding, straight shooting soldiers, civilians and revolutionists, but the revolutionists were forced to flee without their prize—the governor.

After the fracas, Reggie pulled off one by himself, in which, single handed, he rescued the girl from the rogues who were holding her for ransom.

The cast includes Harry Semels, William P. Burt and Frank Redman.

PROGRAM READER

The receipt for making a picture with the thrills, the humor, the mystery and suspense and the romance of "Rogues and Romance," co-starring June Caprice and George B. Seitz will be found at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

It depicts the dashing, daring, whimsical yet tempestuous romance of an American maid and man in Sunny Spain. It is imbued with the languorous tropical atmosphere of the land of the Alhambra moon and swaying palms, of serenading troubadors and graceful, dancing, fiery-eyed senoritas.

Contrast is offered in its fighting mobs of revolutionists, soldiers and citizens on the huge plaza, where one of the most spectacular and gigantic scenes were attempted and staged with many a thrill.

All this is atmosphere with a plot involving the love of an American heiress for a handsome Spanish rogue who strummed a mean guitar, a dancing senorita who flashed a wicked stiletto and a Yankee youth who punched two well-aimed fists.

The supporting cast is excellent including Marguerite Courtot, Harry Semels, Frank Redman and William P. Burt. Mr. Seitz is its producer, director and author as well as co-star.

SUGGESTIONS

This production should please and give good satisfaction. Seitz has injected plenty of action into the story, has selected a good cast and has been careful throughout with the production.

Bill Seitz as strongly as you can and tell your patrons that he appeared in many well known serials for Pathe, among them being "Bound and Gagged," "Pirate Gold," "The Phantom Foe," "Velvet Fingers," and a number of other serials.

Also mention June Caprice and Marguerite Courtot who are good additions to the cast.

Play up the fact that many of the scenes were taken in Spain and do not forget to mention the "big scene" in which hundreds of people participate.

The plot of the story is rather original and you might run a short account of it in your town papers.

"PRAIRIE TRAILS"
(Fox)

Trivial Story, Senseless Action, and a Few Good Thrills

IT is very probable that you could run this at matinees for several weeks. The youngsters would storm the box office, for it has Tom Mix as its star and enough action in it to satisfy them—which is going some. But to an evening audience it will appear to be a jumble of unending riding, shooting and diving over cliffs, with a story that would hardly be strong enough for a two reel thriller.

Its titles are written in farce comedy style, and, with their puns and foolishness, are out of place. But the result is probably no worse than if the title writer had endeavored to make an audience take it seriously. With so much absurd "wild and woolly" action, it has just about as much convincing drama in it as a serial. It is only in a comedy that we expect to see a man jump from a precipice through the wooden roof of a shack, pick himself up and knock out two heavies without a moment's hesitation or without even a scratch as a result.

The excuse for all this action is very slight. The star, disappointed in love, goes to a small Montana town, gets in an argument, and shoots up the whole town. The sheriff and his posse pursue him and there is considerable riding and chasing. The bandit kidnaps a girl who is rescued after a lot of more riding and shooting, and the star marries the lady of his heart, whose father finally gives his consent. There are in this picture some of the best daredevil stunts which Mix has ever done. But when he shoots the buttons off the sheriff's vest at twenty yards, disguises himself by sticking some straw on his face for a mustache, hangs from a limb of a tree as his enemies ride beneath, knocking one after another off their horses with a swipe of his boot, it is more than any audience can stand.

The production is almost entirely exteriors and the film is colored sepia. Playing opposite the star is Kathleen O'Connor, who has not much to do, and does not look very attractive doing it. As a piece of dramatic construction it is hopeless.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Prairie Trails," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— on ————, stars a screen idol who will need no introduction to patrons of the ———— theatre. For he is Tom Mix, star of "The Untamed," "The Texan" and other stirring Western dramas, crammed with action, which have pleased large audiences at the ———— theatre in the past.

Starting only a comparatively short time ago on the road to motion picture fame, Mix is to-day known to millions throughout the country. He plays in strong virile dramas, the action of which is laid in the open West. A hard rider, an expert with the lasso, and daring enough to thrill the most hardened picture devotee, Tom Mix is a perfect type of the West, and an accomplished actor besides.

"Prairie Trails" will be just as popular with the patrons of the ———— theatre as his other pictures. It combines action with drama and clean comedy and is filled from beginning to end with Mix's daredevil stunts. The story is by James B. Hendryx, and it was directed by George Marshall. Kathleen O'Connor plays opposite the star.

PROGRAM READER

In Montana the cattle men and the sheep men are just as popular with one another as cats and dogs. So it was rather unfortunate for Tex Benton, a sturdy cowpuncher hailing from Texas, when he fell in love with the beautiful daughter of a sheep rancher. At first her father was adamant, but finally he decided to allow the match provided "Tex" would turn into a sheep man. Then the trouble started afresh, and it does not stop until the final fade-out of this picture. "Prairie Trails" is its name and it stars the popular Fox favorite, Tom Mix. Mix has thrilled countless thousands before by his daring stunts, and he will do the same in this picture. Leaping down cliffs and fighting on the edge of a mountain are commonplace events in the life of this active cowboy-actor. An admirer of expert horsemanship will find plenty of entertainment in "Prairie Trails." It will be shown for ———— days at the ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You will have a guaranteed audience of youngsters and a few others as soon as you mention Mix's name. His name is by far the best thing to boost in showing this picture. Promise them a typical Mix picture, with thrills aplenty. Let your press notices be devoted almost entirely to creating an interest in the star. Do not go in much for describing the story. Use the star's photo in the lobby if possible. The cast will mean very little to an audience unless they are very close followers of the screen. The author, James B. Hendryx, also wrote "The Texan."

CATCH LINES

Tom Mix's latest and most thrilling picture. A red blooded drama of the West—one that you cannot afford to miss.

A story of a cowboy's romance. He played the cave man without realizing it, and he got away with it.

Business normal. Anita Stewart is only fairly popular." "They liked it—but did not do capacity business. Just fair. Wherever Miss Stewart is popular it should should be a knockout." "OH, LADY, LADY"
(Realart)

Rather Light But Entertaining

THIS picture proves an exception to the rule that an entertaining picture cannot be made from a stage adaptation. It is all the more remarkable when screen enjoyment can be found in the picturization of a musical comedy. At best the adaptation of such a type of photoplay does not measure up so well because plot, characterization and action are usually missing. However, "Oh, Lady, Lady" is fortified with a semblance of an idea which is based upon a matrimonial mix-up. It looks like robbing it of its vitality to present a screen version of the piece minus its charming score. But wise is the exhibitor who can arrange his setting so that it will contain the original music.

While the offering is not such excellent material as "You Never Can Tell" still it contains enough values of a farcical nature to provide a pleasant vehicle for the display of Bebe Daniels' charm and talent. One must characterize it as wholesome entertainment which is exceedingly frail, but which conquers for its comedy highlights. It carries hardly enough substance for five reels and there is evidence in some places of padding. However, it measures out enough humor and spontaneity to please those patrons who are not too exacting. For one thing it serves to give the fat Walter Hiers the fattest part he has ever had on the screen. He has been winning recognition for some time and he certainly comes into his reward here. Miss Daniels is permitted to bask in the role of a gay charmer who would save her erstwhile lover from a perfectly awful vamp. She gets her wires crossed, for the girl in question is really held in the greatest affection. So the plot revolves upon straightening out the complications.

The first part of the action is given up to a rehearsal of the wedding ceremony with the erstwhile sweetheart popping in unexpectedly and spoiling it all. The latter reels bring order out of chaos with the heroine falling into an embrace with the best man and the wedding party being reconciled. There is good incident in several places. One bit of business is highly amusing and shows some trick photography, as the heroine scolds an innocent troublemaker with the scene showing him growing smaller and smaller until he sinks into insignificance. Those who saw the original piece are apt to be disappointed because of its dash and color and capitivating music and dancing. But it strikes us that Director Maurice Campbell has done a praiseworthy work. It may be rather innocuous, but the star and her capable players make it enjoyable.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An adaptation of the popular musical comedy, "Oh Lady, Lady," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— with Bebe Daniels as the star. Guy Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse's sparkling play has been scenarioized into a clever photoplay—a photoplay which is ideal for the expression of Miss Daniels' charm and talent. The star is splendid as the gawky country girl whose transformation into a famous chorus beauty brings innocent entanglement as a supposed "vampire."

The picture revolves around May Barber's attempt to rescue her erstwhile sweetheart from a designing woman, who she is to d, is on Finch's trail just as he is about to marry another girl. She gets everything mixed up and estranges Finch from the girl he loves. And then her own lover turns against her! The complications enter and it takes a deal of explanation to bring order out of chaos. The picture is always sparkling with effervescent humor and is acted in a correct tempo by a cast that includes the well known Walter Hie s. Harrison Ford and others. "Oh Lady, Lady" was directed by Mau.ice Campbe l.

PROGRAM READER

Every woman cherishes a soft spot for her first beau, even after she has ceased to care for him. For the sake of old times, May Barber was glad to come to the rescue of her old-time friend who was in the clutches of a perfectly awful girl who was on his trail. She did her best and for thanks was told that he didn't want to be saved and he'd thank her to mind her own business, for now she had spoiled his marriage with the girl he really loved. Things developed into a bad mess. However, all's well that ends well, and you can depend upon Bebe Daniels to achieve that kind of an ending. This is a brief synopsis of "Oh Lady, Lady," the Realart picture adapted from the musical comedy success. At the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell them that this is an adaptation of the musical comedy success of the same name. Make much of the authors and tell that they are the most successful playwrights of the day. Bring out that it is a scintillating picture. Tell that it revolves around a matrimonial mix-up. You can arrange a musical setting from the original score. Treat your copy in a light, humorous fashion. Bring out that it is on a par with "You Never Can Tell," the star's other release. Mention the other players. Your crowd is familiar with the work of Walter Hiers and Harrison Ford. Play up their names. You might stage a miniature musical comedy fashioned after the original piece using the song hits of the play.

"THE MISLEADING LADY"
(Metro)

Stage Adaptation Is Fairly Successful as Picture

THE art of winning a woman by cave-man principles provides the idea behind "The Misleading Lady," adapted from the play of the same name. With Bert Lytell giving expression to it the offering may be said to be fairly entertaining. While liberties have been taken with the original text and characterization still it is faithful enough to be a true representation. Its chief drawbacks are slow action and lengthy planting of characters. Then again the comedy spirit hasn't been fully realized. But once it gets into its theme, it moves with acceptable vigor. Some will say that the picture is miscast—that Bert Lytell is not primitive type, enough, to make the part of the cave-man ring true. But so finished is his performance that the skeptical will overlook this minor fault.

The original play revolved considerably about an inmate of an asylum who gained his liberty and provided the humor with his shafts of satire and comic business. This is touched upon here, but the picture relies mostly upon its romantic element for its strength. The hero is converted into a cave-man when the girl whom he is courting encourages a proposal and then jilts him. It is only a betting proposition with her. So her action makes him revert to the primitive. He lugs her away to his woodland cabin and compels her to obey by sheer strength. While she is obviously displeased, deep down in her heart she is really delighted and proves it when he becomes injured, by tendering him first aid.

This is the point that the crazy inmate has his inning. But where the situation provoked unbounded humor in the stage version it only excites a ripple of laughter here. The reason may be found in the fact that it is done so obviously and devoid of slapstick. The entire plot is given away in the introductory footage, so the picture lacks the element of surprise. Then again the adaptation has been done before. If some of the star's assistants had not striven so hard to be amusing the comedy values would have soared to a higher plane. The long wait for the action to begin destroys the spontaneity. The picture proves that it isn't best to taunt a man into reverting to type unless a girl secretly yearns for the dominating tactics of the male. There is an effective rainstorm offered and the interiors are atmospheric and rich in detail—especially those of the cabin. The titling is adequate enough. The picture misses the sure-fire hokum of the original.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"TheMisleading Lady," a Metro screen version of Charles Goddard and Paul Dickey's popular play of the same name, with Bert Lytell as the star, will be the main attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This picture affords the star with many opportunities to display his talents and his supporting cast, consisting of Lucy Cotton and Frank Currier, is entirely capable. The plot revolves around the principle of wooing and winning a girl by force.

Helen Steele held Jack Craigen lightly in her estimation. When she provoked him into a proposal of marriage and then spurned him he decided to apply cave-man tactics. This method proved to be entirely successful but only after the girl realized that Craigen meant business. This step of his precipitates a situation of most unusual character. The action is crowded with surprises and not a'one does the picture possess a strong vein of suspense but also some clever comedy situations which the players handle capably. George Terwilliger and George Irving directed from a scenario by Lois Zellner. These sponsors have constructed a first-rate photoplay.

PROGRAM READER

She had great confidence in her power to intrigue him into a proposal of marriage. He readily fell into the trap only to discover that she wasn't sincere. Then it was his turn to apply cave-man methods. She had told him that only a man who would carry her off could win her. So he carried her away to his bungalow. How his plan of action proved successful is told in five reels of most interesting comedy-drama. The action is crowded with good incident and reveals flashes of quaint humor. Bert Lytell is ideally cast in the part of the cave-man. Others in his company include Lucy Cotton and Frank Currier. The picture is an adaptation of the popular play, "The Misleading Lady," and will appear at the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell them that this is an adaptation of the Broadway success which kept New York entertained for many months. Bring out that it is still being presented in stock. Tell that it affords Bert Lytell excellent picture material. Make much of the plot and treat it in a humorous fashion. Use program readers and teasers with pointed questions concerning the ideas of courtship—whether it is advantageous to apply cave-man methods in wooing and winning a girl. For a lobby display you can distribute posters and have your artist draw a likeness of the ancient cave-man dragging his lady by the hair to his cave. You might present a prologue showing the different stages of love—the ancient cave-man method—the romantic era and the modern which shows an elopement.

"THE BROKEN GATE"
(Frothingham-Hodkinson)

Sob Sister Story Is Highly Theatrical

FOR the purposes of adding a theatrical touch, Bessie Barriscale's latest picture, "The Broken Gate," might be called acceptable, but from a standpoint of being a reflection of life it widely misses its mark. The star indulges in her favorite "mother" role here, playing the part of a village Magdalene, who is determined to play fair with her nameless boy by remaining in the town and suffering the taunts of the natives. It is hardly reasonable that the villagers would harbor a grudge for twenty years and give expression to it after such a lapse of time. But when the boy comes home and sees his mother for the first time since a little child and learns the true state of things, the agony is piled on and truth jumps right out of the overdrawn picture.

The picture looks like a visualization of a Bertha M. Clay despite the fact that Emerson Hough is the author. Undue emphasis is given to the embarrassment of the woman and the fact that she has been wronged by one of the pillars of society in the town. It is the youth's privilege to straighten out the complications. He receives taunt after taunt concerning his mother and answers them with a good right arm. The melodrama soars with a hectic touch when he is imprisoned for his attitude and becomes quite ridiculous when a mob of natives storm the jail determined to lynch him. But he makes his escape. A subsequent title is provocative of laughter. The sheriff meets him out on the road and advises him to run back to the jail. The mob, provoked at his escape, executes its vengeance upon the mother. Her home is a sorry sight when the enraged natives are finished.

There are other hectic touches which show an idiot youth as the real culprit of the offense for which the hero went to jail. And the prosperous philanderer attempts to make amends. A faulty touch shows him repulsed with the kindly benefactor waiting at the gate to bring happiness. The picture might have been genuine twenty or thirty years ago in regard to its theme. But even country types are blessed with some generosity in these days of enlightenment. The acting is quite as theatrical as the story, although the star contributes a performance that is more or less subdued. There are many holes in the logic which cannot be considered in the space of a review, such as the long absence of the boy and the apparent immunity from punishment of the transgressor. "The Broken Gate" may appeal to those who relish hectic melodrama regardless of its unrealities. Those in search of sound plot and characterization are certain to dismiss it as false.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Broken Gate," an adaptation by Jack Cuningham of Emerson Hough's story of the same name, is the latest feature to be presented at the ———— theatre. Bessie Barriscale is the star of the offering which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. The picture tells an appealing story of a brave and self-denying mother who guards her only son from the knowledge that he is nameless for twenty years and keeps a modest millinery shop, which enables her to send him through college. The screen version begins with the arrival of the son when he sees his mother for the first time since a little child.

When he realizes all the suffering she has endured for him and that the scoundrel who wronged her is still living in the same town, he determines to find the man and make him confess before the entire community. The series of circumstances which bring this confession about are wrought with a deal of dramatic force and build a tense and interesting drama. Miss Barriscale is splendid in the role of the mother—a role which brings out her capabilities to the utmost. Others who contribute sterling performances are Sam de Grasse, Joseph Kilgour and Marguerite de la Motte. Paul Scardon has shaped the story so well that the suspense is ever dominant.

PROGRAM READER

"The Broken Gate," starring Bessie Barriscale, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. This is considered an ideal vehicle for the display of the star's emotional capabilities since it permits her to appear in a "mother" role wherein she is called upon to practice self-denial. The story is an adaptation of Emerson Hough's popular novel of the same name. It presents an age-old problem in a strong and interesting manner. Miss Barriscale rises to heights of feeling in the character of the village Magdalene and her work establishes her still more firmly as one of the screen's foremost emotional actresses. An excellent cast, that includes Joseph Kilgour, Sam de Grasse, provides worthy support.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the author's name and the fact that the adaptation is a fitting vehicle for the display of Miss Barriscale's emotional talent. Tell a brief outline of the story, telling that it presents an age-old problem—a problem which will make people think and make them more charitable toward those who belong to the downtrodden classes. Bring out with emphasis that Miss Barriscale always gives a good performance. Make mention of her fine supporting company. Tell that it is a heart interest drama—a drama of universal appeal since it is founded on the mother-love theme. You can give the director mention for the sake of your steady patrons.

"HEARTS UP"
(Universal)

Harry Carey Has Satisfying Offering Here

IT is satisfactory entertainment that Universal offers in its latest Harry Carey release, "Hearts Up." The "he's human" star can usually be depended on when he fashions his own subjects. Although he has contributed better material than "Hearts Up" in some of his "Cheyenne Harry" stories, the present offering is a praiseworthy sample of his versatility. It is a human interest theme which is unfolded here with the star appearing in the role of a masquerader who must disguise his identity for the sake of emphasizing the pathos of the situation. There is really no need for the man assuming this attitude. He could tell the young girl the facts of the case and chances are she would reconcile herself to them. However, there wouldn't have been any story.

The action starts with the girl's father having a brawl with a drunken redskin with Carey coming over the horizon just in time to carry the deceased from the flaming cabin. This is an excellent shot and realistic. He finds evidence on the body of the girl's expected arrival in 'Frisco and assumes the dead man's identity. The star meditates a great deal in the picture (as he does in all his pictures), but this fault is praiseworthy to emoting all over the place. Carey is always natural. So he meditates whether to impart the information that the girl is not his daughter.

The author-star injects a little drama toward the concluding reels. But it isn't entirely logical. A neighboring rancher is attempting to claim his property and a youth who is making a survey takes the former's side when he discovers that the hero is not related to the girl. So Carey indulges in a fight which is rather tame. But it suffices in making his enemy respect him. There is hardly any excuse for writing the note telling the girl that he is leaving. It is his own house and he has played fair and square. But such a point has its appeal in the generation of pathos. The picture is rather quiet in action and depends mostly upon its characterization and the little humanities for its entertaining quality. There is a good representation of a railroad journey. It looks like the real thing. And it seems good to see the star himself in some other regalia than Western. He is dressed up and prosperous. Mignonne Golden is the girl and she gives an interesting performance. In all "Hearts Up" should please the Carey following.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Harry Carey, the popular interpreter of "westerns," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in "Hearts Up," a picture written by the star himself. Characterized by Universal as human, Mr. Carey proceeds to live up to its full meaning. He has fashioned a story which revolves around the adoption of a girl as his own. He owes a debt of gratitude to the heroine's father and when the latter dies Brent willingly steps into his shoes to protect the daughter. She has no suspicion that the masquerader is other than her father. And the pseudo-parent has his qualms of conscience whether to confess his identity. However, he determines to remain silent rather than bring disillusionment.

The facts leak out through another source and Brent is on his way to prove his honor when the girl accepts him as her lover. "Hearts Up" is a human photoplay—one well emphasized in its sentiment and pathos. The romance is prominently displayed but the offering also has its melodramatic moments. Patrons of the ———— are due for a surprise when Mr. Carey appears here next ————. "Hearts Up" is certain to appeal to every class of audience due to its humanities and clever interpretation. Prominent in the cast are Mignonne Golden and Arthur Millet.

PROGRAM READER

Would you like to see the popular Harry Carey in up-to-date attire? Then come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see the human star in "Hearts Up." This picture is written by Mr. Carey and he has provided himself with a most entertaining subject—a subject which permits him to find wonderful expression as the pseudo-father of a girl. The offering is marked for its romance, sentiment, pathos and humor—elements which are finely blended. How he succeeds in palming himself off as the father of the girl he loves, only to be discovered in his masquerade—how he succeeds in convincing the girl of his honorable intentions is told in five reels of human action. See "Hearts Up."

SUGGESTIONS

You can follow your customary plan in exploiting Harry Carey. Since he has a credited following you don't have to hit upon any new ideas of advertising. Simply play up his name; making emphatic that he is the author as well as the star, and tell also that he appears in a new disguise. He doesn't wear his familiar chaps and Western regalia but is dressed up like an office manager. Play up the title. This can be worked out in the exterior frames. Have an artist draw a heart hand—a royal flush of hearts. Or two hearts pierced with an arrow. And use the stills of Carey in his human attitudes. Play up that it is a heart interest drama which carries some good action.

CATCH LINES

"He's human." Who's human? Harry Carey. See the popular Universal star in his own photoplay, "Hearts Up"—a picture of wonderful appeal.

He adopted a girl as his own daughter and then didn't know whether to tell her the truth. See "Hearts Up" with the human star, Harry Carey.

OCCASIONALLY YOURS (GASNIER-ROBERTSON-COLE) LEW CODY....OCT. 2
"Male vampire in a mere succession of society scenes."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Entertaining picture. Business about as usual."

OFFICER 666 (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE....Nov. 13
"Fair entertainment, but titles earn most of the laughs."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The combination of Moore and a popular stage success won. Public praised the picture." "Not up to Tom Moore's standard although it did fair business for a week." "Fine picture and box-office returns while not especially great were satisfying." "This feature brought more than usual business and seemed to please my patrons." "Good picture and sure-fire box office attraction. Crowds packed the house every performance." "A very clever adaptation of the stage success. Tom Moore at his best, but as in the case of all previous stage and stock productions, business far below average."

OLD FASHIONED BOY, AN (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) CHARLES RAY....NOV. 13
"Not much to the story, but Ray puts it over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Although many persons—among them the dramatic critic of a metropolitan newspaper—considered this an excellent farce and an excellent picture, it made no big hit with the 'fans' here. The houses were but average, although the cold weather may have had some bearing on this. Many of Ray's followers did not like the kind of part he played." "Good—but last two Ray pictures not up to Ray standard." "Ray always good and does not fall down on this. Had more than usual business." "Should have been called the Whirling Dervish. Ray runs around and whirls like he was crazy. Only fair business. "Consider this an average picture. Business about as usual." "A good show. Comfortable entertainment. Played to steady business all week. (Middle West.)" "One of the poorest things Ray has ever done. They came because it was Ray—but they didn't enjoy it."

Exhibitor Comment—"A fair production bringing average box office returns." "This picture had little comment either favorable or otherwise. Box-office returns say production is fair." "Am playing it for a second week in a town where 'Humoresque' played only one week. One of the best attractions I have played this season." "Dorothy Phillips does some of the best work of her career in this picture, which is interesting and handsomely produced. Did splendid business at this theatre." "Just completed second and very successful week. I make a practice of one week runs, or even three days, but this picture played to two weeks' capacity business."

This considered much better than "45 Minutes from Broadway." "Charles Ray in any story is enough to pack this house. In 'Peaceful Valley' he is cast in a role that his admirers want to see him in. The picture attracted capacity houses for a seven-day run." "Did very well. Picture entertaining and box-office results good." "A pleasing feature which took well in my theatre. As to box-office value it is a pretty good bet."

Fatty liked better in comedies." "As far as entertaining value is concerned, this picture does not hit the mark, though business was good." "An old rail fence built in front of the theatre attracted attention. 'Modern Centaurs' and Pathe News are unusual and helped put over the show with a bang. Average entertainment." "A Western melodrama of the old days, with specks of comedy. Plot a variation of 'Enoch Arden.' Lots of Indians, half-breeds, shooting and cavalry, and not so much of Arbuckle. He should stick to the short subjects."

"FLYING PAT"
(New Art-Paramount-Artcraft)

Fairly Pleasing Offering With Dorothy Gish

A LACK of variety is noticeable in Dorothy Gish's latest expression, "Flying Pat." For three reels the comedy fairly scintillates, but thereafter loses much of its spontaneity. The inability to keep her pieces from becoming repetitious and vapid as they progress has been observed in more than one instance. To be candid, "Flying Pat" does not measure out the same proportion of humor as "Little Miss Rebellion." True it carries some original incidents which are provocative of laughter, but when these run their course its limitations are all the more readily noticed. Even the star herself seems to be suppressed at times—as if, having nothing to do, she has relied upon her sure-fire mannerisms. Miss Gish needs comedies of color and vitality—comedies in harmony with her exuberant personality.

The story here is based upon marital misunderstanding. Hubby would have his bride give up household duties for a career. Having lately returned from the war as an aviator, he would have her cultivate his erstwhile profession. But when she takes the air with a friend and fails to return home the young benedict's suspicions are aroused—especially when he receives word that she is dining out with her tutor. For three reels there is very little evidence of padding, the scenes being well arranged, though the line of action is considerably quiet. There is one rich scene, however, which shows the star taking a test which will qualify her as a flyer. She is whirled about in a compartment for the sake of establishing her equilibrium.

When she runs away to Albany the picture takes a flop for the accompanying action is totally irrelevant. A scandal sheet reporter is introduced for obvious effect. Ditto a detective, a policeman, and divers others. Hubby never suspects that his bride has returned to the kitchen until the required footage is utilized. He gets a sample of her cooking. This bit is a tried and true comedy situation which has lost its effectiveness through the passing years, although it is still capable of inspiring laughter. "Flying Pat" is an innocuous little comedy which is frail in action and incident and rather colorless in characterization. Miss Gish, however, is so keenly alive, so dynamic in her style of expression that her pictures can never be called dull. She has a good company here with James Rennie standing out with a clean cut performance—one marked for its poise and repression. "Flying Pat" will please a whole lot of people despite its lack of variety and spontaneity.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Gish with her undeniable and irrepressible humor will be the attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest comedy drama "Flying Pat," an original contribution to the screen by Virginia Philley Withey, the wife of the director, Chet Withey. Scenarioized by Harry Carr and F. Richard Jones and directed by the latter, it provides the charming comedienne with a vehicle which should gain her many new admirers.

The story is about a young bride and her husband, who insists that she become more than a kitchen drudge and that she go out and make a "career" for herself. She takes up flying, but an adventure with her handsome instructor leads to domestic strife, and the peppery, breezy Dorothy flees out into the cold world. What follows introduces a series of side-splitting scenes which lead to an eventual reconciliation. Miss Gish is thoroughly at home in such a type of picture and her support includes James Rennie, who gives an excellent performance in the opposite role, Morgan Wallace, Kate Bruce and others. "Flying Pat" is a spontaneous comedy which sparkles with fun and wit.

PROGRAM READER

Dorothy Gish, the peppy little screen comedienne has a sure fire success in "Flying Pat," her newest comedy which will be the feature attraction at the ———— next ————. It is all about a young bride who insists upon staying in the kitchen. Most women are satisfied to give up the pots and pans for a career, but Miss Dorothy is exactly the opposite. She is contented to be just a "homey" sort of wife, but her husband insists she make a name for herself in the world besides. How this insistance on his part precipitates a quarrel and leads the star into many adventures before a reconciliation is effected is told in five reels of breezy comedy. The picture is Dorothy Gish at her best.

SUGGESTIONS

Dorothy Gish has established a following for her particular brand of humor. So play up her name and state that her latest picture is ideal for the expression of her charm and talent. Tell that it is written by Virginia Withey, the wife of the director, Chet Withey. Bring out the value of the title. Have your artist draw a design of the star—a head pose with aviation cap on and a background of a flying machine. Tell that it is a breezy, peppy comedy which contains sixty laughs a minute. Bring out that it is a sure cure for the doldrums. Make use of the leading man's name. He hasn't been long on the screen but his personality has been felt by the picturegoer.

"SQUANDERED LIVES"
(Stoll Film Company of America)

Viewed From All Angles, Rather a Notable Film

"SQUANDERED LIVES" is rather a notable film in several ways. First it is the initial release of the Stoll Film Company of America, and as such will be taken as a criterion of what may be expected from this concern. It introduces to American audiences Ivy Duke and Guy Newall, two leading British stars. Miss Duke has a pleasing, sympathetic personality and appears to be a finished screen player. Mr. Newall is a juvenile who represents a type that some of our American players have unsuccessfully tried to imitate. He is what they try to be—a likeable young Britisher.

"Squandered Lives" presents the problems of the English younger sons and daughters and placing its leading players in roles that American stars wouldn't want to assume. There is a lot of atmosphere, a good many titles that ask and answer questions and not so much action, but for all of this it is an interesting picture. And it rings true. Its climax, a scene where Lord Delamere and his charming young wife having been exposed in the manner by which they live—cheating at cards, plan a double suicide, is made to seem a very natural thing, by the sincerity of the players and the careful manner in which the production has been built. And when the elder son who couldn't spare anything from his thirty thousand pounds a year that his brother might live, conveniently gets killed in time to prevent the complete carrying out of the suicide compact, it is a subtle compliment to America that these two who married for love and lived by their wits should sail overseas to begin life anew. As Mr. Thomas once said in a play: "Some of our best citizens have made their mistakes."

As an English picture, "Squandered Lives" is far better than most productions to come across. It is better directed, better acted, and has better photography than anything we have yet seen from John Bull.

As for its audience appeal here that remains to be seen. We see no reason why it shouldn't get over quite as well as the numberless English stories that have been done by American producers, for the most part badly, in the past few years.—Length, 5,800 feet.—J. S. Dickerson.

Sir Robert Sheen	Hugh C. Buckler
Miss Billie Honour	Mary Merrall

Directed by Franklin Dyall.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

It is a different type of picture which will be that attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. "Squandered Lives" is the title and it is a product of the Stoll studios near London, England. One of the first features to find its way from England since the war, this production shows that the Britishers are not far behind us as picture producers. Perfect in detail and enacted by a most capable cast, this picture will win just as many friends as the most lavish American-made film.

The author of this interesting story of English life is not unknown to Americans. He is Cosmo Hamilton, and "Squandered Lives" is an adaptation of "Duke's Son," one of his most popular novels. The picture is a high-class drama of the society type, filled with thrilling situations and intense romance, as the story of the cast-off "second son" of English nobility is unraveled on the screen.

Featured in "Squandered Lives" are Ivy Duke and Guy Newell, two screen players of ability and recognized standing. Miss Duke is an actress of rare personality and beauty and she is certain to earn for herself a large following of film fans from her work in this picture alone. Mr. Newell was formerly a director and in this picture proves that he is just as capable before the camera as he was behind. He is seen as Delamere, the second son of the house of Cheshire, forced to earn his living at cards.

PROGRAM READER

Out of a clear sky came the bolt that changed the entire life of Delamere, the second son of the house of Cheshire. He had been living on his allowance, and when the money failed, was thrown out upon the world without any means of earning a livelihood. So he took to card playing—for there are ways of playing cards which bring in a fair income.

Starting with this absorbing situation, the story of "Squandered Lives," which will be the feature picture at the ———— on ————, is built up. It is adapted from the novel "Duke's Son," by Cosmo Hamilton, an English author, who has an immense following in America. Made in England by English actors, this picture is the most accurate picturization of British society which has reached the screen in many a day. It was produced by the Stoll Film Company in their studios in London, and is the most recent of high-class British pictures to come to America. Featured in the cast are Ivy Duke and Guy Newell, who are expected to win a large following for themselves by their work in this picture.

CATCH LINES

An entrancing society drama by the writer of the most popular stories of life in the upper strata—Cosmo Hamilton. A gripping tale from beginning to end.

A story of a "second son" of a financially wrecked family of the British nobility. Adapted from Cosmo Hamilton's "Duke's Son."

"MR. WU"
(Stoll Film Corporation of America)

Unique and Strongly Dramatic From Plot Angle

"MR. WU" is undoubtedly one of the strongest dramatic stories ever presented on either the screen or stage and as such is entitled to all the praise that it received when used as a stage starring vehicle for Walker Whiteside some years ago.

As a picture, however, it runs rather contrary to the rule in that its villain has the most important role and its love story ends, unhappily too, in the early reels. After this the story is one of Chinese revenge, unique, logical and carefully builded, a revenge that fails only because fate decrees that "Mr. Wu" drink the poisoned tea instead of the woman on whom the crafty Oriental had planned to wreck his vengeance.

Sumptuous sets showing the interior of "Mr. Wu's" Chinese home, beautiful scenic locations and a careful attention to detail add to the dramatic qualities the feature possesses. Matheson Lang plays "Wu" with extreme skill. He is supported by a competent cast with which no fault can be found unless it is that most of them who play Chinese characters are not especially good types for Oriental roles.

It is, however, in the actual plot that "Mr. Wu" possesses greatest strength. For audiences which appreciate the unusual, the something different, the picture should prove a hit. Those who insist on the sugar coated live happy after offering will probably object to its lack of romance and its reversal of motion picture tradition. Therefore, the subject of whether or not it should be booked resolves itself into an individual problem to be decided by the audience which each exhibitor may have.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The main attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is a screen version of the famous play, "Mr. Wu," which had a successful career upon the stage in London and New York. Presented with an English company it offers players who are thoroughly grounded in their art. Matheson Lang and Lillian McCarthy are popular in the British metropolis. The play takes on an international flavor in its plot and offers a truly tragic theme on love and parental vengeance. The son of a tea exporter loved a Chinese girl who is killed by her father when he discovers that she has violated the laws of his people.

The English parents of the youth go to Wu in search for him and in a startlingly dramatic manner the powerful Chinaman pays for his treachery. Mr. Gregory had poisoned his cup of tea and he drained it. Realizing that he has been poisoned he makes a rush with his sword when he staggers and falls dead. The picture builds with a deal of cumulative suspense in scenes of tense situations. The acting is superb throughout and the picture is competently staged. The atmosphere is one of the vital factors toward its success as a picture. "Mr. Wu" is considered by impartial critics to possess great dramatic strength, which has been made the most of by director and players.

PROGRAM READER

One of the strongest dramatic offerings of the year is promised in "Mr. Wu," the English picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a celebrated cast of players headed by Matheson Lang. Included in the company are such well known people as Lillah McCarthy and Maggie Albanesi. "Mr. Wu" as a play aroused a great deal of interest upon the stage when enacted in London and New York. Probably many of our patrons saw Walker Whiteside in the play. If so they haven't forgotten its stark realism, its dramatic situations, its notes of pathos and sentiment. The picture is said to be fully equipped in the values of the original play—values which spell a most interesting hour. "Mr. Wu" is well worth your time. Come and be really entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bring out for exploitation that this is an adaptation of the powerful play of the same name—a play which scored a decided hit upon the stage in London and New York. You can state that it was presented by Walker Whiteside on the New York stage. Make much of the fact that Matheson Lang is one of the most capable players in England and that he makes the screen version startling in its force and realism. Bring out that it is a play of love and vengeance on a typical Chinese theme. Have your artist draw a Chinese head for your frames—a cunning and malicious head. String your lobby with Chinese lanterns and have your orchestra play Oriental music. You can stage a prologue in harmony—a sort of one act version of the picture. Your ushers can be garbed correctly in Chinese costume. Play up the strong plot and the efficient acting.

CATCH LINES

The powerful Chinaman found his daughter in a white man's embrace. And according to Chinese law she had to suffer the extreme penalty. See "Mr. Wu," a powerful screen version of the tragic play.

See "Mr. Wu," a picture of love and vengeance. At the ———— next ————.

CATCH LINES

Here is Dorothy Gish who takes a flyer in matrimony and the air besides. See the clever comedienne in a rapid-fire comedy, "Flying Pat."

"TO PLEASE ONE WOMAN"
(Lois Weber Productions-Paramount)

Falls Rather Short for a Lois Weber Production

THE Lois Weber to whom the industry has taken off its hat for a good many years for her genius in turning out great pictures from ordinary material and with unknown talent seems to have slipped in "To Please One Woman." Were it not for good direction, a well knit continuity and an elaborate production, this feature would be very bad indeed for the plot is extremely formula in spite of the effort to provide a theme and its development is ultra-convenient and overdrawn.

There is hardly an original touch from beginning to end. It tells its story very well, but there is little entertainment in the process. You get the moral alright, that, because a vamp wife of a rich man chooses to amuse herself in a small town, a half a dozen people have a lot of trouble before she gets her just deserts according to motion picture formula, but Miss Weber's characters, not her players, do not impress. Her "doctor" deserved quite all that he got for being such a "simp." The ingenue, to be tempted so easily, wouldn't last until she got into long dresses in this age. And the "vamp," she wouldn't be able to get away with it.

If Miss Weber had been able to provide entertainment with her preachment, all our criticism would go for naught, but since she hasn't at least for audiences that demand the best pictures, she isn't going to see this make much of a hit except in the matter of production and acting, especially the latter, since the cast composed for the most part of unknowns is extremely good. In this connection Mona Lisa, a newcomer, looks like a find. She has looks and ought to "vamp" her way to national renown in short order for she can act. Claire Windsor is a pretty heroine and Edward Burns a fair leading man. The Photography is good and the scenic locations very fine.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Alice Granville.....Claire Windsor
Cecilia Granville.....Edith Kessler
Freddy.....George Hackathorne
Dr. John Ransome.....Edward Burns
Leila.....Mona Lisa
Her husband.....Howard Gay
Lucien Wainwright.....L. C. Shumway
Bobby Granville.....Gordon Griffith

Written and directed by Lois Weber

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"To Please One Woman," the first of a series of pictures to be produced by Lois Weber, famous for such great features as "Where Are My Children?", "The Price of a Good Time," and others equally as big for Paramount distribution, comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days showing beginning ————.

In "To Please One Woman" Miss Weber will introduce to audiences in leading parts several of her "finds." Mona Lisa, a new "vamp" who promises to become a second Theda Bara in popularity is a member of the cast, while in Claire Windsor is to be found a new and distinct type of leading woman, since the word star is not to be found in Miss Weber's official vocabulary.

Others of the remarkable cast of "To Please One Woman" are Edward Burns, Edith Kessler and Gordon Griffith.

Miss Weber's initial picture for Paramount is a romantic drama of American life with the story laid in the California of today, with many pretty scenic locations on the Pacific ocean adding to the dramatic values of the picture. Miss Weber personally directed the picture and also wrote the story.

PROGRAM READER

Those who personally directed the Lois Weber productions of the past, and that means most everyone since such great photoplays as "Where Are My Children?" "The Price of a Good Time" and others are not to be forgotten, will rejoice in the booking of Miss Weber's first picture for Paramount release, "To Please One Woman" for the ———— theatre for a ———— day run beginning ————.

"To Please One Woman" is a strong domestic drama of the kind that has made its producer famous telling the story of how nearly a half a dozen lives came to being ruined through the selfishness of one woman, who beautiful and unscrupulous chooses to amuse herself in a small town seaside resort of California. "To Please One Woman" has been produced with an attention to detail and lavishness that adds to the strong dramatic qualities of the story and should be a sure fire audience picture. An all star cast, many of which can be called "finds" appear in the picture. Mona Lisa has the role of the wife and shows every indication of being a worthy successor to Theda Bara. Miss Lisa has youth, beauty, and is a great actress. Claire Windsor, another of Miss Weber's "finds," is appealing as the doctor's fiance, while Edward Burns is a pleasing leading man.

The picture is in six reels and was personally produced by Miss Weber, who now has her own company and will make a series of pictures for Famous Players-Lasky.

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation possibilities of "To Please One Woman" are contained first in the fact that this is Miss Weber's initial picture for a considerable period and that you will be able to see her in place of a star by reminding your patrons of some of her great pictures of the past. After this comes the title and the suggestion it has of a spicy bit of entertainment and the suggestion of the age old conflict of the male and the female. We would use plenty of stills and work hard on the title, especially in newspaper displays. Tie-ups with your local stores should not be hard. Any merchant who sells women's goods should be interested. We would rely largely on a newspaper campaign for our straight advertising with good selling talk and snappy catch lines.

CATCH LINES

The question that silenced the sphinx was—To please one woman. It has been the problem of all men except Solomon and Brigham Young since the days of Adam and Eve. Can you accomplish it? This picture will show what attempting it cost a half a dozen people.

What must have been Solomon's problem when trying to please one woman is such a task?

From the days of Adam and Eve man's problem has been trying to please one woman. This is a story of what the effort cost when the woman was selfish, heartless and vain. It is a great picture—the kind that Lois Weber alone can produce, a page from life and a lesson to every man and woman.

Cost and Worth

Though the price of labor is falling we think that the price of brains should rise, and to prove our honesty and sincerity in that belief we have voluntarily raised the salary of every man on the RITCHEY staff whose brains are responsible for the quality of the RITCHEY poster.

We make the announcement because our action in this matter has been generally criticised by other lithographers, on the grounds that it will make for rising costs in an era of falling prices.

We have no intention of increasing the price of RITCHEY posters, but we have every intention of keeping the quality up to the highest point attainable. Solely through producing posters of the greatest possible merit we have just checked off the most prosperous year in our long history. We are simply sharing that prosperity with the men whose efforts have largely made it possible.

Our competitors may adopt any policy they please. If they are satisfied to make posters in the cheapest possible way they have our full permission to continue to do so. It is their business, not ours. We simply reserve a like right, the right to conduct our business in our way, and we elect to continue paying the highest possible price for the best poster brains attainable, resting sure in the belief that the only poster worth having is the best poster to make.

And in the future, as in the past, that is the only kind of poster that will bear the RITCHEY trade mark.

Some Exhibitors Say:

THANKS to Paramount pictures I am beginning on the New Year with confidence that Paramount will carry me through another successful year. I have found the past year, when I showed a Paramount picture and said so, I made money. My patrons know the Paramount trade mark means the best pictures. When we are to have better pictures Paramount will make them.

ROYAL THEATRE,
MILFORD, IA.

THE Paramount program taken as a whole, in my estimation is the most consistent for quality and box office receipts of any pictures on the market today. The program features are as good as other companies so-called specials. And when I play a Paramount Special I just naturally have the confidence in the picture that I am not afraid to advertise to the limit; but even go so far as to guarantee the production or refund the admission price. And I have the first patron yet to step up to the box office and want the refund; and believe me we have some people in Rocky Ford that would avail themselves of the opportunity.

Paramount pictures are my one best bet. One thing which is certain in this little city, we must put on clean pictures and when I have a Paramount on the program, I can feel at ease. They are all clean and there is something in each and every one of them that is entertainment of the highest degree.

After all, the box-office is the best referee; and the receipts on Paramount days hand all other programs a knock out.

Just tell the Paramount bunch for me to keep them coming in the future as they have been coming in the past year, and we won't need any red ink.

Some Exhibitors Say:

I HAVE run Paramount exclusively for some period now and if I was not convinced of their superiority over all others, I certainly would not do this. I am not in the business for my health or to put any special producer's product before the public. Instead, I am in it to make money, and to make money in this business means to give the public exactly what the great majority wants.

Any one in the picture game who goes entirely by his own judgment is pretty sure to fall down some day. My experience, and I know it is the same with all successful exhibitors, has been that the only safe way to play the game, is to combine my judgment with the wishes of my patrons, and right here let me say that my people not only want Paramount, but demand it.

I often hear other exhibitors remark that they have competition, but in their cases, if they ran Paramount Pictures exclusively, they would to a large extent eliminate all fears of the other fellow.

WILLIAM CONLEY,

PARAMOUNT PICTURES with Paramount exploitation put the Crescent Theatre over the top when the wise ones said it couldn't be done. We play Paramount Pictures exclusively and we advertise this fact extensively. Paramount is just what the name implies, the pictures that top others in quality and box-office values.

PHIL SMITH, MGR.,

I HAVE been dealing with the Paramount Company for the past year, and found when I have played the Paramount Pictures that my receipts have shown a material increase. I am booking Paramounts regularly, and continue to do so.

They Were Right!

LOTS of people who saw "Midsummer Madness" predicted that it would be one of the greatest triumphs of the screen. And the reception given it at the Criterion, where it has been packing the house every day for the past month, proves that they were right.

This public enthusiasm proves that Arthur James was right when he said, in an unsolicited editorial in the Moving Picture World:

"It is unquestionably the greatest legitimate production the screen has ever seen"

It proves that William A. Johnston was right when he said in an unsolicited editorial in the Motion Picture News:

"The photodrama of the future. Has all the hold on an audience, all the expressive acting, all the unity and construction of the best spoken drama on Broadway—and more than most"

It proves that The New York Telegram was right when it said:

"In story, direction and acting, the nearest to a perfect production the screen has ever held"

And when you show it you'll know they were right, too!

Dear Mr. Abrams;-

I have just returned to my office from a screening of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture "The Mark of Zorro", and I cannot refrain from telling you that I think it is really the most wonderful picture he has made.

We believe the picture is so big that we have decided to play this feature in our theatres a full week instead of our usual policy which has always been to play everything three or four days.

It took a picture like the "Mark of Zorro" to do it.

Best wishes and kindest regards.

My dear Sidney:

Just a few words in regard to the way in which I have put over the Maurice Tourneur production, "The Last of the Mohicans".

First allow me to thank you for writing our Superintendent of schools here and for sending me a copy of your letter to him. That gave me a "lead off" and if you don't think I took advantage of it you should have seen my business on the opening, yesterday. Also allow me to thank you for sending me the print three days in advance so that I could get an advance showing.

When the print arrived I got busy and phoned the leaders of the following: The Ministerial Alliance, Women's Club, Y.W.C.A., Y.M.C.A. Schools, City Officials, Board of Education, Public Library and St. Vistor's College. They all responded at the private showing and when the picture had finished I merely handed them the enclosed card which I had printed for the occasion. Within twenty four hours they all had returned their cards with THEIR OPINION written on it. That was all I needed-- I went from there! Heavy on the newspapers, my screen and lobby. The results were wonderful.

Friendly competitors told me to lay off of 'Last of the Mohicans'", in fact I was skeptical myself but I knew from criticisms that the production was there and also know if I could get the folks interested in the education of the community busy, that the picture would please and believe me, Sidney, that's the answer! It did please them and it pleased the kids that crave "INJUN PITCHERS" too.

Show this letter to exhibitors and they can use the same ideas and clean up the same as I have. Much success to you.

Sincerely, A. H. Bestor

"My problem is solved"

Says Manager Mayer

Says Manager Mayer of the Roebling Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "My problem is solved. I have tried every other brand of comedies on the market, but the fault with them all is that for every ONE that is good, they ring in half a dozen 'bloomers.'

"With CENTURIES, however, I am glad to say that they are all good.

"You have no idea what a load this has taken from my shoulders. The time that I formerly spent searching for comedies that I could count on to furnish the laughs that are so essential in a well balanced program, I can now devote to the selection of features and to the operation of my theatre.

52 Good Pictures a Year and no worry

Administration Bldgs
Universal City

THE reason why you can be sure of fifty-two good pictures a year in Universal Special Attractions is because the Law of Averages works for you and for us in picture-making with exactly the same sureness as it works in a Life Insurance Table.

UNIVERSAL puts into its Special Attractions all its resources. These comprise the best playing, directing and mechanical equipment in the whole world. The unbreakable Law of Averages then makes the result a better grade of pictures, week in and week out, than you can buy elsewhere—while their fair price makes your profit just as much bigger in proportion.

AND because you are sure of these two things—a good picture and a bigger profit every week in the year—you'll have no worry.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

IN the January issue of PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE, its Editor, James R. Quirk, values the best plays of the year 1920 and places among the foremost, "THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY." He says of this master-picture, "'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY' is a miracle of detail—it challenges in its mosaic perfections any photoplay ever made."

NOW—how does the box-office back this up? Merely as a sample, read this from Mortimer Lewis, Manager of the BIJOU, Atlantic City: "I played 'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY' in my house four days; had I not been booked with another show which I found impossible to take out, I would have kept this picture on for an indefinite run. I have never before had so many patrons come to me personally and praise a show. My personal opinion is that it is the BEST PRODUCTION I ever played."

says of "MR. WU"

"MR. WU"

(Stoll Film Corporation of America)

Unique and Strongly Dramatic From Plot Angle

"MR. WU" is undoubtedly one of the strongest dramatic stories ever presented on either the screen or stage and as such is entitled to all the praise that it received when used as a stage starring vehicle for Walker Whiteside some years ago.

As a picture, however, it runs rather contrary to the rule in that its villain has the most important role and its love story ends, unhappily too, in the early reels. After this the story is one of Chinese revenge, unique, logical and carefully builded, a revenge that fails only because fate decrees that "Mr. Wu" drink the poisoned tea instead of the woman on whom the crafty Oriental had planned to wreck his vengeance.

Sumptuous sets showing the interior of "Mr. Wu's" Chinese home, beautiful scenic locations and a careful attention to detail add to the dramatic qualities the feature possesses. Matheson Lang plays "Wu" with extreme skill. He is supported by a competent cast with which no fault can be found unless it is that most of them who play Chinese characters are not especially good types for Oriental roles.

It is, however, in the actual plot that "Mr. Wu" possesses greatest strength. For audiences which appreciate the unusual, the something different, the picture should prove a hit. Those who insist on the sugar coated live happy after offering will probably object to its lack of romance and its reversal of motion picture tradition. Therefore, the subject of whether or not it should be booked resolves itself into an individual problem to be decided by the audience which each exhibitor may have.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Stoll's First American Release Very Satisfactory Program Offering

"SQUANDERED LIVES"
Stoll Film

DIRECTOR ..... Franklin Dyall
AUTHOR ..... Cosmo Hamilton
SCENARIO BY ..... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..... Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Interesting program release, quite up to average American production of same class
STORY.....Based on how younger son of English peer cheats at cards, but finishes all right
DIRECTION.....Quite fair, some excellent bits
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Usually very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERAWORK ..... Usually good
PLAYERS.....Ivy Duke exceptionally pretty and screens well. Guy Newall is surely going to please. Remainder of cast adequate
EXTERIORS.....Several unusually beautiful English backgrounds. One shot on the Thames at night very pretty ..... Satisfying
INTERIORS .....Usually accurate. A few poor titles
DETAIL.....Will probably suit
CHARACTER OF STORY.....the average house, especially good for neighborhoods
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,800 feet

Stolls have hit upon a Cosmo Hamilton story of his usual type for their first American release. It will go over. Not because "Squandered Lives" is a knock-out. It isn't. But considering price considerations and market conditions this picture is liable to get in without difficulty and it certainly will satisfy unless too much fuss is made about is as a special, etc. If it plays as a straight program release it will do and do very nicely.

Practically all of the titles of the original production have been changed for the American market, but at that those who handled the job slipped up several times and left in titles which are very "English-y," and which will probably be over the heads of the average picture audience. As a whole, however, these will probably be overlooked.

Guy Newall and Ivy Duke are the featured players and it's a bet Newall is going to be liked by the usual American audience. He is far from a good looking hero, but he looks like a real he-man and has a charming screen personality and a lovable smile. He is a gambler, a cheat, and he makes no secret about it, but your crowd is going to like him just the same. Ivy Duke is a very pretty beroine and several of her close-ups show that she is very beautiful. At times she suffers from poor photography and lack of direction.

The story tells how Newall and Ivy Duke both keep up their position in English society by cheating at bridge—he because he is the younger son of a peer without funds, and she because her people have practically no money. She rejects a multi-millionaire and marries Newall, and later when this millionaire catches them cheating there is a rough house, after which Newall throws him out. Later to thoroughly accomplish revenge the millionaire pleads for forgiveness and invites Newall and his wife to a big house party, where he catches them cheating and exposes them before a huge crowd. Disgraced, and without a future, they plan to commit suicide by suffocation, and are saved from this by an old servant who, reading in the newspaper of the death of the peer, finally breaks into the room and rescues them. The clutch shows them, banned by English society, with their future hopes centered upon the coming heir.

Cosmo Hamilton Your Best Bet for Exploitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Squandered Lives" is a rather catchy title for a good average program picture. Stoll's first American release is coming to you this way. You had better look it over if you haven't hitherto seriously considered booking these productions. It is true you haven't any names of particular importance to play with, and it is also true that as an English film certain prejudices will be propaganded by some salesmen. You had better see it and decide for yourself just what to do.

Cosmo Hamilton is well known in this country, one of his latest screen offerings being "Midsummer Madness," which Famous Players expect to go very well. He has written a number of other somewhat popular screen successes. You know your clientele best and it may be that you may want to keep from the fact that this is a foreign production. You might mention Newall's name as an English actor who is bound to become liked in this country because of his unusual personality.

The title will give you several excellent opportunities for catchlines.

-says of "MR. WU"

The Stoll Film Corporation of America has a gripping five-reel drama in "Mr. Wu," starring Matheson Lang, the eminent English actor. "Mr. Wu was originally a highly successful stage play, also starring Mr. Lang, written by H. M. Vernon and Harold Owen. The screen version was made under the stage direction of Maurice Elvey, chief of Stoll directorial staff, and Barry Bernard, the art director.

Mr. Wu, or Wu Li Chang, is the dominating power in Kowloon, China. Matheson Lang in this role renders a powerful portrayal of a strong man seeking revenge for the iniquity against his daughter, Nang Ping, by the young white man, Basil Gregory, son of Arthur Gregory, trader and financier. The close-ups of Mr. Lang and the semi-close-ups are excellent. Here it is skillful histrionic ability taking the place of sumptuous scenery and crowds of people. To see the play of emotions sweep across Mr. Lang's expressive face is a treat—a rare treat, that cannot fail to enlist universal admiration by its very novelty.

The lightings are, for the most part, good, and the direction is adequate. Although the location is China, most of the people can be singled out as Anglo-Saxons, despite their Oriental garb. But, strange to say, this is not a defect. The acting of Mr. Lang so dominates the entire production that such a mere thing as an Anglo-Saxon attempting to be a Chinaman is a trifle.

Lillah McCarthy as Mrs. Gregory is also excellent. She is convincing and sincere as the mother of the erring son. Meggie Albanesi, as Nang Ping, daughter of Mr. Wu, does good work, and Teddy Arundel, as Arthur Gregory, also comes in for his commendable work.

For the extremely particular "Mr. Wu" may seem to be an exaggerated story of the conflict between a powerful Chinese house and the Anglo-Saxon house which has done wrong to the Chinese house. But to those chiefly interested in dramatic situations and artistic dramatic acting this picture will be welcomed. All in all, "Mr. Wu" lends itself to unusual exploitation, due to the relationship of China to the rest of the world at this time, and is a good box office attraction.

Stoll Film Corporation's First Offering a Screen Version of Cosmo Hamilton's "Duke's Son" in Six Reels

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargeant

Interesting, from many angles, is the first offering of the Stoll Film Corporation, which is about to enter the American market with a weekly release. This is the first endeavor of the British producers to make a regular release since the days when Pathe, Urban and Gaumont were components of the old Motion Picture Patents Company, and the first offering naturally interests quite apart from its entertainment value.

In point of acting, the production compares very favorably with the work of the American companies. Ivy Duke, the starred player, and Guy Newall, her featured support, are but two of a cast of unusual excellence. Hugh C. Buckler and C. Lawford Davidson also show prominently and the lesser members of the cast are all competent. They are good judges of tempo, are excellent in the pantomimic registration of their thoughts and they look the parts they play.

Technically the production shows imperfections of lighting and some of the settings are cramped, though others, apart from the lack of illumination, will compare very favorably with the best in cinematographic architecture, notably the ball room scenes near the close of the picture and the earlier hallway of an old castle at which the players are guests. In the matter of exteriors a different story may be told, for there is a fine country seat and some shots of a Thames houseboat with a natural background of unusual beauty.

The story is primarily propaganda for and a defense of the younger sons of titled families. This is a matter which does not concern American audiences, but the natural narrative value of the story, apart from this propaganda, is decidedly good and the sincerity of the players adds interest apart from the work of the author. There are one or two uncovered time jumps, but the continuity is kept well in hand, and the interest sustained past the climax. If succeeding subjects are equal in value to the first offering, the long-threatened English invasion should become a successful fact; not that the presentation equals in all respects the best of our native work, but because it stands up well and offers variety in stars and treatment.

THE millions of fans who have seen Tom Moore in a dozen varied roles are in for a delightful shock when they see him as the timid street cleaner who became a leader of men. It is a characterization that deserves to rank with any performance we can remember.

What . . . Canavan a gentleman? Has he forgotten the red flag, symbol of his blustering youth? Ah, thereby hangs the tale, as funny a tale as ever found its way to the screen.

This was vividly portrayed by a fine company of Italian screen artists and the scenery was especially notable. VOL. XXIII JANUARY 8, 1921 No III

Pharisees and Bolshevists

WE are credibly informed that there are today, in Washington, ten well-financed, and efficiently active lobbies. Each is working for an individual and radical reform. Among them, and foremost, is the Blue Sunday machine.

If these reforms were all put through we are told, upon the highest authority, that the government would be bankrupted and cease to function.

The situation, of course, is preposterous. We cannot regard these agencies as anything other than arch-enemies of the American Government. They are deliberately and actively engaged in developing the weaknesses of the legislative system to the end of enacting laws without the consent of the governed. They are deliberately instigating the Federal Government to override the functions and rights of the State. They are rocking—in their blind, selfish, arrogant and commercial intolerance—the very foundation of this government, let alone impeding legislation which is positively and immediately imperative if the people of this country are to have employment, be paid wages and be properly fed and clothed.

Why the great dailies do not rise to their opportunity and tell the whole truth about these dangerous pests is beyond our comprehension.

In our own small way we can only say to those who are concerned with the freedom of motion picture expression and the continuance of this industry; these lobbies are hard at work. They are amply financed. They have their constituencies in Congress. And left alone they will slip their measures through as certain as daylight.

But the screen can do much.

All that is needed to chase these legislature fixers into hiding is to let the clear sunlight of truth shine on them—and keep shining. The screen can do this—if the newspaper can't. All that is needed is the plain, unvarnished truth—to tell the American public, each day, through slides and trailers—just who these people are, how they work and what they propose to do with our constitution given right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The American public, once enlightened will smash this sneaky invasion of their liberty into smithereens; and there isn't an honest legislator in the United States but who will throw his hat in the air and yell with glee to see the job well done.

This is the screen's greatest opportunity.

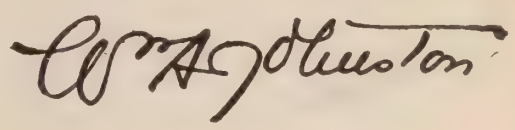
A Lesson from Toronto

WE invite the attention of the Vigilance Committee of the National Association and particularly, of exhibitors everywhere—to the efficient manner in which motion picture stock selling fakirs are handled in Toronto, Canada.

The Cinematographers' and Craftsmans' Union of that City has effected a sympathetic alliance with the local newspapers and the heads of the police and detective bureaus, whereby the Union is informed of the arrival in the city of the stock promoter. A committee of the Union then proceeds to investigate his wares before they are offered to the public through newspaper advertising or any other medium.

The scheme is successful. The newspapers, naturally, are anxious to protect their readers. The local authorities seek to protect the general public. The Union submits that its members, being practical picture men, are able to distinguish broadly between the honest and the openly dishonest purveyor of stock.

The very same course of procedure can be followed by any exhibitor local in this country; and we don't know of a better service they could render to their public and to the good name of the motion picture.



* * *

Broadway and Main Street

A WESTERN exhibitor sends us an interesting exhibit. Exhibit "A" is the statement, in detail, of an exhibitor who has his prices as high as he can hold them, fills his seats right along by good advertising and yet cannot pay the rentals asked of him. Exhibit "B" is the statement of a record run, together with the gross receipts of a recent picture at one of the big Broadway theatres.

The western exhibitor feels that if this Broadway theatre paid a proper rental, the rentals would be proper for the small and later run theatre.

We feel so, too. And we don't believe that rentals will ever be adjusted until some system makes this possible.

Notable Decline in New Film Incorporations

Barely $150,000 represents the capitalization of companies incorporating in New York state during the past few days for the purpose of entering the motion picture business or some one of its allied branches. This is a decidedly low amount when compared to a few months ago, when a single day brought the chartering of motion picture concerns with the amount of capital stock ranging from $50,000 to $500,000.

The six companies incorporating during the past week are Topics of the Day, located in New York City, capitalized at $10,000, and including in its directorate Amedee J. VanBeuren, A. E. Siegel and Clayton J. Heermance of New York; Fortuna Films, New York, $50,000, Allan A. Deutsch, Henry Margoshes, Nancy Katz; G-M Laboratories, New York, $25,000; C. I. Funkenstein, New York, A. O'Grady and B. J. Longstreet, Brooklyn; Dominant Pictures, New York, $25,000, Charles C. Burr, Brooklyn, W. T. Lackey and William S. Patjins, New York; Empire Film Laboratories, New York, $30,000, J. P. H. deWindt, Jr., George A. Kranske, Jr., Louis L. Alterman, New York; Jericho Films, Incorporated, Rochester, $10,000, Owen J. Kane, George A. Sarles and Clinton DeVoe, Rochester.

"Movies Don't Hurt Good Eyes," Says Bulletin

The National Safety Council, of Chicago, Ill., the membership of which embraces about 8,000 industrial plants, trade associations, governmental agencies and technical societies, has sent out to its constituents a bulletin discussing the effect of motion-pictures on the eyes. The bulletin reads:

"If your eyes are all right, it should not hurt them to look at moving-pictures for an hour or an hour-and-a-half. If your eyes feel tired or if you have a headache after looking at clear moving-pictures, it may be that something is wrong with your eyes. Have your eyes examined by a competent eye-specialist."

Albert A. Cormier Leaves Trade Review Staff

Among important changes in the motion-picture trade paper field annouced for the year 1921 is the resignation from the staff of Exhibitor's Trade Review of Albert A. Cormier, who for over three years has held the position of advertising manager for that publication.

"Al" Cormier is one of the most familiar figures of the industry in the East and numbers among his friends representatives of every element of the film world. Leaving the advertising staff of the Morning Telegraph in August, 1917, he went with Exhibitor's Trade Review as advertising manager, a post he earned by industrious work and unfailing courtesy and service to the trade.

Mr. Cormier plans a vacation trip to Havana, Cuba, and on his return announcement of his future activity will be made.

Constance Talmadge and Dorothy Gish Wed

IN the announcement on December 29 of the marriages of Dorothy Gish and Constance Talmadge, a double surprise was sprung not only on the fan public, but in film circles.

Miss Talmadge, who but recently signed a long term contract with Associated First National, became the bride of John Piogolo, wealthy Greek tobacco man.

Miss Gish's husband is James Rennie, an actor at present playing in the cast of "Spanish Love," a New York piece.

The weddings were performed at Greenwich, Conn., on December 26.

Opposition to Loew Merger in Canada

Opposition has been raised in certain quarters in Canada against the proposal for a $20,000,000 merger for theatres in Eastern Canada. The amalgamation of Loew theatre companies operating five different houses in Ontario and Quebec has been undertaken and it has been proposed to organize one large company with a capitalization of $20,000,000 to control the five theatres. It is pointed out, however, that this would mean a capitalization of $4,000,000 for each of the theatres and various questions have been raised regarding the real object and the need for any change.

In connection with this development, an investment company of Toronto has asked shareholders of the Loew theatres in Ottawa and Windsor for their proxies for use at a meeting which was called to discuss plans and to arrange all possible details.

First National Franchise Holders Meet in Buffalo

Associated First National franchises formed the main subject of discussion at the Iroquois Hotel in Buffalo, on December 20, the occasion being a luncheon tendered to Ralph H. Clark, general manager and treasurer of Associated First National Pictures, of New York, Inc., by Hugh Rennie, manager of the Buffalo First National offices, and attended by exhibitors of northern New York. These included both Associated First National franchise holders as well as non-franchise holders. Mr. Clark introduced by Mr. Rennie was the first speaker.

Mr. Clark after a brief resume of the founding of the First National Exhibitors Circuit took up the reasons for the formation of the association. Moe Mark of the Mark Strand Enterprises followed Mr. Clark.

The Anti-Blue Law Association expresses its readiness to co-operate with the motion-picture forces at present engaged in fighting the Blue-Law agitation.

Industry Answers Hoover's Call to Aid in European Relief Work

Expected that $2,500,000 Will Be Realized by Big Film Campaign

THE motion-picture industry's campaign to save 250,000 of Europe's starving children is well under way. An enthusiastic response from every branch of the industry has answered the call of Herbert Hoover, chairman of the European Relief Council, through which organization the funds are to find their way in the form of sustaining food to the hungry little ones across the sea.

There is no doubt in the minds of the picture men who are devoting their time and energy to the campaign that at least $2,500,000 will be turned over to the Hoover Fund through the activities of the several branches of the motion-picture industry. The joint committee which represents producers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures in America has opened headquarters in the Hotel Bristol on Forty-ninth street near Seventh avenue, and is holding daily meetings, laying the groundwork for the active campaigning by every branch of the industry from Coast to Coast.

The men whose names are household words in picturedom are daily visitors at the committee's headquarters, offering suggestions and practical aid to the end that this, the picture industry's first big drive for a humanitarian cause, shall be attended by unqualified success.

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion-Picture Industry, and Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America, have both taken off their coats and are devoting their driving power to starting the big ball rolling.

As a forerunner to the actual campaign of raising funds, a 200-foot film, entitled "The Invisible Guest," produced especially to rivet the public's attention in a graphic way to the conditions in Europe and to emphasize the necessity for immediate relief to starving children there, has been sent to the exchanges of twelve of the biggest film distributing companies and will shortly be seen by picture audiences throughout the country. This film is of tremendous heart interest. It is furnished exhibitors without charge and they are requested to show it daily to their patrons during the month of January.

The crest of the picture drive to aid the starving children will be reached on January 26. This day has been set apart by the European Relief Council as Motion Picture Day. Throughout the country on January 26 the patrons of picture theatres will be asked to give liberally to the fund. Addresses will be made in every picture theatre by prominent men and women of National, State, or local celebrity. These speakers will draw word pictures of conditions as they now exist in those sections of devastated Europe where need for relief is greatest. Governors, Mayors, Senators, Congressmen, educators, and others have been drafted for this work. Every charitable and relief organization which is enrolled in the starving-children campaign under the Hoover banner will cooperate with the picture theatres on Motion Picture Day, and the actual collections will be made by representatives of these organizations.

¶ Don't forget the dates: January 24-25-26.

On the morning of January 29, it is planned to have picture theatres, wherever feasible, give a special performance for children, tickets for which will be sold in advance by representatives of the European Relief Council. These early morning shows for children are expected to produce a large revenue for the fund. A plan is under consideration whereby the film companies will furnish gratis to the exhibitors suitable films for children. The organizations through which tickets for the morning performances will be sold in behalf of the European Relief Council are the American Friends' Service Committee, American Red Cross, American Relief Administration, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Christian Association, and Young Women's Christian Association. It is anticipated that many wealthy citizens will purchase outright the entire seating capacity of certain theatres and will then donate the tickets thus purchased to schools or charitable organizations so that children may attend the performances free of charge.

An extensive poster and correspondence campaign will be inaugurated immediately by the picture men's committee to bring the significant facts in connection with the drive to the attention of every picture theatre owner in the country and to the public at large.

As an incentive to theatre owners and managers to exert every effort in raising funds, the committee is considering the advisability of offering prizes for the theatres which turn in the largest amount of money to the fund in proportion to their seating capacity. Mr. Hoover has also offered to place upon the Honor Roll of the European Relief Council the name of every theatre which actively participates in the raising of funds. Honor Roll certificates will be issued and forwarded to all such theatres. The picture committee has requested the owners and managers of all motion picture theatres to offer suggestions for unique and effective methods of centering the public attention upon the drive.

The personnel of the motion picture committee which is handling the drive on behalf of both the National Association of the Motion-Picture Industry, and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is as follows:

Oscar A. Price, William A. Brady, C. C. Pettijohn, William Wright, H. M. Berman, J. R. Quirk, Arthur James, Sydney S. Cohen, Leo Brecher, C. T. Sears, C. E. Whitehurst, S. I. Berman, E. M. Fay, John Manheimer and C. L. O'Rielly.

A novelty idea in the motion picture drive to save the lives of Europe's starving children is the sale of "Hoover Dolls" at picture theatres. The plan was suggested by a group of New York theatre owners who intend purchasing rag dolls and selling them to their patrons on Motion Picture Day—January 26.

The price upon each doll's head will be $10. It represents the cost of feeding one child a meal a day until next year's harvests in Central and Eastern Europe, bringing relief to the three million children who are now starving there.

The committee representing the motion picture industry in the drive for funds for the European Relief Council, of which Herbert Hoover is chairman, urges every exhibitor in the country to adopt the "Hoover Doll" plan and to sell as many as possible to picture patrons.

Those who purchase the dolls will have a constant reminder of their philanthropy and the committee feels that it will be a comforting thought for each doll purchaser to know that he or she has saved the life of at least one child in the devastated land across the sea.

In several New York theatres the "Hoover Dolls" will be sold in the lobbies at every performance, beginning early in January and lasting until January 29 when a special morning matinee will be given for children, preceding the regular show in picture theatres.

What Readers Are Thinking

"Make 'em in Five-Reels"

The following letter was received from James J. Hoffer of the Victory theatre, Peotone, Ill. Mr. Hoffer writes anent the five-reeeler vs. the seven-reeler:

"Now that the subject of five-reel pictures is up for discussion I am sending a copy of a letter I sent to Jimmie Kelly, and which I think expresses my views on the subject of Specials (?) as well as they can be.

"This idea of making a seven-reeler of a picture that could be made in five, because the producer can get more money for it, is like a dentist pulling your tooth out a little each day so you will feel you are getting your money's worth, instead of giving them plenty of action in one sitting and getting it over.

"I am a dentist by profession and an exhibitor by occupation so long as the reformer don't close up the mouths on Sunday I can still make make a living.

"But you keep up your good work and maybe the time will come when I won't have to work so hard at my profession to support my occupation.

"Misleading Propaganda"

A letter has been received from the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, in which the opinion is expressed that an advertisement appearing recently in the Enquirer and bearing the name of the Romell Motion Picture Company, "is not only misleading but is bad propaganda." The advertisement in question, as submitted in the letter from the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, reads as follows:

"Circulation and exhibition of Business-Building Motion Pictures is today possible through a half dozen practical proven methods.

"Method No. 2. Properly constructed screen sales stories up to 1,000 feet in length may be booked for exhibition in some thirty-five hundred theatres throughout the country. The circulation approximates seven million. The cost compares favorably with that of other publicity mediums.

"This circulation method is desirable and valuable for concerns marketing a staple product and having widespread distribution. Special dealer merchandizing may be linked with each exhibition, thereby obtaining maximum results.

"Through our connection with one of the largest industrial film distributing companies, we are able to contract for definite exhibitions to the above extent.

"There has long been a doubt as to the ability of any distributing agency to deliver such service. Our contract provides that you pay only for what you get —and you pay for it after you are satisfied you have gotten it."

The letter from the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company anent the advertisement above reads as follows:

"We are enclosing herewith clipping of an ad. published in this morning's Enquirer, which we are inclined to believe is not only misleading but is bad propaganda which, to our way of thinking tend towards impressing upon the public that full one thousand-foot advertising reels can be run in such a vast number of theatres.

"We have been making motion pictures for the past twelve years and in that length of time have never attempted to introduce a thousand-foot reel in any theatre. We never believed the public paid their way into a theatre for such purpose. We would appreciate very much an expression from you on the subject."

Film Shipments by Mail

A letter from Ludwig Geiling, proprietor of the Majestic theatre at Baldwin, La., encloses another letter written recently by the postmaster at Baldwin and addressed to the Post Office Department at Washington, D. C., concerning the shipment of films by the United States mail. In submitting the letter of the local postmaster, Mr. Geiling writes:

"I am enclosing herewith a copy of a letter which is self-explanatory in itself and which I believe is a fair sample of possibly hundreds of similar cases. I am sending you this copy as I have so much faith in the News that I believe there is no way for exhibitors to get a square deal unless their grievances are presented in the columns of the News. I myself would not try to run a picture show without the News, and I think that I am not the only exhibitor with this idea."

The letter written by the Baldwin postmaster, John W. Sewell, to the Chief Clerk of the P. O. Department at Washington, and enclosed in Mr. Geiling's letter, follows:

"My local picture man expressed today to New Orleans one film case—44 lbs.; express charges, $.94; one case—16 lbs.; express charges, $.56—total express, $1.50.

"I could have mailed them to New Orleans, 44 lbs., for $.50 including the two cent revenue; 16 lbs. for $.20 or a total of $.70 thus saving this man $.80 on this shipment. He, however, has to pay both ways, therefore my saving in this one case would be $1.80; besides giving him the benefit of my messenger service free, he has to pay his private messenger $.20 per trip; total saving to my customer, therefore, would be $2.00.

"This besides daily revenues to the Post Office.

"I speak of my office alone throughout the 1st and 2nd zone. I dare say there are many similar cases. And the Post Office should get this business."

Stage Set for Movie Ball

THE grand ball, festival and dinner to be given by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce at the grand ball room, Hotel Astor, next Wednesday night, promises to be even a bigger event than those formerly given by the Screen Club, well remembered as the elite events of filmdom.

Many producers, stars, and film players have purchased tickets.

Not one distributing or producing concern is without box seats. and at the time of going to press, more than eleven hundred tickets had been sold and the issue of tickets is limited to fifteen hundred.

The committee is located at 1600 Broadway, where those desirous of securing admissions will be accommodated until the limit is reached.

British Film Executive Is Guest of Universal

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company tendered a dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, on Wednesday evening of this week, to Arthur Clozenberg, managing-director of the Film Booking Offices, Ltd., of London, which distributes Universal's product in Great Britain. Paul Gulick acted as the toastmaster of the occasion. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, welcomed Mr. Clozenberg in the name of the Universal organization. The other speakers who followed President Laemmle were Vice-President R. H. Cochrane, General Manager Goldstein, Sales Manager Harry Berman and Export Manager George Kann.

In the course of his speech, Mr. Clozenberg paid high tribute to the executive ability of Mr. Laemmle and ascribed the success of Universal Film as responsible in a large measure to the grit and fixity of purpose of its president. Mr. Clozenberg further asserted that he would finance a trip to London of a Universal representative, the trip to be in the nature of a reward to the best Universal salesman.

General Manager Goldstein gave some interesting figures in the course of his talk indicative of the size and scope of the Universal organization throughout the world. He declared that there were in operation at the present time no less than forty-four distributing depots with an aggregate force of three hundred salesmen and twelve hundred other employes, exclusive of the forces in the New York headquarters and the studios at Universal City. One hundred fifty automobiles are employed, declared Mr. Goldstein. The weekly payroll of the company amounts to $135,000. At the Fort Lee laboratories alone, Mr. Goldstein said, over 2,000,000 feet of print were turned out.

First Nat'l Home Office Have Xmas Party

Christmas spirit was in ample evidence at Associated First National offices on the holiday eve, when as many of the big staff as could find room on the seventh floor and corridors leading thereto gathered at the invitation of Manager James D. Williams in a festive "party."

Mr. Williams, in response to the applause which greeted his entrance, mounted the dais alongside Santa Claus (impersonated by Arthur Leslie of the publicity department) and expressed the pleasure it gave him to see such a large First National "family" gathering.

With Mr. Williams' address went seasonable tokens of regard to each member of the organization. In the spirit of good fun and merriment, C. L. Yearsley and other heads of the departments followed Mr. Williams on the dais. Placards with humorous "copy" and sketches, touching on popular personalities in the First National organization and with quips at the various trade papers adorned the walls. Good cheer was dispensed, a mistletoe bough played havoc with Old Doctor Formality and two hours of Christmas Eve fun came to a close with hearty handshakes and happy wishes for the holiday and for a continuation for all of the Merry Xmas already so well begun.

A.M.P.A.'s Gridiron Dinner Set for February

The A. M. P. A. will give their annual Gridiron Dinner during the latter part of February at the Biltmore Hotel, New York. This is considered the most brilliant affair of the year in the activities of the A. M. P. A.

Only a limited number of tickets have been issued for the dinner. It is expected that it will be attended by many of the biggest men in the motion-picture industry. While tickets were distributed to the members at their last weekly meeting they are already practically unprocurable, it is stated. The advance demand for them is declared to have been unprecedented.

D. P. Howells Decries Demand to Bar German-Made Productions

Belittles Menace of Competition from Abroad; Discusses "Passion"

THE importation of foreign-made productions into the American market is discussed at length by David P. Howells in a statement just issued from the headquarters of Associated First National Pictures. Mr. Howells says:

"Cries for reprisals against Germany due to the edict there against the showing of American films should not be taken seriously by the trade in this country. The demands for the barring of German films by this country is raised by the uncertain producer, the maker of pictures in America who is not certain that his production can hold its own against competition.

"The action in Germany is one that would not be tolerated here inasmuch as it is a direct attack by producers to force the exhibitors there to take films of home manufacture that are of less value to them than others that they could procure. The producers there found that they could not compete with American films and because it is vitally necessary for Germany to foster all possible industry within its borders the government issued the edict prohibiting exhibitors there to show American films. Instead of being taken by producers here as an insult to America, or as unfair tactics on the part of another country, it should be accepted as a surety that there is nothing in the bug-a-boo about the American market being flooded with foreign films at a cheaper price than the American producer can manufacture.

"German manufacturers have found that they cannot compete with the American films in their own home market. They admitted this when they joined in the application for the writ against the showing of American films there. If they cannot compete in their own home market what chance have they in the American market? In view of their stand taken before their own government how much basis is there to the oft re-iterated fear that the American producer must beware or he will find his own market taken away from him by foreign films manufactured at a cost far lower than he could hope to approach?

"As a matter of fact there is only one director and one star in a foreign country that can hope to break into the American market in direct competition with the best of the producers here with any hope of success. The star is Pola Negri and the director is Ernest Lubitsch. They work together and the reason why they have a chance of breaking into American territory is because Mr. Lubitsch has adopted the American method of careful production and in Miss Negri has a star who has the inherent ability to rank among the leaders anywhere in the world. I venture to say that if either this director or this star had been working five years ago their place in the foremost ranks in America would have been assured two or three years ago.

"'Passion,' now being distributed in this country by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is a striking example of their combined work. Its universal appeal is well shown by the hordes that have crowded into theatres in this country where the production was shown. The establishment of a record at the Capitol theatre in New York is viewed with alarm by those producers who do not know of conditions in France, Italy and Germany and all other European centres of motion picture productions.

"Mr. Lubitsch and Miss Negri work on the same comparatively slow basis that is now characterizing the production of the leading producers and stars of America. They realized that time must be taken for a big production and on resuming work immediately after the conclusion of peace they adopted a schedule of not more than four productions a year. Four foreign productions a year from this source that can compete with American-made films carries no great threat to the American market.

"Other producers in Europe are beginning to realize that hasty slip-shod work gets the motion picture producer nowhere and the frantic haste to get productions onto the market which was so marked when the resumption of motion picture production was possible with the ending of the war is fast disappearing and there is a chance that other European stars or directors may solve the problem of productions with a world-wide appeal in the same manner as have Ernest Lubitsch and Pola Negri. Before they can accomplish this, however, they must accept the dictum which these two have already adopted of very few productions a year, so that even if every producer of any account in Europe should hit the mark of American taste in the same way 'Passion' has, the American market could not be flooded merely because of the small product a careful schedule naturally entails.

"That is the foreign position in a nutshell as far as it concerns the American producer, but from the standpoint of the American exhibitor an attempt to bar German films should be fought tooth and nail. A mere edict against films direct from Germany would not satisfy the producer who is afraid of competition. An edict against the importation of any film would have to be issued for it is seldom that a film comes from the point of its origin. German films come to this country via Holland or France. French films are apt to come via Italy, etc.

"The exhibitor of the United States has already made known his views in regard to foreign films through the resolution adopted at the Cleveland convention last June:

"'We deprecate the intents on the part of certain producers to curtail the output of quality pictures. Art being international, we favor all motion pictures of merit and quality regardless of where they are made. We, therefore, favor the importation of high class motion pictures, if by such means competition could be kept alive amongst producers.'

"Anent the sentiment expressed in the last sentence of this resolution the comment of the New York World in its review of the opening of 'Passion' at the Capitol theatre in New York is significant:

"'A new artist of the screen made her bow to New York yesterday and American young women of the profession will see Pola Negri at the Capitol theatre this week with apprehension and interest. The acting of this Polish girl, about whom little has been heard in America, may go far toward firing anew the ambitions of established favorites who have rested, perhaps too comfortable, for a year or more on laurels of the past.'

"Other critics have made the same suggestion that this one film from the other side may provide the urge for better work on the part of many stars who have traded chiefly upon reputation rather than honest exhibition of talent during the past

Leslie Mason Resigns from Trade Review

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the resignation of Leslie Mason from the vice-presidency and editorship of the Exhibitor's Trade Review. Mr. Mason has been associated with the Trade Review since 1916, when he resigned as managing editor of the Motion Picture News. In a statement just issued Mr. Mason expresses his thanks to the trade for the co-operation extended during his association with the Trade Review. He says:

"In retiring from the editorship of Exhibitor's Trade Review and as a member of the company, I want to take this opportunity of thanking the officials of every concern in the industry, the members of the National Association and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the rest of the exhibitors of the United States, for their friendly and generous co-operation.

Beecroft Returns with 40 Foreign Pictures

Importer Enthusiastic Over High Class of Product Gathered from European Countries

CHESTER BEECROFT, exporter and importer of pictures, is the latest film man to return from a buying trip in Europe. Mr. Beecroft is back with forty European pictures, which, at some date as yet undecided, will find their way to the screens of America. Twenty of this number will reach the United States in 1921, the others to follow at a later period.

These productions, some of them, according to Mr. Beecroft, are of a lavishness and magnitude which will surprise the trade. They were gathered in Italy, Germany, France, Norway and Sweden, all of them made since the war, and picked from a vast number of productions which Mr. Beecroft viewed while abroad.

"The importation of these productions," said Mr. Beecroft, "will be the most healthful thing which could happen for the welfare of the American screen. We have been supreme so long—so far superior to the rest of the world in picture making—that we, that is to say—the American producer, has sailed merrily on, content to grind out pictures in the same way that a manufacturer makes furniture. When our producers and directors realize that their foreign competitors are not by any means puny and helpless contenders in the race for screen artistry, they themselves are going to put forth a greater effort.

"The pictures I purchased abroad are, I believe, the cream of the European output. From Germany I picked five pictures out of a hundred. France, Scandanavia, and Italy have contributed some productions which I believe, have never been equalled except by D. W. Griffith in this country. I am willing to admit that the majority of foreign-made pictures are inferior in matters of direction and technical detail, but all foreign directors are not inferior. And some of the continental actors are nothing short of marvelous. Their photography is above ours. And, because of the cheapness of 'extras,' in Italy, for instance, huge crowds can be brought before the camera.

"Our producers must realize that they have worthy competitors. They must understand that foreign producers are striving with every ounce of energy to find a place for their product in this country. They are making an earnest, serious bid for a world market."

Mr. Beecroft is particularly enthusiastic over a picture entitled "Napoleon," which he purchased in France. He describes this as the most ambitious production which that country has ever attempted. With the permission of the French Government the palace of Versailles and Fontainbleu, places which played a prominent part in the life of the great Frenchman, were used, with the result that sets were obtained which could never be duplicated in any studio. The picture was made by Saffi, one of the largest French film interests.

The five German-made pictures feature Leah Mara, a Russian actress. The largest production is "Duke du Reichstadt," a story based on the life of the younger Napoleon. Mr. Beecroft states that this will be one of the most sensational foreign pictures ever to reach America. Another production is "Anna Karanina," based on the story by Leo Tolstoi. The stories of none of the German pictures are laid in that country.

What Mr. Beecroft describes as bigger than "Cabiria" or "Quo Vadis" was purchased in Italy. It is entitled "The Fall of Rome" and is a huge spectacular production.

Six pictures were purchased in Copenhagen. One of these is an adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Our Mutual Friend," and is twelve reels in length. Another is founded on the old legend of "The Flying Dutchman."

Mr. Beecroft is not optimistic for the future of the American export field until the rate of exchange improves. Other reasons for the decline of the export trade, he states, are the oversupply of pictures, and the local pride, especially in England, where there is great feeling against "the American invasion."

Mr. Beecroft has as yet made no arrangements for the release of the pictures which he has purchased for this country.

two years when abnormal demand for entertainment made the public swallow anything in the line of motion picture productions. The time is here, however, when the exhibitor will need the best that can be produced to keep his house crowded.

"If foreign productions can have the effect of speeding 'established' favorites up to their best on every production they turn out there are very few foreign films that can stand the competition. Anything that will keep the Americans keyed up to their best is going to be a help to the American exhibitor and a prohibition against the foreign film that may accomplish this result would be a direct attack upon the exhibitor.

"Let the foreign film come in unhindered. It can never surpass the American film at its best but it can have the result of giving an exhibitor a basis for demanding the best from the American producer."

Advertising Ass'n Plans Series of Discussions

The Pan American Advertising Association, which is a component part of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, is planning a series of winter luncheons at which speakers of recognized authority in various phases of the advertising field will address the members present upon topics of interest. The addresses are to be informal in character and are to be followed by general discussions on the part of those present. The association has appointed Arthur J. Lang as its executive-secretary. Mr. Lang is well known in motion-picture circles through his long association with the Nicholas Power Company. He has traveled extensively in Latin America during the past ten years and has acquired a thorough knowledge of the merchandising and advertising practices of that part of the world.

The first luncheon will be held during the last week in January. The "keynote" for this session's discussion will be: "Advertising is the militant arm of foreign trade." The luncheons will start at 12:30 and terminate promptly at 2. Each principal speaker will be limited to fifteen minutes. In the discussion following, no participant will be allowed to hold the floor for more than five minutes.

Stoll Gets Off to a Good Start

Verdict on Its First Release Generally Favorable

IN another part of this issue the Stoll Film Corporation of America makes its initial use of a colored insert as an advertising medium. While the officials of the company have been tempted during the preceding six weeks to employ this form of exploitation they decided to wait until they would be able to set before the exhibitors of the country the verdict of the trade press reviewers on the first two releases and also coincident with the opening of their program on January 2.

As to "Squandered Lives," an adaptation from Cosmo Hamilton's "Duke's Son," and "Mr. Wu," taken from the story of H. M. Vernon and Harold Owen, that verdict is now in. The critical opinions of the reviewers have been generally favorable and have confirmed the expectations of Stoll executives. From the many the company has selected four, two of each of the pictures named.

No attempt has been made to extract from these opinions only the "Sweet" parts or to select those phrases or portions of phrases which disconnected from the context frequently have an effect radically different from that intended by the writer. The reviews are printed verbatim—in fact, with one exception they are reproduced photographically. The exhibitor will have the opportunity of reading the "knocks" as well as the "boosts."

The sales forces of Stoll, which are operating from thirty-three Pathe exchanges, now have been in the field nearly a month. That these managers and salesmen have received substantial encouragement from exhibitors in their territories is attested by the reports being received by General Manager Ralph Proctor.

"The word that comes to us from our branch managers uniformly indicates what I have always claimed that the spirit of fair play is just as strong among the exhibitors of this country as it is among those in England," declared Mr. Proctor. "The former are accepting English pictures just as readily as American subjects are received in England. They are displaying a spirit of absolute reciprocity. The bookings have been not only beyond our anticipations; they have been a revelation.

"That the American market is as cosmopolitan as is any other in the world is proved by the reception accorded 'Passion,' a European-made subject, at the Capitol in this city. It may have remained for Samuel L. Rothafel to demonstrate this fact as he has demonstrated other things in a showman way before, but there can be no question he has proved there is always room in this country for a picture made outside the boundaries of the United States when the production is a worthy one.

"'Passion' is not only a subject made in another country, but it is what we have in this country characterized and frequently stigmatized as a costume picture Mr. Rothafel has shown that a costume production, if the story is 'there,' will go and go big. I am bearing so heavily on this phase of this particular question because Stoll will release at the end of January 'The Tavern Knight,' adapted from the book by Rafael Sabatini, a picture I am anxious for all exhibitors, first run as well as others, to examine critically. I believe they will find in its unusual exteriors and even remarkable interiors something out of the ordinary. And these factors are entirely subordinated to the love and adventure elements of the story.

"So you may understand why it is we feel here the American exhibitor will continue to accept pictures regardless of their nativity so long as they are good. And it is because of this open-minded spirit encountered by our sales force that the production chiefs of the Stoll company abroad have determined materially to expand their picture making activities."

Educational Releases at Big Houses

"The One Best Pet," fifth of the Chester Comedies featuring Snooky, the Humanzee, is given a prominent place on the holiday bill at the Rivoli theatre. Following the policy unbroken since the showing of the first of the series, this picture will be shown at the Rialto the week following. "The One Best Pet" is said to include a number of thrills, including Snooky's rescue of the baby from a church steeple, to which it is carried by toy balloons.

At the Brooklyn Strand this week Johnny Hines is appearing in "Torchy Turns Cupid," fifth of the two-reel comedies made from the stories by Sewell Ford. Agnes Martin, a Broadway favorite, makes her film debut in this picture.

"Lots—a Yodel," an unusual Chester Outing picture of the Swiss Alps, is on the program at the Strand.

William DeMille is expected to start on a new production for Paramount written by Edward Knoblock.

William D. Taylor will be working on Elsie Ferguson's starring vehicle—his production of Arnold Bennett's "Sacred and Profane Love."

Ethel Clayton will have started "Sham" under the direction of Thomas Heffron, adapted from the play by Elmer Harris and Geraldine Bonner.

George Melford will have begun "The Money Master" with Dorothy Dalton as star, supported by James Kirkwood and a superlative cast. This is from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel.

In February Sam Wood will begin upon the Elinor Glyn story in which Gloria Swanson is to star, and which has been tentatively titled "The Sheltered Daughter."

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is also scheduled to start in February on "Three Miles Out" by Frank Condon with James Cruze as director.

Big Chicago Houses' Bill "Torchy" Same Week

According to Educational Films Corporation, a greater exhibitor interest in Torchy comedies is being shown than in any other series on the market. The New York office declares that every week sees a number of important first run theatres added to the list showing the pictures made from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines.

An unusual incident is reported from Chicago where Balaban and Katz's Central Park theatre showed "Torchy in High," after it had already been shown in the downtown district. During the same week the Randolph theatre was showing "Torchy's Millions."

It was a regular Educational comedy week in Chicago for the Riviera, the other Balaban and Katz house had "A Homespun Hero," a Christie; and Barbee's Loop, the latest Chester, "A Tray Full of Trouble."

Albright's Lobby on "Kismet"

Butte Exhibitor Gives Skinner Picture Novel Exploitation

ON THE opposite page is shown a cut of a lobby display for "Kismet," the work of H. A. Albright, manager of the American theater, Butte, Mont., old-time friend of the NEWS, and author of many a clever idea in exploitation that has found its way to the printed page of the Service Bureau.

Ordinarily we let the "picture tell the story," when it comes to describing lobby displays, but Mr. Albright's creation is so unusual that some text will be required to do it justice.

From top to bottom the display measured 22 feet and 24 feet in width, bridging the sidewalk as shown in the cut. It took 1,500 square feet on compo board to build the display besides the necessary framework. The entire display was done in brilliant gold bronze, except the imitation stone work, which was natural color. People were compelled to see the display—to absorb it. While walking under it or through it, they were confronted by photographs from the picture and advertising about it on every side.

Mr. Albright did not stop, however, with just a lobby. He began to advertise the display. A week before "Kismet" opened at the American, Mr. Albright started telling about the big front he was going to build for the film, not only to individuals, but to the newspapers. Building plans were drawn and run in the papers.

After the display was completed that also was played up in the papers as a real news story with cut to illustrate what had been done.

How much the lobby display cost Mr. Albright we do not know. Probably so much that a good many managers in the smaller cities would not be justified in going to the expense, but for the week-run house, a "Kismet" display just exactly like that used during the American's run with news stories just as Mr. Albright put them over, will be a mighty good investment. Take Mr. Albright's and our word for it.

The result of Mr. Albright's efforts in dollars and cents did considerable more than provide Christmas money even in these times of high priced cigars and other Yuletide necessities.

Hyman's Christmas Week Bill

Arranging an all-Christmas bill for the holiday week despite the fact that the feature, "The Truth About Husbands," had nothing in keeping with the yuletide spirit, was the task the Brooklyn Strand theatre met with semi-religious and Christmas music and short film novelties of a Christmas trend.

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman divided a special Christmas overture number in half, the Strand Symphony Orchestra holding the spot for the first part and Strand Choristers the second. The latter group sang Christmas carols, notably "Silent Night" and "Come All Ye Faithful," with the effect of the music coming from inside a church edifice. The audience got a tiny glimpse of choristers inside a church.

Hyman gave a greeting to Strand fans through the use of a short film which revealed the latest inventions in mechanical Christmas toys and which ended with a "white" Christmas scene and the usual greeting.

Another effective use of Christmas music was the utilization of the violins in the orchestra for the playing of Handel's "Largo." A Christmas delight for the children was "The Waltzing Doll," a novelty in which Mlle. Sylvia, looking for all the world like a doll taken off a Christmas tree, danced. In this same number Kathryn James, contralto, sang Stout's "Lullaby." The set was an interior with a fireplace, mellow lights, etc.

Another touch of Christmas serious music was the group presentation of Gounod's "Ave Maria," by Grace Bernadette, soprano; Grace Mergelin, harpist, and A. Deubrille, violinist. As a little contrast Mr. Hyman had a group of soloists attired in Irish peasant costume in an emerald green scenic set sing "Thine Alone," from "Eileen," and "The Kerry Dance."

Crandall's "Amateur Night"

Washington Exhibitor Revives an Old Exploitation Idea With Great Results

ANY picture is first-run as long as you haven't seen it. By the same token, any theatrical innovation is a novelty as long as the clientele of the house presenting it perceives nothing time-worn in its operation. So it is that Crandall's York theatre in Washington, D. C., has recently smashed all attendance records by the revival of "amateur night."

The York is the newest of the seven Washington theatres owned by Harry M. Crandall and is located in a growing section of the city which has never before boasted of a theatre of the first class. The innovations to which theatregoers of an older and more metropolitan neighborhood are accustomed therefore strike a new note in entertainment value in the vicinity from which the York draws its patronage. Having these thoughts in mind, Nat Glasser, manager of the York, hit upon the notion of the local "amateur night," which he had conducted with success in other houses.

The first amateur contest at the York was held on Friday night, December 10th. With no further announcements than could be circulated by means of slides and one-sheets posted in front of the theatre, the section of the national capital in which the theatre is situated responded with a list of entrants that numbered almost fifty. Eight acts were selected for the first contest, and long before time for the contest to begin the York's seating capacity of 1,000 was exhausted and crowds packed the promenades, lobby and sidewalk space for a block in each direction from the entrance of the theatre at Georgia Avenue and Quebec Street. The attendance was even greater than that which greeted the opening of the house.

Among the contestants for the first, second and third prizes of $10, $5 and $2.50, respectively, the rivalry was keen but entirely good natured. Singing, dancing, musical acts, sidewalk dialogue in blackface and other forms of histrionic endeavor afforded a varied and amusing program.

Allow Audience to Pick Shows

Decision by popular vote of the patrons on what pictures to book is one of the features of the policy of the Kinema theatre, Scotia, California, which opened recently. Scotia, a town of 100 population, is situated in the Northern part of the state. The patrons are mostly lumber jacks and employes of a lumber mill at that place, and the lumber company is interested in the show house, which is managed by civic organizations and run for the benefit of the lumber company employes. Bookings from the Educational Film exchange in San Francisco are frequent. The Christie, Mermaid and Torchy comedies seem to be very popular with the patrons. G. H. Nutter is manager.

Tompkins' Earthbound Stunt

Novel Lobby Display Gets Attention At Liberty Theatre, Colorado Springs

A PARTICULARLY extensive publicity campaign was used by J. E. Tompkins, manager of the Liberty theatre, Colorado Springs, Col., in exploiting "Earthbound."

The chief exploitation stunt was a simple but unusual lobby display. In front of the ticket booth was a large revolving globe, showing the continents and oceans of the earth. The globe was constructed of wire frame covered with heavy cloth. A mechanical device to keep it revolving was obtained at a cost of $25.

As the globe revolved the passers-by could read the following three signs: 1. "Earthbound." No God, No Sin. 2. "Earthbound." No Future Life. 3. "Earthbound" Now Playing. Two large flood lights placed at the extreme right and left of the lobby, underneath the canopy, were focused so as to direct an abundance of light upon the revolving earth.

The panels on the left and right walls were painted to represent the heavens and the stellar constellations, with blue background. The lobby cards carried the same suggestion of the blue sky with white stars; scenes from the picture were mounted among the stars on these cards. Aside from the flood lights focused upon the globe, all of the lobby lights were a dark blue. The effect of the lighting was most striking and attracted a great deal of attention. The display was designed by Manager Tompkins and his staff artist.

A week in advance of the showing, heralds, window cards, throwaways and billboards announced the coming of "Earthbound." A special newspaper advertising campaign was conducted. A private showing of "Earthbound" had been held in Colorado Springs several weeks in advance of the booking, to which clergymen, city officials and others to whom the theme of the picture would especially appeal were invited.

Liberty, Portland, Ore., Presents Christmas Numbers

The Liberty theatre of Portland, Ore., as in former years presented a Christmas prologue, but unlike the majority of its specialty numbers usually produced as an atmospheric setting, this year's creation had no relation to the screen offering, "Curtain," being instead entirely symbolical of the Yuletide.

Three scenes were included in the one prologue. The house is entirely dark at the offset of the prologue, which had for its introduction a set Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty theatre, himself designed. This set had a holly wreath exactly 15 feet in diameter and crowned with a huge red ribbon in the center of the stage. On either side of it, gigantic bayberry candles burned. Suddenly words explanatory of the scene which follow appeared in the space left open within the holly wreath. The origin of Christmas Day and a brief reminder of the three wise men as they followed the Star of Bethlehem to the Saviour's birthplace constituted the first explanation which preceded the scene described appearing within the holly wreath as the words disappeared into blackness.

Clothed in the garb of ancient Palestine, the three wise men, still pointing to the star they have followed, were then seen in the distance. Gradually as they approached the front of the scene they commenced singing the familiar paean, "And in the Morn a Christ Is Risen." The stage, or rather that part of it framed by the holly wreath, went into darkness again at the end of their anthem.

Typical of what the world regards as ideal Christmas weather was the scene which follows. Hills of glistening snow and ice and three merry sportsmen enjoying winter sports were shown. A song interpretative of the scene was given. Three cloister choristers were the center of the third and last scene, which, after several loved Christmas carols were sung, concluded the prologue.

Here is Harold B. Franklin's Christmas stage setting, part of an elaborate Yuletide prologue staged at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, as described in the story appearing below

Franklin Presents His Christmas Numbers

Cut Above and Story Following Give Details of Shea's Hippodrome Holiday Week Show

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, never allows a national holiday or other occasion in which the city, state or country is interested to pass without observing the event with appropriate pictorial setting and house decoration. It is into the Christmas season, however, that Mr. Franklin throws the greatest effort. Last week the big Buffalo house fairly bubbled over with Christmas atmosphere, which began atop the marque, filled the resplendent lobby and auditorium and ended in a blaze of glory in the magnificent stage setting.

The top of the marque was literally covered with green garlands suspended between fantastic forms, such as stars, moons, and other designs, all of which were illuminated with vari-colored incandescent bulbs. Evergreens in strands were also suspended around the edge of the cornice of the marque, with lighted stars interspersed.

Entering the lobby, one's attention was immediately drawn to a large Xmas tree placed at the side of the escalator entrance. This tree was brilliantly decorated and illuminated. Evergreens were draped over all the lobby frames and the clusters in the ceiling. From these clusters strands of red and green leaves were carried to the tops of columns at the sides of the lobby. The effect of this lobby and marque decoration was to immediately fill one with the spirit of the Yuletide season things to come on the inside of the theatre.

This expectation was realized. The inside of the Hippodrome was also lavishly decorated with red and green wreaths and strands, with artificial snow covering the tops of the wreaths. The stage setting, however, was the chef d'oeuvre, the pièce de resistance of the decorative theme, and no Buffalo youngster who saw the Hippodrome stage set will ever again venture the statement that there is not a Santa Claus. In introducing the settings, the stage was darkened, and as the big symphony orchestra began to play Romberg's "Toy Symphony," with all the effects, a soft blue light was thrown on the orchestra. As the overture proceeded, the two small settings at each side of the central one were unveiled. One depicted an evening in the city and the other a night in the country. At the climax of the symphonic picture the central picture was unveiled. Exclamations of juvenile delight greeted the largest Christmas tree in Buffalo standing out in the foreground with a little village nestling in the rear. Across the sky came old Santa Claus and his reindeer train. When the curtains were drawn on this set, the tree was illuminated slowly, different colors being switched on at intervals. Flood lamps then covered the whole with vari-colored lights. Falling over the entire set was Franklin-manufactured snow. With the aid of a trusty stage hand, Santa made his journey across the sky safely. He and his outfit were suspended on a wire. The figures were cut out of beaver board.

All Buffalo talked about the Hippodrome Christmas decorations and Mr. Franklin, contrary to usual customs, kept the settings on the stage the second week, changing the musical accompaniment to Haydn's "Children's Symphony," a composition also calling for the use of numerous toy effects.

These "atmospheric" stage pictures which Mr. Franklin has worked up to unusual excellence are always an important part of the Hippodrome program and do much toward putting the audience in a receptive mood for the feature which follows.

Capitol's Yule Tide Presentations

ONE of the Christmas specialty numbers at the New York Capitol this week is staged under the title of "Christmas Fantasy."

It opens with a very beautiful full stage painting of the Saviour, the Virgin Mary, the Wise Men, etc., done in subdued colors, shown and the Russian Cathedral Choir singing back of the canvas.

At the close of the vocal number, an appropriate Christmas composition, what was supposed to have been the painting referred to, is disclosed to have been a transparency through which the picture was shown, by the removal of the sheet.

The original is placed several feet back of the transparency drop with the Cathedral Choir grouped at one side of the stage between the two. The Choir renders other Yuletide songs after being presented in person to the audience, assisted by Bertram Peacock.

Quaker City Has New Picture House

Another new theatre was added to Philadelphia's six hundred picture palaces on Thanksgiving Day, when the Carman, at Germantown Avenue and Hilton Street threw open its doors. The Carman is modern, attractive in appearance and it devised a number of stunts to attract patrons. One of these was to offer a prize of ten dollars to the person who could guess closest the total number of admissions on the opening day.

"Half a Chance" was the feature of the occasion, being shown for the first time in Philadelphia. The Pathe News filmed the crowd with the aid of flares, in the evening, to the great delight of the people there.

Here is another "Shipwrecked Among the Cannibals" lobby display. It was used by the Ansonia theatre, Butte, Mont.

Majestic Ushers Get New Costumes

An atmosphere suggestive of the Orient, colorful and pleasing, has been given the Majestic theatre of Portland, Ore., by what the girls call "Chinee" costumes for the ushers of that house.

Without exception the costumes are the most lavish ever boasted by any Oregon theatre, for they are entirely made of heavy silk materials. J. J. Parker, half owner with Jensen and Von Herberg, obtained the eight suits through a huge Chinese importing house while on a recent trip to San Francisco. The uniforms were made in China and conform in every respect to the usual clothing worn by almond eyed, dainty princsses of China.

Gets Streamer Across Top of Page One

A full page streamer across the top column of the front page of a newspaper for a motion picture is so unusual that when it occurs it deserves comment. When "Humoresque" played at the La Salle theatre, La Salle, Ill., Dan Roche, exploitation representative at the Chicago Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, got in touch with the editor of the La Salle Daily Post. The result of his salesmanship was that the day the picture opened the Post ran a seven-column streamer head across the top of the front page with the one word "Humoresque." The extreme right hand column followed up with the story of the picture.

How Fischer Evaded a City Ordinance

Tiny strips of linoleum, planted on the sidewalks of La Salle, Ill., had the effect of evading an obnoxious city ordinance and proved an unusual bit of exploitation when "The Right to Love" played at the La Salle theatre in that city. Manager Fischer and Dan Roche, exploitation representative from the Chicago exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation cooperated on the exploitation and it was Roche's idea that used the sidewalk as a handy medium for spreading the message of "The Right to Love." Under an old time city ordinance, in some ways a dead letter, the stencilling of signs, letters or any advertising material on the pavement was prohibited. Roche was passing a furniture store when the strips of linoleum in the window brought the inspiration. He purchased a dozen of these, cut to 2 by 3 feet, painted the words "You Have the Right to Love" on all and spread them on the nearest street corners.

'Frisco Strand Stirs City with Want Ad.

There is no law on the statute books to prevent the sale of a white child in the United States, probation officers and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children told the San Francisco district attorney, who was wroth when the whole city was stirred last week by want ads in the newspapers which read:

"A child for sale; age 4 years; excellent parentage; excellent health and charming. Reason for sale, High Cost of Living. For particulars, apply Box 764 The Call."

The advertisement, which caused widespread comment throughout the city when the newspapers all took up the sale in their news columns and even editorially was prepared by Mervyn W. Jackson, director of publicity of the Strand theatre, as his first step in exploiting "A Child for Sale," which is booked as the feature at that theatre, week of December 19.

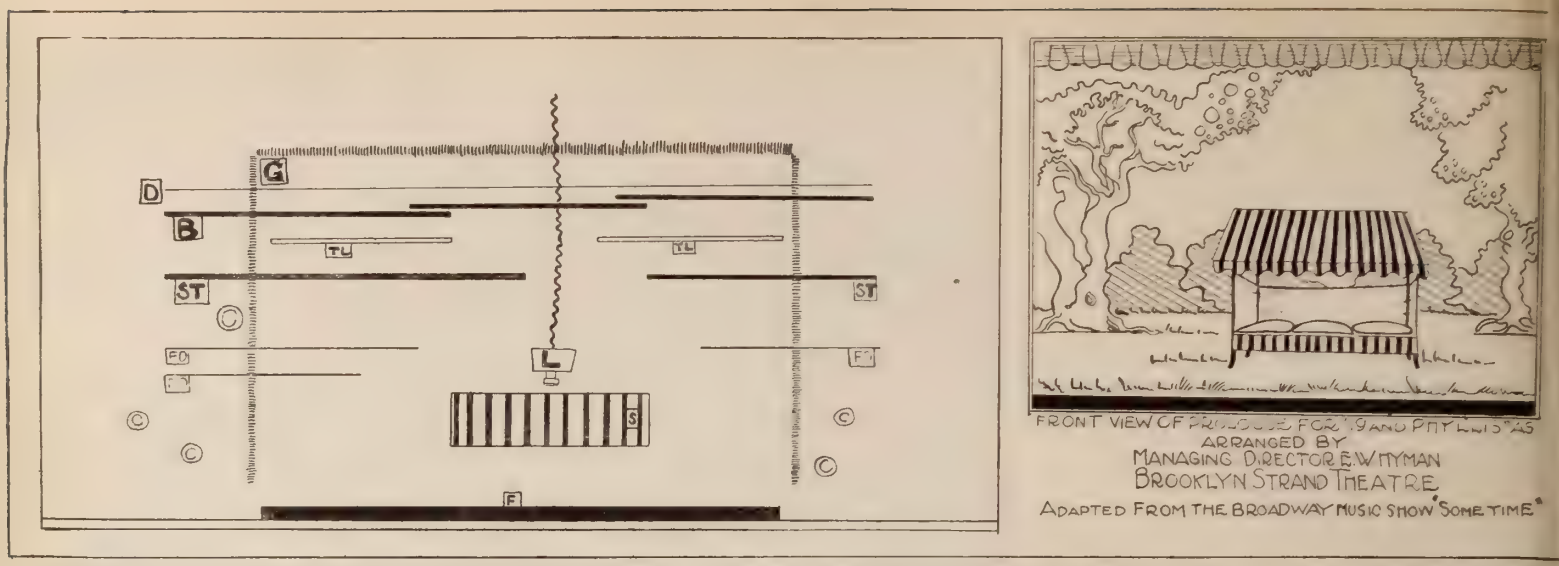
New York Strand Presenting Big Holiday Bill

The holiday idea is being carried out to the fullest extent at the New York Strand this week, where Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett has prepared a program that radiates a joyous atmosphere that is synonymous with the Christmas-New Year period. The overture, "Yuletide Tone Poem," is compiled with the aid of four different compositions; starting with "Stars on the Mountain," and including "Round the Christmas Tree," "Suite Villageoise" and "Adeste Fidelis." Upon the beginning of the fourth composition, the curtains on the upper stage parted, showing the star of Bethlehem looming in the distance. Nearing the close, the sky slowly became speckled with stars and the Bethlehem rays became deeper. The orchestra had meanwhile finished its number and that concludes the overture. The side panels of the orchestra stage were mounted with a huge toy soldier on each side, colored spots being played on both. On each side of the footlight exits miniature Christmas trees were illuminated. Then, with the Strand Topical Review and the Chester scenic as a preliminary, "A Yuletide Frolic," in four scenes, revealed itself as the curtains parted again on the upper stage.

Scene 1 of the "Frolic" was "Toyland," an elaborate painted set in which Joseph Martel as Santa Claus takes the audience through his domain, and shows Estelle Carey, soprano, in a box dressed as a doll. He brings Miss Carey forth and she sings, "A Doll's Wooing," and is led back to her place in the box. In song, Santa Claus tells of Jack-in-the-box, whereupon the lids of four boxes in the center of the stage fly open and the Strand Male Quartette is seen in Jumping-Jack costume. They sing "The Drum," and as each, beginning with the tenor and finishing with the bass, sings his final note, he falls back into the box. Scene 2 is an improvised film novelty, showing Santa Claus loading his sleigh, traversing the continent and entering a chimney of an American home. In Scene 3, which shows a beautifully painted room with candle lighted windows and four stockings hanging up at the fireplace, Santa Claus enters from the fireplace and apparently begins filling them. As he fills each stocking with a supposed Jack-in-the-box a head of a member of the quartette appears simultaneously. They then sing their numbers, finishing with "Holy Light," which closes that scene. The fourth scene shows a church entrance at night with the falling snow and Estelle Carey, attired in the white gown of a nun, sings "In a Manger Lowly." As the scene fades out the curtains are drawn, ending the "Frolic."

All settings were especially painted for this occasion by Gates and Morange, and the "Frolic" is probably the largest "production" ever presented on the stage of the Mark Strand, New York,

Capitol Has Prologue for Kennedy Feature



AS a prologue for "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," the feature picture at the New York Capitol theatre this week, S. L. Rothapfel is presenting a specially engaged jazz band, Mlle. Gambarelli and the Capitol ballet corps in a musical and dancing number.

The number opens with "jazz" music by the band with Mlle. Gambarelli and her company giving original dances.

Line drawing for a prologue being staged this week by Edward L. Hyman, manager of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, for "19 and Phyllis" and fully explained by the accompanying text

Another Complete Prologue Manuscript

Edward L. Hyman's Introductory Number for "19 and Phyllis" Fully Explained

THE two diagrams above show how Managing Director Hyman staged his prologue for "19 and Phyllis," which played at the Brooklyn Strand.

Seated in the striped awning hammock, indicated in center stage, a tenor and soprano sang the duet from "Sometime," the Broadway musical show.

At the close of the song, the tenor starts to embrace the soprano but very tactfully pulls down a white shade hidden under the flap of the awning. As he pulls the shade all the lights come down and the 500-Watt lamp (see figure L on drawing) is switched on from back stage, revealing the two singers in silhouette.

This scene is laid in a garden. On right stage and left stage was placed a set tree. Upstage was lined with set bushes. Down center stage, almost on top of the footlights, the awning hammock was set.

For theatres accustomed to using prologues, Hyman's novel number will probably prove to be the same sensation it was at the Brooklyn Strand. The requirements for scenic effects are small, and although few houses are equipped with the Strand's costly rheostat, or dimming device, three or four calciums, and a spot from the booth, will enable any exhibitor to put this number on the program with the assurance that it will get the big reception it deserves.

The following list is the key to the diagram:

F—FOOTLIGHTS. Alternate bulbs in red and blue. At opening of curtains red bulbs are up. Near the middle of the duet, begin bringing down the reds; coming up with the blues.

L—500-Watt, white lamp. This is out until cue from orchestra leader. (This light goes on when white linen shade on hammock is being drawn by the male singer.)

C—CALCIUMS. Two on each side of stage. Right stage one calcium is in lemon and the other blue. Left stage one calcium is red and the other blue. Lemon and red calciums play until middle of selection, then bring them down, opening up slowly with the blues. This effect is heightened by a calcium in light green playing on set bushes upstage.

TL—TO LIGHTS. Alternate bulbs in red and blue, switch these with the footlights.

Here is the key to the settings with a short description of the pieces:

S—HAMMOCK SWING. Striped awning swing situated center stage. Male singer places one arm around back of swing so as not to actually embrace the soprano. White curtain is concealed under flap of awning on hammock nearest audience. At closing passage of song male singer pulls down curtain and orchestra leader buzzes electrician to turn the juice on the 500 watt lamp placed in back of the swing.

B—BUSHES. These are the set pieces that will give the garden effect. Try and get set of regular hedges. If these aren't obtainable get three small potted trees.

D—DROP. Sky drop. You can use anything but a drop with buildings painted on it.

G—GREEN GRASS RUG. Try and cover as much of the stage floor as possible with the grass rug.

That's a complete list of everything that was used by Mr. Hyman, and the only thing omitted is the light rose spot on the singers, worked from the booth. Hyman used two spots. Opening with the red, he irised the red at the time the blue came up. The blue spot flooded the stage, as the footlights, and toplights came up. All lights are practically out, at close of song, to get the best possible effects with the silhouette on the hammock shade.

Towanda Pa. Theatre to Be Completely Remodeled

The Keystone opera house of Towanda, Pa., an upstairs theater success fully operated by William Woodin for a number of years, is to be entirely remodeled shortly so that virtually it will be a new house. Associated with Mr. Woodin in the management of the Keystone is Mrs. Woodin. Following an annual custom the Keystone management was host to a theater full of Towanda youngsters on Christmas morning.

Riesenfeld Puts on Big Yuletide Show

Original Christmas Prologue Presented at New York, Rivoli

A CHRISTMAS fantasy which combines all the beauties of the opera ballet, a fine singing chorus and a most original bit of motion picture work is Hugo Riesenfeld's contribution to the permanent field of Christmas entertainment at the Rivoli theatre, New York, this week.

The Rivoli orchestra plays as an overture von Suppe's "Jolly Robbers," to be followed by a "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon, whereupon the larger of the two holiday specialty numbers on the Rivoli bill is presented under the title of "Christmas Fantasy."

The drapes part, revealing a setting worthy of a Broadway dramatic hit. There was a church of rich Gothic design and near it a house of simple Colonial construction. In the distance one saw the fields. A clear sky showed its stars.

As the curtains parted an unseen chorus of thirty voices was singing "Break Forth, Oh Beauteous," a chorale by John Sebastian Bach. The singers were behind the scenes, but the effect, because of the proper centering of lighting effects, was as if a full congregation were singing in the church. An old Christmas carol followed and then came "Christmas Eve," from Jules Massenet's opera, "Werther." All this time the chorus remained hidden, while the audience saw nothing but the lighted church.

The fourth number, "Oh, Sanctissimus," among the most famous bits of church music, brought the singers into view. The church doors opened and the worshipers marched out, men, women and children, singing the carol. As they disappeared around the bend of the lane the lights in the house came up and revealed children at play dressing a Christmas tree and dancing around it. As they played they sang "Mary Had a Little Lamb," "Humpty Dumpty," and other children's bits. The choice of children instead of trained voices for this little incident added immensely to the effect of the whole presentation.

Two ragged little urchins, played by Grace Eastman and Maria Lamor, made their way to the happily lighted window while the merriment was going on and gazed in longingly. It was cold and uncomfortable for the two in their rags and it was snowing. One of the happier children opened a window and threw out something, which was eagerly seized by the little dancers, who wandered over to the church steps, and, hugged in each other's arms, fell asleep in the open.

Their first moments of drowsiness were made pleasant by the chorus, which sang again Massenet's "Christmas Eve" and then Haydn's "Silent Night." As the last echoes of this anthem died out the most brilliant bit of the whole Fantasy appeared. Where fields and sky had been a moment before a screen appeared, but a screen so constructed that it seemed less like a screen than anything that has ever before been used for projection purposes in a theatre. It looked like a frame for a dream, which is exactly what Mr. Reisenfeld intended.

On this screen appeared the dream of the two hungry urchins. They saw themselves at the Christmas dinner table, devouring drum sticks without the limitations placed upon children by polite society or manners. They wallowed in cranberry sauce, fruit and candy. More important than all, they had a mother, who beamed upon them. And just as the children could eat no more, their beautiful rag doll, prize package of their dream Christmas gifts, winked one eye at them and started to do stunts. It danced, turned somersaults and did everything except talk. The delighted screen children gazed at their wonderful screen doll with mouths wide open and eyes popping out—and suddenly the whole thing vanished—even the screen. The stage was dark for the twinkling of an eye and when the lights came up the audience beheld a living rag doll on the stage, doing, in a larger way, what the screen doll had been doing. The living dancer was Evelyn MacVay. Her dance, entitled "Raggedy Ann," was from an original dance score by Hugo Riesenfeld.

Another bit of darkness and the "Raggedy Ann" dancer disappeared, while the urchins still slept on the church steps. An angel of light wanders onto the stage and holds her torch of love over the younsters, while from the distance one hears the strains of the chorale, the finale of the last act of Massenet's 'Werther." Then the angel vanishes and Santa Claus, himself, appears with gifts. The youngsters come out of their dream, seize their presents and dance around the stout old gentleman. As one jumps onto the sled, the other seizes the reins and all three, children and Santa Claus, disappear, while from the distance one hears the words of "Noel" "Hail Christmas in Here."

It is almost impossible to give in words the effect of this unusual bit of work by Mr. Riesenfeld, who wrote the whole thing originally to entertain his young daughter.

Christmas Week at Grauman's, Los Angeles

All the joys of the glad Christmas week were symbolized in this big presentation by 50 people on the Million Dollar Stage.

The costly rouge drapery revealed two "kiddies" asleep. Toys became animated in song and dance by pretty juveniles, the city having been combed for the best talent.

Twenty-five beautiful usherettes, selected from the house force numbering forty-two, executed a novel drill, spelling out "We Wish You A Merry Christmas."

Ten choir singers of mixed voices, and clad in old English costumes, sang sweet carols.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

The Chicago office of Universal resumed the regular weekly trade showings of features and short subjects on December 22nd and from now on this will be a regular event in the projection room each Wednesday at one o'clock. Many exhibitors had requested that the practice of showing the pictures at a regular time be taken up again and a large crowd was present at the showing this week, at which Gladys Walton in "Risky Business" and "Two Kinds of Love," with a special cast, including Breezy Eason, were the pictures screened.

Mary Miles Minter stopped over in Chicago for a few hours on her way East last week. She is planning to spend a month or more in and around New York and would like while there, she stated, to start work on a picture, but this will have to be decided after she arrives in New York.

Joe Friedman is back at his desk again after a week on Broadway, during which time he discussed future plans for Federated and also, it is reported, acquired some new pictures for Celebrated to release in this territory.

Mesco Pictures Corporation has completed the shooting of interiors for their feature, "Jesse James Under the Black Flag," at the Rothacker studios, and Manager Harvey Hoffman, Director Franklin B. Coates and the principals of the company have returned to Kansas City, where the cutting and titling of the picture will be completed.

"Dead Men Tell No Tales," the big Vitagraph special, is proving a remarkable box office attraction throughout the Chicago territory, according to Manager Tarbell, of Vitagraph's Chicago exchange. Plans are now being made for the release of "Black Beauty," which Mr. Tarbell believes will be one of the most successful pictures ever put out.

Each year Jones, Linick & Schaefer remember their employes from the topmost to the smallest as a reward for faithful service. This year their present was more substantial than at any time in the past. Every employee was given an insurance policy. The newer help will be given a policy calling for a death benefit of a thousand dollars, and this will range to twenty-five hundred dollars, according to length of service. On each succeeding Christmas these policies will be automatically increased by five hundred dollars provided continuous active service has been rendered during the year immediately preceding, until a maximum of five thousand dollars is attained.

Employees entering the service from now on will be insured for a thousand dollars upon completion of six months' employment. This will be increased next Christmas by five hundred dollars. In the event of death, Jones, Linick & Schaefer will act as trustee for the benefit of any employee's wife, child, father or other relative.

Should an employee become disabled so that he cannot perform his duties Jones, Linick & Schaefer will pay the maximum of his policy. In making his announcement Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, said: "The certificates are presented in appreciation of earnest and faithful service and an expression, in substantial form, of the value we place upon our employees' loyal co-operation."

Johnny Maple, of the Northwestern Film Corporation, Sheridan, Wyoming, spent the week in Chicago. He had with him the recently completed Indian feature picture and is making arrangements for the distribution of the series of five reelers to be put out by his company during 1921.

Adolph Powell, of the Rex theatre, brought joy to five hundred children and five hundred adults at the Northshore Tuberculosis Sanitarium, when he put on a complete free motion picture show for them on Christmas Eve at the institution.

A letter of Christmas greeting from Ralph B. Staub, the camera man who went north several months ago to secure pictures, brings the information that he has left Alaska for Los Angeles and thinks that the subjects he has shot should make a good picture. They include close-ups of caribou in numbers from one to five thousand, mountain sheep in the high mountains and rocks, bear pictures near Mt. McKinley and last, but not least, plenty of dog team pictures.

Balaban & Katz's magnificent new theatre, the "Tivoli," is being pushed to completion and it is planned to open this forty-five hundred seat house early in February. John Balaban will be manager and is already engaging the people for the house. Jesse Crawford, formerly organist of Grauman's Los Angeles theatre, and will be in charge of the big organ at the Tivoli.

Albert W. Hale, well known director and producer of photoplays, spent Friday and Saturday in Chicago, en route from Florida to the Mayo Brothers Hospital at Rochester, Minnesota. Mr. Hale is suffering from a painful illness and is going to the famous physicians to have a diagnosis of his case and possibly submit to an operation.

Messrs. Foster and Teeter are now offering patrons of their Buckingham theatre some of the finest music to be heard in Chicago. They have engaged Hugo Brumlik and his large symphony orchestra, beginning this week, to play overtures and the incidental music. Mr. Brumlik for several years has been in charge of the music and entertainment at the Terrace Gardens and Morrison Hotel and will have as his director and concert master Carlotta Steindal.

Manager Carl Harthill of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has returned from Kansas City where his company recently took over the business and assets of the Equitable Film Corporation. While in Kansas City Mr. Harthill installed G. L. Stiles as Kansas City manager for Reelcraft and arranged for the distribution of Reelcraft productions throughout that territory. Mr. Stiles has been manager of Reelcraft's Milwaukee office.

W. D. Russell of Russell-Greiver-Russell, is making a flying trip to Los Angeles in the interest of his company and while there will visit their coast studios and confer with his son, B. D. Russell, who has charge of production, as to future plans. It is rumored in film circles that Mr. Russell will return with contracts with two or three well-known stars in his grip.

Dorothy Phillips, her husband, Allen Holubar, and Al Kaufman, were in Chicago for a few hours last week on their way from the Coast to New York and made their headquarters at Max Goldstine's office in the Consumers Building. Mr. Holubar stated that he hoped to have the first showing of his latest picture, "Man, Woman, Marriage," at a Chicago movie house. It is a tremendous production and hundreds of mounted men and women are shown in a battle between the Amazons, led by Miss Phillips and the masculine soldiery. The main part of the story, however, is modern and up to date in every detail. Marshal Neilan and Blanche Sweet also passed through Chicago and went East with Mr. Holubar and Miss Phillips.

S. E. Schaffer, of S. E. Schaffer & Company, is making a trip to Pittsburgh and New York in the interest of his concern and expects to be back at his headquarters in the Film Exchange Building, 207 S. Wabash avenue, the first of next week.

Gollos Enterprises have just closed a deal with Ascher Brothers for the showing of the big special feature, "Whispering Devils" at the following theatres: Adelphi, Columbus, Cosmopolitan, Kenwood, Metropolitan, Oakland Square, Crown, Midway, Chateau, Calo, Commercial, Frolic, Lane Court, Milford, Peerless, Terminal, Forest Park, Palace and West Englewood. Special features in the way of one-three and six sheets, lobby displays and other advertising accessories are being provided by Gollos Enterprises who control the Illinois and Indiana rights to the production.

Three Chicago stars in one picture, "Dinty," which was shown at the Riviera this week, gave good material for publicity stories to put the picture over big at the popular north side theatre. The stars are, Tom Gallery, son of Captain Michael J. Gallery, a veteran Chicago police officer; Kathleen Morrison, who is known on the screen as Colleen Moore, and Pat O'Malley who hails from Ireland but is a citizen of the Windy City by adoption and a nephew of Superintendent Michael O'Malley of the second division, Chicago Post Office.

Thirty thousand kids, members of the Peter Rabbit Club, were the guests of forty-four Chicago theatres this week. Special features were arranged for at the various houses in addition to the regular programs and the big party was a bright feature of Christmas-New Year week for the youngsters.

Ascher Brothers have fixed January 6th as the opening date for their new Palace theatre at Peoria, one of the most beautiful houses in the central west. It will bring the number of houses in active operation under the Ascher banner to twenty-four and like the West Englewood theatre, which was scheduled to open in Chicago on December 30th, will offer Ascher's Unified Program including a feature picture, five acts of high-class vaudeville and special musical features. Charles Menzing has been transferred to Peoria to manage the Palace, having been manager of Ascher's Oak Park theatre for some time past. Harry Ascher and Mr. Menzing went to Peoria Monday to complete plans for the opening.

New Year's eve midnight shows promise to be popular this year in Chicago and many of the larger moving picture houses have arranged elaborate programs in addition to the regular picture features. In conjunction with the pictures Ascher Brothers will present elaborate cabaret reviews and report the Chateau theatre already sold out and only a few seats left at many other of their houses. From reports coming in from theatres in widely separated districts a record New Year's eve business is indicated.

The next luncheon of the Motion Picture Press Club will be held at the Stratford Hotel on January 7th.

Music and The Picture

Announcing the Early Plans of the First Motion Picture-Musical Conference

By Charles D. Isaacson

"WHAT can be done at a three-day session of musicians and motion picture men and women?"

This question has been propounded by a number people in all parts of the country, especially those who have been debating: "Is it worth while to go to this conference?"

Well, to tell the truth, it's so hard to squeeze all that ought to be done into three days that it's running over into an extra evening! And every minute of the time will be occupied by the visiting delegates in fruitful and significant discussion and action.

The basis upon which the First National Conference of Motion Picture and Musical Men is called, is expressed in the following "credo."

> The time has come for a concerted action on the part of the musical and motion picture interests for an alliance which will have for its aim the simplification of motion picture music; an alliance which will serve both musicians and motion picture interests for the mutual welfare of the industry and arts, an alliance which will further the movement to bring good music into the motion picture theatre as a means for the development of the highest type of picture patronage.
>
> The time has come for a definite move in this direction. The First National Conference will be important not only for what it accomplishes but for what it sets in motion and for the goal toward which it moves.
>
> The best way to make musicians understand the theatre needs and to make the theatre men get the most out of the musicians, is for both interests to know each other intimately and to make their plans in common.
>
> With this attitude the First National Conference of Motion Picture and Musical Interests is called.

At the present writing, over one hundred important individuals have indicated their intention to be at the conference, which as has been stated is being held at the Hotel Astor, New York City. The dates? January 24-25-26.

The extra evening is in the nature of a Prelude or a Prologue to the Convention, on the night of January 23rd, for those who can make their plans to get to New York by seven-thirty the day before the formal opening. This Prelude is in the nature of a great big Concert at De-Witt Clinton Hall, a regular Globe Concert (dedicated by The New York Globe to the Motion Picture Musical Conference. This Concert is a "Special Movie Night." It will be held before an audience of three thousand, who will listen to the virtues of the film theatre as a means of developing art—a medium for the bettering of American taste. The subject of the principal address will be "Behold the Picture Theatre: Patron of Art." The musical numbers will include the famous Oumansky Ballet, Emanuel Liszt, baritone; Amanda Brown, soprano; Erna Prelka, contralto; Hugo Riesenfeld and Nat W. Finston will speak. The visiting delegates will occupy the chairs of honor.)

Next week Mr. Isaacson will write a special story on the "Musical Aspects of 'Way Down East.'"

Of course the formal opening will not come until Monday morning, January 24th. At 10 A. M. sharp, the meeting will be called to order, in the big reception room of the Hotel Astor. The purposes of the conference will be tersely and emphatically announced. Immediately the organization of the new association: "The Association of Motion Picture and Musical Men" will be affected. There will be no loss of time, in fiddling about; everything will have been prepared in advance, for submission to the delegates. Such elections and committees as shall be needed, will be quickly carried over.

Then will come the presentation of the Music Tax Pact, which alone makes the first conference worth while. If this pact is acceptable to both sides in the music tax feud, it will settle an annoying problem of the industry. The Society of American Composers and Authors will present the pact, which, if acceptable, will be endorsed by the new organization, and the fight on that subject will be ended forever.

Important discussions will then occupy the first morning session. The dean of the picture-musicians, Samuel Rothapfel, will discuss the psychology of picture showmanship of music. It is but meet that the man who first saw the possibilities of music in pictures should analyze his vision and hopes at the outset of the conference. Then it is particularly seemly that the dean of American musical publicists, John C. Freund, should tell how the "Musical Fraternity Becomes the Ally of the Picture Theatre." Mr. Freund is the owner and editor of "Musical America" and "Music Trades," as well as other musical publications. When he speaks, his words reach every musician in America, every musical instrument and publication man. He has, moreover, two hundred newspaper correspondents throughout the country, who carry his words to their cities and towns. He represents the musical fraternity. The South will then speak through Maurice Barr, manager of the New Orleans theatre and special representative of the Saenger Amusement Company. He will tell of "Standardization of Music for the Films"—one of the big subjects of the conference. Ernest R. Voigt, head of the Boston Music Company, will show how it is essential that picture musicians must be specially trained. He has been investigating the subject, with discussions with musical schools and universities over the country. His findings are contained in "Picture Music and Musicians of the Future."

After a short adjournment will come the first "Exhibit" of the conference——and there will be many. In the opinion of the present writer, these exhibits as handled will be worth thousands of dollars to any theatre owner, and will prove to be the most valuable lesson any musician could get!

The delegates will assemble at the Capitol theatre, where there is arranged a special musical program. This will be followed by a analytical discussion of the music in its relation to the picture. Why was the music used? How was it found? How could it be adapted to the smaller theatre, etc. This discussion will be headed by Samuel Rothapfel, and will be seconded by Erno Rapee, the conductor of the orchestra of the Capitol theatre, who will show the relation of the orchestra to the show.

Think of it! A show in the Capitol, discussed in detail as to its meanings and relationship to other theatres! What is that worth?

After this discussion, Carl Joseph Briel will tell of "The Complete Music Score." Mr. Briel is probably the foremost film composer, and has had an opera produced by the Metropolitan Opera Company. Nat Finston, formerly conductor of the Capitol, has some important ideas on "The Grand Opera Film."

Then "The Cue Sheet." There's where one of the first big fights of the conference

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., has sent Carl von Hoffman, a traveller and photographer, on a trip to Asia Minor to gather more material for the Movie Chats and Kineto Reviews. Mr. von Hoffman sailed last week. He will be away for about six or eight months.

When Mr. von Hoffman completes his schedule in Asia Minor he will follow a route in Europe. Mr. Urban wants him to particularly secure some material in Spain, to round out certain portions of the Urban Library. Morocco and portions of Africa will also be visited for the benefit of the Library.

"Parish Priest" Seen on Stage in New York

While Herman J. Garfield is seeking to make arrangements whereby his screen version of the old Dan Bully vehicle, "The Parish Priest," which opened just twenty years ago this month and is still paying big royalties to its author, Daniel L. Hart, can enjoy a run on Broadway, the stage version is playing at a New York theatre. On this occasion "The Parish Priest" is being presented at the Yorkville theatre. Where the film version will be presented will depend upon what arrangements Mr. Garfield makes for a Broadway House as he is particularly anxious to find a theatre where the drama will be allowed to run without interruption as long as its popularity promises that it will run.

Stiles Gets Reelcraft Kansas City Post

G. Lawrence Stiles has been appointed to the position of manager for the new branch office and exchange of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, which was formally opened last week at 928 Main street, Kansas City, Mo., being transferred there from the Milwaukee Exchange of Reelcraft.

Mr. Stiles is well known in the picture industry, having entered through the position of Location Manager for the old Vitagraph Company in Brooklyn over twelve years ago.

District Manager Carl Harthill of Reelcraft has promoted Lou Anger, a salesman of the Indianapolis office, to the position vacated by Stiles, as manager of the Milwaukee exchange, in recognition of his past work on the selling force of Reelcraft.

"Hush" Premiere in Boston

Clara Kimball Young Picture Does Heavy Business at Park

THE New England territory has once more justified its reputation as being a Clara Kimball Young stronghold, according to Equity. Last week, the fifth Clara Kimball Young production, "Hush," whose author is Sada Cowen, responsible for "Why Change Your Wife?" as well, made its debut at the Park theatre and played to one of the most prosperous runs any production ever enjoyed at that house, reports from the company state.

Just one month ago, the fourth Young production, "Midchannel," played one week at two of Boston's first-run theatres simultaneously and filled both houses. This is said to be the first time any production had a simultaneous run in Boston and the test with "Midchannel" proved the strength of Miss Young.

The reason for Clara Kimball Young's popularity in the New England territory is declared to be due to the finesse and artistry of her pictures. Sumptuous scenery, lavish gowns, brilliant interior sets and extravagance of investiture have always appealed to Bostonians.

Sam Grand of the Federated Film Exchange of New England, the franchise-holder of the Young productions, is now capitalizing on the successful first-run of "Hush." The number of bookings demanded by his exhibitors is said to be exceeding all bounds. Immediately "Hush" terminated its run at the Park, Grand communicated its box-office record to all his exhibitors. Requests for booking dates followed fast, and Grand has ordered two extra prints from Equity to accommodate his exhibitors.

An extensive exploitation campaign is now being prepared by Equity for the benefit of "Hush" exhibitors, both large and small, which is said to be sensational, and which will shortly be announced to the trade, and sent in detailed form to all "Hush" franchise-holders.

Special to Increase Output

More Production Planned With Elimination of Exchange System

AN extensively increased production schedule for 1921 has been arranged for by the Special Pictures Corporation, announces that company, following the turning of their distribution over to the Federated Film Exchanges of America and the elimination of their own exchange system.

With the money that has formerly been used in maintaining their own distribution organization the Special Pictures, it is said, will be enabled to more than double production activities at their studios in Hollywood.

According to Louis W. Thompson, president of Special, the output of Comiclassics will be doubled. Instead of releasing one every two weeks there will be one release a week. Such stars as Ford Sterling, Neely Edwards, Charlotte Merriam, Stanley Laurel and Eddie Baker will be seen in the Comiclassics of which Reggie Morris will continue as director general.

Louise Fazenda will return from her nation-wide tour early in 1921, and all will be in readiness for her to start production within a week after her return. An internationally known comedy director has been engaged to handle her two-reelers, which are to be sponsored by the A. L. Hart productions, the producing unit that has been responsible for the Chester Conklin comedies.

"Dick" Burrud, creator of the Sunset-Burrud series of scenics will start on another expedition early in 1921, while the best part of the travel pictures secured during his "Tia Juana, Mexico to Nome, Alaska" jaunt are yet to be released.

Two two-reel western companies will be working at the Special Pictures studio, the Art Acord Company of which S. M. Piercy is president and the "Broncho Billy" company with G. M. Anderson at its head.

Lubin Reports Only 3 Territories Unsold

According to Bert Lubin, producer of "Honeymoon Ranch," the state right market is in excellent shape insofar as moderate priced productions are concerned. Lubin reports that there are now but three open territories on his Western state rights feature, this despite the fact that it is just two and a half months since he first offered territory on "Honeymoon Ranch" for sale.

No Propaganda in Fox-Fischer Production

It is announced by David C. Fischer, director of "In the Shadow of the Dome," the new Fox-Fischer Masterplays, Inc., eight-reel feature drama, that his latest production is not political propaganda in any sense of the word. The locale of the photoplay is Washington and the story deals with the social activities of our national law-makers and the intrigues of the House. However, Mr. Fischer's treatment of the play does not take sides in any of the great political issues of the day. Nor does the play criticize the method of law making as it is accomplished in Washington. It merely states the problem and shows how the well-meaning Congressman can overcome the efforts of insidious lobbies and create beneficent laws.

Alt and Howell a Team of Long Experience

Alexander Alt, who is co-starring with Helen Howell in two-reel comedies now being produced by the Union Film Company at Sherman, Cal., states that he and Director Al Martin are in receipt of many offers for the release of their comedy productions.

Both members of this comedy team have had a varied experience both on the stage and screen. Mr. Alt originally embarked on his screen career at the old Thanhauser Studios after a successful vaudeville tour throughout the country. Miss Howell has played opposite Smiling Bill Parsons, Flannigan and Edwards, Edwards and Fay and others. The two comedians have been playing together for some time.

"A Dog Gone Mix Up" Is Fourth Hallroom

"A Dog-Gone Mix-Up" is the title of the fourth of the new series Hallroom Boys Comedies, released by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York.

The comedy was directed by Herman C. Raymaker, under the supervision of Harry Cohn and is one of the greatest hazardous stunt comedies ever filmed, according to Jack Cohn who is now cutting and titling this release.

Polly Moran is the comedy feeder to Percy and Ferdie. Herman C. Raymaker, who directed this comedy, will be remembered for the comedies he produced for Keystone, Poppy, Hank Mann and Mack Sennett.

It's Now or Never, Says Eckels

1921 to Decide Fate of State Right Exchanges

A COMMUNICATION nothing short of an emphatic warning to State Right exchange men has just been issued by Eddy Eckels, general manager of the Independent Films Association.

Mr. Eckels' warning cautions the independent dealers against mistakes and missteps during the coming year, which he says will be the biggest year the independent market has ever known.

"This is the year that the independents are going to do either one of two things," says Mr. Eckels. "They will either build themselves an everlasting monument or else dig their own grave.

"It is the year of the State Right men's biggest opportunity," he continued. "If they watch their step the open market will be so everlastingly established in another twelve months that nothing can shake it.

"There are four main things I would warn the independent exchanges about, and the first of these is to strengthen themselves financially. They've got to play ball or quit—one of the two. The choice is theirs. But I'll say one thing definitely—it's going to take a bankroll to play the game the way it's got to be played in the next twelve months.

"It's going to take a bankroll to buy the sort of stuff the theatres will be wanting in greater and greater volume of bookings—and I'll touch on this subject again presently. It's going to take a bankroll to buy the quantity of film they'll have to have—because the pace is going to increase in swiftness.

"And it's going to take a bankroll so big that all drafts and C. O. D.'s may be met fully and promptly—because the money that goes into that channel is the money that will keep the lifeblood flowing into the veins of the producers who are just beginning to specialize on the independent market and turn out the kind of pictures that will make money for the State Right exchanges.

"That's why I shout at the top of my lungs at this time for the State Right exchanges that expect to keep pace with the unprecedented progress which 1921 will bring forth to strengthen themselves financially and then still further strengthen themselves.

"Another thing I'll warn the independents is that they must play clean ball now. This year is going to be a test in more ways than one—and one of them is dependability. The sharpshooters and the shysters will either play straight clean ball or get themselves eternally kicked out of the industry. Tricky dealings will not be tolerated—there has been too much trickiness in the program field. Show the exhibitors that you are square shooters and they'll meet you fifty-fifty. Put yourself in the sharpshooter class and prepare for a quick exit.

"Make all adjustments with record-breaking speed—and show up the program exchanges by contrast. Ship your films infallibly—and ship them in good condition. Keep your contracts—verbal or written—to the letter. Do not misrepresent. Do not gouge—quote rental prices that fit conditions—and nobody knows those conditions better than you, in each city, village and hamlet in your territory. Be fair and square. Play clean ball!

"I warned against misrepresentation. Here's another warning that I want to make as rigid as I can put into words: Don't buy junk!

"Let 1921 sound the death knell of this kind of stuff. Buy on the basis of quality and merit. Quit thinking of yourselves as the Cheap Johns of the industry. Go out and buy good pictures—you'll find them in demand. Moreover, you'll find them this year easier to get than ever before, because the producers are centering a good deal of attention on the independent market, and they'll continue it just as long as the independent market justifies their doing so.

"Remember this: You don't have to take somebody else's leavings this year unless you deliberately choose to do so.

"The selective privilege is yours. Exercise it!

"Watch your step and you've got the enemy licked and yourselves established with your feet on a rock."

Kremer Flays the Pessimists

Newspaper Article is Answered by Independent Man

VICTOR KREMER, president of the Victor Kremer Film Features, in a recent statement, takes vigorous exception to the article published in one of the New York dailies in which a general pessimistic outlook for the industry, was given.

The article in question dealt with the calamitous conditions allegedly prevailing at present in the motion picture industry. Picturing Los Angeles as a desert filled with an army of some 50,000 idle persons whose sole means of livelihood had been in connection with the camera world the article went on in its gloom filled style to prophesy almost the elimination of the third industry of the country and that men and women who had heretofore earned their living in this highly profitable line of endeavor must henceforth seek other avenues of income for their daily bread.

"That the article was inspired seems peradventure of any doubt," said Mr. Kremer, "but the motive back of the same is enigmatical. The general impression that I have gained is that strong Wall Street influences, for reasons that may be divined were responsible for the same.

"The rumor that a new powerful company, assuming trust proportions, was about to enter the field and that as a logical result the present 'Big Fellows' might suffer may have been the cause, or again for purposes of creating a bear market, worse than it has been to date in film stocks, may have been the reason for the article's publication, but be it as it may it remains that in the propaganda to create panic the author has overstepped himself through his extravagance of prophesy and his carelessness in the use of figures.

"To start with the wildest imagination would never permit of the idea that there were 50,000 persons engaged in the motion picture industry in Los Angeles.

"It would seem extravagant to say that one-third that number were actually employed there. Again, the picture drawn of sheriff sales of studios, auctioneer signs and cobwebbed windows and rusty hinged doors is an exaggeration that amuses more than it creates depression or has a tendency to strike fear.

"From all reports from the Coast the studios are filled daily, cameras are clicking on locations in and about the city and generally conditions are about as normal as one would expect at this time of year.

"Within the coming month I will start the first of the series of eight Western pictures with Texas Guinan as the star and other independent producers have informed me of their plans which are that they also contemplate producing very shortly. On the whole I can see no reason for alarm, but rather I am of the belief that the year 1921 will prove a most profitable one in the motion picture business.

"As I have said in a previous interview all that remains for conditions to improve is that the independent producer, exchange and exhibitor get together and have a better understanding and the few small clouds on our horizon will be dispelled and the sun will shine for us as in the past, despite the loud wails of the calamity howlers."

Truth Productions Complete Educational

Word has just come from the offices of Truth Productions at 230 West 39th street, that the final scenes have been shot on their latest educational production which is titled "The Porcelain Lamp." As the feature now stands, it is in five reels and depicts the evolution of travel from the days when the only known means of locomotion were man's own two legs, down thru the ages.

Mr. Levey, president of the Harry Levey Service Corporation, under whose direct supervision all Truth Productions are made, announces that this picture is in accord with his idea to product only "Features with a Purpose." It is an education in itself.

Irving Lesser, brother of Sol Lesser, arrived in New York on last Sunday. Mr. Lesser, who may be listed under the heading of "producer" will make his stay as brief as possible as the activities of his Western Picture Exploitation demand his presence on the Coast.

He stated that he could not as yet divulge the motive for his Eastern visit, but that he will make several important announcements before returning to the Coast.

Mr. Lesser is making his headquarters with Harry D. Wilson at the Capitol theatre building, and is residing at present at the Astor Hotel.

Arrow Film Appoints Two New Salesmen

W. E. Shellenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announced the appointment of two additional special representatives to the sales force of the Arrow organization.

In accordance with the recently announced policy of expansion of the Arrow Film Corporation an increase in the sales force became necessary and appointment of Thomas A. Curran and C. M. White was the first step preparatory to handling the greatly increased output of the Arrow during the coming year.

Both Mr. White and Mr. Curran are experienced film men who are said to be well fitted for the work they will have to do in their new positions. Mr. White was for a number of years connected with Gaumont and has had a great deal of practical motion picture experience. Mr. Curran acquired most of his motion picture experience in Australia, of which country he is a native. While there he had a thorough training in theatrical and motion picture matters. Both Mr. White and Mr. Curran will spend some time in the New York offices of the Arrow familiarizing themselves with the business details of the organization before going to their respective territories.

It has not yet been announced where they will be stationed but it is expected they will be allotted their respective territories in the very near future.

Jack Hoxsie, who is starring in four special features to be released by Arrow Film Corp.

C. A. Taylor, general manager of Gardiner Pictures, Inc., of Buffalo is not one of the exchangemen who is looking forward to 1921 as "the greatest year in the industry." At the same time he is not a pessimist. He merely adopts a sane, rational view in regard to the coming year. Here is the way he puts it:

"There is without question a slacking up to some extent of business in our line as well as others. The distributors and manufacturers must step on their producing units and slacken their overhead for the future, or otherwise it might cause a flood that few will have boats to save themselves.

"The motion picture business today is a gamble, but if we all look ahead and prepare ourselves to take some loss, we can eliminate the gamble. There is no question but what the Independent Exchange Owners will be called upon to solve a great many perplexing questions for selling and distributing via a sane route, because with a man's own money invested he can educate himself more quickly than the fellow who has the Home Office to fall back on every week.

"There is cause for the remark: 'Take your losses now,' and if the exhibitor or exchange is clearing the track this warning will help to meet the slow time."

Hallroom Comedy Ready for Chicagoans

"This Is the Life," the third release of the new series of the Percy-Ferdie Hallroom Boy Comedies which was produced under the personal supervision of Harry Cohn, is now ready for release in Chicago according to the announcement made by the Celebrated Players Film Corporation which is offering these comedies to state right buyers. Harry McCoy, Hugh Fay, Lillian Hackett, Polly Moran and a capable cast make this a sure fire comic.

Southern Exchangeman Reports Big Bookings

From Louisville, Kt., comes the report of L. C. McHenry, manager of the Greater Features, Inc., that "The County Fair" is being booked far above his expectations. He states they never before have handled a state right picture for which there has been such a demand from the biggest and best exhibitors.

Memphis Enterprises have booked the picture; and the Knickerbocker theatre, one of the finest in Nashville, will play it for an entire week, as will the Signet Amusement, of Chattanooga. The Strand Amusement, owning Paducak, Kt., Owensboro, Kt., Princeton, Kt., and Mayfield, Kt., have also signed up for "The County Fair."

Manheimer Heads J. W. Co.

Serial Producer to Manage New Company; First Release Announced

E. S. MANHEIMER, one of the organizers of Paramount and known for many years as the "Serial King," being the producer of "The Branded Four" and "The Crimson Lash," is the general manager of the newly formed J. W. Film Corporation with offices at 130 W. 46th street, New York City.

The J. W. Film is a New York corporation which will devote its energies for the present to supplying elaborated productions of a special nature to Independent Exchanges. Mr. Manheimer, who has been operating on a large scale in the foreign market, controlling the foreign rights to "The Great Gamble," "The Evil Eye," "The Fatal Sign" and "The Mystery Mind," has been preparing for some time to become active once more in the producing and distributing fields, in consequence of which the J. W. Film Corporation comes into being with its first production ready for immediate release and four other special features rapidly nearing completion.

The initial offering of the new organization is a Burton King production entitled "Every Man's Price" and is said to be of the very special nature demanded by Independent Exchanges. Grace Darling is the star of the new feature and will be given the backing of a big advertising campaign.

"Every Man's Price" is a society drama, laid in New York, and deals with the attempt of a wealthy banker, who is also a power in politics, to prove his contention that every man has his price. The District Attorney, who is selected by the banker as a possibility for the office of governor, is the victim of his experiment and a beautiful woman with whom he is in love is the price of his dishonesty. Interesting situations develop and the drama is said to abound in deep heart interest and exciting climaxes.

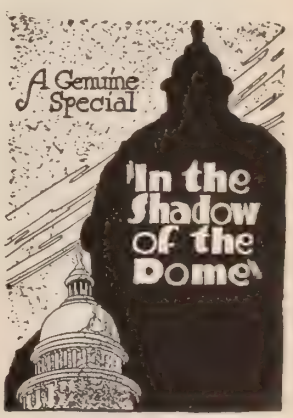
Many Artists Praise "The Devil's Angel"

What is considered by some artists the most artistic achievement in motion picture making was accomplished by Lejaren a' Hiller in "The Devil's Angel" starring Helen Gardner and which is being handled on the state right market by Clark Cornelius.



At a private showing of this picture for the artist friends of Mr. Hiller, "The Devil's Angel" was considered the most artistic accomplishment in motion pictures that they ever witnessed.

Mr. Hiller has become famous for his photography and lighting of subjects. He originated the soft-focus on the still picture which has become so popular. His lighting of pictures, however, has not been equalled by any other illustrator of this country or Europe, it is claimed.

Mr. Hiller has succeeded in putting all of these artistic effects in his first motion picture venture "The Devil's Angel." They are original and lend value to the production.

80 Prints of Serial in Twelve Territories

According to Joan Film Sales Co., distributors of "The Invisible Ray," a serial starring Jack Sherill and Ruth Clifford, eighty prints of that thriller are now working in twelve territories. An emergency order was sent this week to the laboratory to print fifty more copies of "The Invisible Ray."

Baum Back from Selling Trip

Equity-Joan Salesman Declares Depression Reports Groundless

LOUIS BAUM, sales manager of the Equity Pictures Corp. and the Joan Film Sales Co., left New York two months ago and returned this week to give the lie to reports of depression and slump in the buying market of the independent field. His evidence consisted of twenty-nine constracts signed by the most prominent exchanges for the rights to the distribution of Equity's two special State Right productions, "Keep to the Right," starring Edith Taliaferro, and "Whispering Devils," featuring Conway Tearle, and Joan's three productions — "She Played and Paid," starring Fanny Ward, "The Invisible Ray" serial and the twelve Billy West two-reel comedies.

This number of sales negotiated within such a brief period is considered by Equity to set a record in the independent market, particularly at this time. Mr. Baum declared that he encountered little difficulty in disposing of Equity and Joan pictures. He found that many State Right buyers were simply panic-stricken about the outlook for the future without any substantial grounds and that once the facts were presented to them their fears vanished.

Baum's sales trip took him through the principal cities of the East, South and West. He stopped at Baltimore, Washington, Boston, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Kansas City, St. Louis, Dallas and Atlanta. In Baltimore Baum sold the Billy West comedies and "Whispering Devils" to Peter Oletsky of the Federated Film Exchange, for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia; in Boston, Sam Grand of the Federated Film Exchanges of New England bought "She Played and Paid," "Whispering Devils" and the Billy West series; in Pittsburgh, Joe Skirboll of First National purchased the Billy West comedies; Herbert L. Weil, releasing through the Minter United Amusements of Detroit, closed for "She Played and Paid," "Whispering Devils" and "Keep to the Right," for distribution in Michigan.

In Chicago, Clyde Elliott of Greater Stars Productions bought the Billy West comedies for Illinois and Indiana; Harry Lande of the Lande Film Distribution Co. of Cleveland and Cincinnati purchased the three features, "Keep to the Right," "Whispering Devils" and "She Played and Paid," for distribution in Ohio and Kentucky; in Kansas City, the Standard Film Exchange purchased "Whispering Devils" and "She Played and Paid" for Missouri and Kansas; William Underwood of the Specialty Film Co. of Dallas purchased "Whispering Devils," "She Played and Paid," "Keep to the Right," and the Billy West comedies, for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

In the South, J. E. Pearce of Pearce Films, New Orleans, bought "The Invisible Ray" serial, the West comedies and the three features for Louisiana and Mississippi; Frank Salley of Salley Films bought "Whispering Devils," "She Played and Paid," "Keep to the Right," and "The Invisible Ray" serial for North and South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee, excepting the serial, which was purchased for four States only. The last deal closed was with Tom Branon of Charlotte, operating the Eltabran Film Exchange, who bought the "Invisible Ray" serial and the Billy West comedies for North and South Carolina and Virginia.

A summary of Baum's sales reveals that the Billy West comedies were sold for distribution in thirteen States; the "Invisible Ray" serial disposed of for nine States; "Whispering Devils" was closed for sixteen States, as also "She Played and Paid" and "Keep to the Right" sold for fifteen States. It is significant that the buyers mentioned above are without exception among the leading exchangemen in their respective territories. The territory sold by Baum, and that sold from the New York office on all the State Right pictures mentioned, together show that "Whispering Devils" is now 70 per cent sold; "She Played and Paid" about 65 per cent sold; the Billy West comedies 60 per cent: "Keep to the Right," half sold; and the "Invisible Ray" serial somewhat more than half disposed of. Negotiations now pending for the remaining territory indicate that all of Joan and Equity's State Right product will be 100 per cent sold within the next three weeks.

The Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has advanced the first release date on three new series of releases scheduled for the month of January. The Reelcraft Scenic Nature Beautiful series will be ready on December 25th, the current week, instead of January 7th, as first announced.

The Paragon single reel slap-stick series featuring George Clarke in a weekly release will be advanced from January 23rd to January 2nd, while the Bud and His Buddies series of single reel comedies will be released on January 7th, one week ahead of the date previously announced to the distributing exchanges.

The above advancements were made necessary by the withdrawal of the single reel re-issued Christie-made comedies, featuring Betty Compson and Billy Rhodes, from the Reelcraft schedule.

Newark Strand to Play "Madonnas and Men"

"Madonnas and Men" will open its first engagement in the East at the Strand theatre, Newark, on Sunday, January 9th. Jans Pictures, Inc., has made special arrangements for this opening and although where the picture was put on at Baltimore without any prologue whatever on Christmas week it played to capacity crowds. Herman F. Jans, the president of the company, has made special arrangements to produce the feature at the Strand with the prologue intact exactly as it was used at the legitimate theatres throughout the country.

Mr. Jans is, of course, interested in handling the production in this manner in Newark, as it is his home town. He especially desires all exhibitors interested in the booking of pictures for Greater New York and northern Jersey to see the production during its play at the Strand, week of January 9th.

Renco to Open New York Office

To Exploit Pictures Based on Myrtle Reed Novels

MR. H. J. REYNOLDS, president of Renco Film Company, has arrived in New York City for the purpose of establishing a permanent New York headquarters for the exploitation of the Myrtle Reed novels, for which he has exclusive rights and which will be produced as super-features in the near future, it is announced.

"Lavender and Old Lace" has already been completed under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, and Mr. Reynolds is here for the purpose of ascertaining the best method of marketing this Myrtle Reed product. The attractiveness of the story is evidenced by the fact that many offers, both for program and independent exploitation, have already been received, it is stated.

Mr. Reynolds is quoted as follows:

"For several years I have considered the wonderful possibilities for motion picture material of Myrtle Reed's books, especially her best known book, 'Lavender and Old Lace'; but up to last year I felt that the public taste was not quite ripe for a picture of this sort.

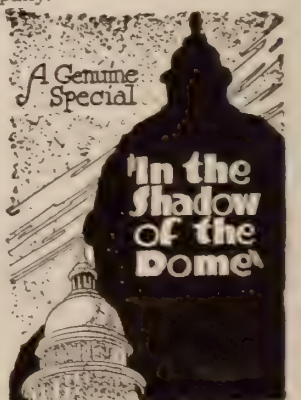
"My observation has been that the public has more or less grown weary of the sex problem productions; also, the big, spectacular and costly productions very often mean very little to the average audience, and I firmly believe that the time has arrived when a sweet and refreshing story with heart interest would appeal strongly to the public taste.

"In 'Lavender and Old Lace' we have a picture that not only appeals to women, but on account of its laughter provoking comedy appeals just as strongly to men and children. This is a demonstrated fact and not theory.

"Before producing this picture, 10,000 synopses of the book were mailed to persons representing all walks of life. A questionnaire was enclosed, and from the returns we were able to ascertain an average of 80 out of every 100 persons consulted have read this book. We have also received thousands of answers from ministers and school teachers pledging their moral support to this production on account of its elevating influence.

"Furthermore, we have a ready-made audience due to the fact that Myrtle Reed has an immense following. More than 40 editions of the book have been published, and the publishers of Myrtle Reed's books have offered to give us full co-operation by conducting special displays in book and department stores throughout the country wherever the picture will be playing, and assisting exploitation in other ways."

Canyon's Third Farnum Picture Soon Ready



"The Fighting Stranger," the third five-reel feature in which Franklyn Farnum is appearing for the Canyon Pictures Corporation, promises to be a screen offering which will embody all of the elements that the modern movie audiences demand.

The last scenes of the production have just been taken and the work of cutting is now under way in Los Angeles, under the personal supervision of Colonel Wm. N. Selig.

The first prints and negative of "The Fighting Stranger" are due in New York during the first week in January.

EVERYBODY KNOWS "The HALLROOM BOYS"

MAX CARNOT, president of the Sunrise Pictures Corporation, No. 220 West 42nd Street, announced yesterday that a big deal is pending whereby the company will acquire three or more productions in which Peggy Hyland will star.

Sunrise already owns "The Price of Silence" starring Miss Hyland, which is taken from the novel "At the Mercy of Tiberius," by Augusta J. Evans Wilson.

Winfield F. Kelley, general sales manager, just returned from a short trip to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington and reports several deals on, with prospects of a Sunrise Exchange in Baltimore, Mr. Kelly is preparing for a whirlwind swing around the country about January 10 and expects to close on the bigger territories.

"Silent Barrier" Sold in Europe

"The Silent Barrier," the initial Louis Tracy production, the series of which were acquired by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, has been sold for a large block of European territory, according to a special statement issued by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation the early part of the week. The contract, which calls for the distribution of this production for physical distribution throughout France, Switzerland, Holland and Belgium, is said to have been consummated for a large financial consideration.

A number of sales on this production for foreign distribution are at present pending, and announcement of their consummation will be made in the trade press upon the closing of contracts.

Campaign in South for Arrow Picture

Arrow Film Corporation states that Quality Film Service of Atlanta, Ga., which recently bought the rights to "Bitter Fruit" in their territory, intends to conduct a big local advertising campaign in exploiting this picture. The feature was filmed in Florida and a great deal of interest has been aroused because of that fact. "Bitter Fruit" was made by Dramafilms, Inc., and directed by Will Bradley.

Special Pictures Not to Make Features

The report that the Special Pictures Corporation was to increase its scope and enter the feature field as well as the domain of comedies and other short subjects was vigorously denied this week by C. C. Craig, business manager of the West Coast producing organization.

"We organized as specialists in short subjects," said Mr. Craig, "and have found that field sufficiently productive, and we will continue along the same line during 1921."

For Safer and Better Policies

Top Notch Protests the Suspicion of Exchangemen

THE following letter, making a number of interesting points to the trade, was received last week from the Top Notch Producing and Distributing Company:

"Why must the future of the Independent Field be built upon lies; why does the Independent Film Man check any possibilities to redeem this situation, and finally why is it that when you make every possible effort to establish honorable policies and spend $100,000 to prove your faith in your effort, the Independent Exchange man will sit back on his chair and tell you—'I Wonder Where the Catch Is.' Why are the policies of the Independent Field so undermined that when you are talking of honest policy they laugh into your face, thinking that you have a new trick to spring on them. Why? Why? Why? Why?—

"Is there any possibllity of ever redeeming this situation; is there any hope of ever putting the business on a solid, honorable and basic foundation? We are spending thousands of dollars for the past six months, for advertising in the trade magazines, in hundreds of newspapers and dozens of magazines, to build a reputation for our brand for the name of our firm. We are distributing, free of charge, thousands of posters advertising our comedies and many thousand posters regarding our Title Contest. Finally, after six months of solid advertising, when we finally began to market our pictures, our policy was firmly established that we are to sell our brand without screening. Here is the reason:

"We are the first company in America to advertise a short subject six months before its release, through the direct to the public method. We are also the first company in the world who are selling a franchise for a series of 26 two-reel comedies, guaranteeing the delivery of one every two weeks, without collecting a single cent in advance or deposit on the franchise and; finally, we are the first film distributing organization to furnish any number of posters free of charge both on our Title Contest and on our Comedies. On the top of all these, we do not charge for territorial rights, but guarantee the rights of the territory by the purchase of a single print of each release, while our franchise includes a clause stating that the buyer must take out his C. O. D. shipments as he orders them: he does not have to order more than one at the time and can cancel his franchise at any time, on instant notice, if he is dissatisfied with any one shipment.

"We do not want to screen because we have only the first five releases of this series complete and not all the twenty-six. Therefore, if we screen a couple of the best of these that does not furnish a guarantee to the buyer that all the twenty-six will be up to that standard, but we give him the right of cancellation of the franchise on instant notice if any one shipment is unsatisfactory. Therefore, we are forced to make every one of our pictures as good as the best; otherwise, our comedies could not exist and we want to start to establish faith in business and make the Independent Buyer understand that a company that has spent over $40,000.00 to establish a name for their brand and fought through all difficulties with the Postal Authorities to win the Government's approval of their Title Contest, and are conducting a nation-wide Title Contest for months, in newspapers and magazines, aggregating to 20,000,000 circulation before the first picture is released: that after all this publicity it could not be the aim of the company to sell one print on their first picture on each territory and get out of business, but to deliver the goods that will surpass all the expectations of the 20,000 movie fans and the thousands of theatres that will see the first picture and to win an immediate recognition for the 'Top Notch' brand.

"Knowing that the entire film trade read the Motion Picture News, we are writing this letter to you and will ask you to publish same in your earliest edition, so that we can get the opinion of the Independent Film men.

"Why can they not assist us in establishing policies that will abolish deposits, advances and tie-up contracts, but each picture produced should sell on its own merit and the exchange man shall not pay any set amount for his territory, but pay so much for each print and if he is financially not very strong he can order four or five prints for his territory on each release and take out his C. O. D. shipments one by one, as he is able to without running into debt, and probably pay more for his territory than he can get back on his picture, instead of not taking more than one print, unless the demand created by the picture or the brand warrants him to buy.

"And; although we do not screen, we sold most of our territories on the strength of four Title Contest, as the inquiries in response to our nation-wide advertising campaign, were so heavy that theatre owners are willing to book our comedies blindly to satisfy the public's demand. Without our Title Contest, however, we could not have succeeded, no matter how good our intentions were."

Commonwealth Has Big Year

To Start New Year by Releasing Young Productions

THE COMMONWEALTH FILM CORPORATION, Sam Zierler, president, announces that it has contracted for the five new productions to be made by Clara Kimball Young This, they believe, will come as a welcome Christmas surprise package to the host of exhibitors of Greater New York, who are Commonwealth patrons.

"Our policy of giving the exhibitor a 'square deal' and of handling only the best open market productions available is really the backbone of our success," said Mr. Zierler. "Every Commonwealth salesman and employe, when engaged, is impressed with the fact that the exhibitor must be given good treatment, co-operation and the support of the Commonwealth forces."

Opening its exchange in small quarters in the Mecca Building, 1,600 Broadway, less than fifteen months ago, Commonwealth sprung a big surprise on Greater New York operators by outbidding all its competitors for the Clara Kimball Young productions made for Equity.

The same success that marked bookings on "Eyes of Youth" was repeated in Greater New York on "The Forbidden Woman," "For the Soul of Rafael," "Mid-Channel," Miss Young specials, Commonwealth reports.

Not content with giving the exhibitors the Young pictures Mr. Zierler was successful in getting "She Played and Paid," starring Fannie Ward, and "Whispering Devils," starring Conway Tearle, for his territory. In addition he contracted for "Keep to the Right," starring Edith Taliaferro, and "The Hidden Light," starring Dolores Cassinelli.

One of Mr. Zierler's most recent purchases for this territory is "When Dawn Came," starring Colleen Moore, whose work in "Dinty" has stamped her as one of the most capable actresses on the screen.

Always alert for the timely and popular in picture subjects, Commonwealth bought "For the Freedom of Ireland." It is proving one of the best box office bets for its users.

Answering the requests of scores of his exhibitors-patrons who had been very successful with his full length subjects, Mr. Zierler also secured the new Billy West Comedies and the serial, "The Invisible Ray."

Commonwealth likewise was chosen to handle Greater New York distribution on "Headin' Home," starring Babe Ruth, King of Swat, idol of sport-loving men, women and children everywhere.

"My faith in the exhibitor has been vindicated," Mr. Zierler declared. "The exhibitor is now realizing that the independent picture is his only salvation; that it means more competition among the distributors and keeps the distributor-producer-exhibitor from cornering the choicest theatres and forcing the small exhibitor to the wall.

"Commonwealth's stand is, will and always shall be with the independent exhibitor. The independent distributor and exhibitor must work hand in hand for their common good."

One of the milestones in the growth of the Commonwealth organization was its occupancy two months ago of half of the large fifteenth floor of the Godfrey Building.

"We here at Commonwealth would be remiss were we not to thank the exhibitors of Greater New York for their splendid co-operation," said Mr. Zierler. "They were quick to grasp the opportunity to work hand-in-hand with an organization, which is always on the alert to furnish the best productions available and offer them aid in the solution of their problems."

Active Campaign for New Year

ERNEST SHIPMAN and his associates have been preparing an active campaign for the year 1921, first by eliminating from their list a number of pictures which do not come up to the high standards required for success, it is stated. New deals have been consummated for feature pictures which, in the making, promise to surpass the average program product and thus make them eligible for special campaigns in first-run houses. The trade announcement of Ernest Shipman and associates, include the following attractions, most of which are being distributed by the Associated First National Pictures.

The James Oliver Curwood Productions, Inc., is sponsor for "Nomads of the North" and others to follow.

The Renco Film Company, Inc., is producing the most successful of the famous Myrtle Reed stories, with "Lavender and Old Lace," now scheduled for an early release.

Ernest Shipman Plans Active Schedule for 1921

The Dominion Film Company, Inc., has established itself by controlling the rights to the stories of Ralph Connor and other famous authors, and by arrangement with this corporation, the Winnipeg Productions, Ltd., of Canada, have already produced "The Foreigner" and "Cameron of the Royal Mounted" under the direction of Henry MacRae, while the Cathrine Curtos Corporation had completed "The Sky Pilot" under the direction of King Vidor with "The Man from Glengarry" to follow.

The Legend Film Corporation are making unusual two-reel features, starring John Junior and Edna Shipman. The San Gabriel Producing Company is effecting exclusive contracts with certain stars of prominence and will make soon announcements of great interest to the trade within the next thirty days. The National Film Corporation has arranged with Mr. Shipman and associated for reissues of "Tarzan of the Apes" and "Romance of Tarzan" and more business is now being done by these two features than at any time within the last year.

James Oliver Curwood's First National success, "Back to God's Country," starring Nell Shipman, has already passed the half million dollar mark and is rolling up new records for repeat business in many neighborhood houses of the country.

New deals are being consummated, which will be read with interest by exchange managers and exhibitors during the coming season. Everything that Ernest Shipman and associates are identified with has proven to be of sound box office value and no failure is yet chronicled to dim the horizon of their success.

Ex-Heavyweight Champ Plays Heavy Lead

Al Kaufman, former heavyweight champion prizefighter, who was the only man to fight Jack Johnson to a draw when Johnson was in his prime, will be seen as heavy lead in the Western Star Production, "Bill of the B O Ranch," starring William Fairbanks. In this picture Bill Fairbanks and Al Kaufman fight three bloody rounds.

'Determination' Studio Has Xmas Party

The day before Christmas was celebrated by the cast and studio staff of "Determination," the super-feature photo drama being filmed at the Grantwood, N. J., studio of the United States Photoplay Corporation.

On behalf of the makers of "Determination," a suitably inscribed gold watch was presented to Director John L. McCutcheon by assistant director George Murphy. Leslie King made a real Christmas speech.

2 Kinetos on One Program

Ed. Hyman Will Show Two Urban Subjects at the Brooklyn Strand

TWO Kineto Reviews in a single program will be featured during the week by Manager Edward Hyman of the Brooklyn Strand.

It has been the contention of Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, that these single reel subjects had the substance and the quality to make up even an entire program. Mr. Hyman is taking the first step towards doubling the usual allotment of this kind of entertainment by using two of Mr. Urban's Kineto Reviews in one program.

The subjects he has selected are "The Trip of the U. S. S. Idaho," which played recently at the Capitol theatre in New York, and "Down in Dixie," a charming trip in the rejuvenated Sunny South of America.

Leading exhibitors are watching with interest Mr. Hyman's program this week, because of its odd experiment. The way the audiences take the "double dose" will probably have quite an effect on the booking habit of managers elsewhere.

The Brooklyn Strand manager himself has no doubt as to the outcome, it is reported. He has always gone on the assumption that the best is none too good for the Strand patrons and he is satisfied that they will welcome two Kineto Reviews instead of one.

Nathan Hirsh Optimistic

Independent Man Argues for Big Year: Aywon Has Attractive Array

NATHAN HIRSH, president of Aywon Film Corporation, is one who believes that the coming year will be a particularly fine one for the independent field. He gives two reasons for this belief. Firstly, he believes that the state right field is more firmly established than ever before, and secondly, that the general run of productions released through this channel are of a much higher grade than those of the past.

Concerning Aywon, Mr. Hirsh states that his company has several unusually strong attractions for the first few months of the new year. These include the E. K. Lincoln feature, "The Man of Courage," Florence Chase in "The Woman Above Reproach," "The Evolution of Man," "The Woman of Mystery" and the recently announced series of fifteen Mary Pickford big little features. In addition Mr. Hirsh is now preparing to release fifteen two-reel dramas in which famous star's first made a name for themselves. These are called the "Success Series of Short Subjects" and will soon be made available for presentation. Other features and short reel series are in preparation.

Mr. Hirsh states that it is a matter of pride with him that customers that began buying from him when Aywon was first organized are still doing business with the company. It has been a case of "right pictures at the right prices," he states.

Mazur Joins Harry Sherman

Minneapolis Film Man Will Be Treasurer of Producing Company

M. E. MAZUR, who has been acting as special representative in New York for the Sherman Productions Corporation, has been appointed treasurer of the organization and will take up his duties in that capacity on January 1, 1921, according to an announcement made early this week.

The appointment of Mr. Mazur was made by the franchise holders of the Sherman Corporation at a special meeting held on Monday, December 20, at the company's office in the Fitzgerald building, 1482 Broadway.

The newly appointed treasurer comes from Minneapolis, and was engaged in that city as a special representative for the Metro Pictures Corporation. Prior to working for Metro, he was affiliated with Harry Sherman, president of the concern, as salesman for many of the special productions which President Sherman handled prior to the formation of the Sherman Productions Corporation.

Mr. Mazur is a hard worker and is said to be ably fitted for the duties of his new office. He has been actively engaged in the motion picture industry for a period of eight years and in that time has handled some of the biggest productions. He was manager of "The Birth of a Nation" company which toured the Middle and Southwest, including the States of Iowa, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada and Utah.

The release date of the first Sherman production, "Man and Woman," will be announced immediately after the first of the year and the final details for the distribution are being "whipped" into shape at the new executive office in the Fitzgerald building.

Live News From Producers

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

IT has just become known that George Loane Tucker, producer of "The Miracle Man," is recovering from a very serious major operation which was performed about three months ago. For several weeks Mr. Tucker's life was despaired of, it is stated. The operation which was performed privately followed several years' intermittent illness.

Mr. Tucker consented to the operation when told that further postponement might prove fatal. Only his closest friends knew of the operation. Recently Mr. Tucker was permitted by his physician to leave his home for the first time in many weeks.

He immediately started work finishing the editing of his second American production, "Ladies Must Live," which will be released as a super-special about the first of February. A New York theatre will be leased in anticipation of a long run of the picture.

The Rothacker Industrial Division staged a premier showing of a five reel industrial picture at the Riviera theatre, Chicago.

The showing was in the morning and was attended by officials of the W. H. Miner organization for whom the picture was made.

The picture will be shown at Railroad Y. M. C. A.'s and before workers in railroad shops.

Praise Bestowed by Critics for R-C's "813"

Almost without exception, announce Robertson-Cole, the verdicts of responsible critics throughout the country with regard to "813," the Robertson-Cole super-special featuring Wedgood Nowell, prove that the picturization of Maurice Leblanc's greatest detective story is one of the most interesting, entertaining and gripping films ever flashed upon the screen.

Together with the wide acclaim is the desire of exhibitors to book the picture at the earliest possible date thus adding further proof as to its merits to all the distributors.

"The Killer" Seen as Popular Attraction

The sponsors of "The Killer," the Benjamin B. Hampton feature which Pathe has announced for release January 30th, repose the utmost confidence in the picture to attain to a high state as a popular attraction. In addition to being a melodrama based on the elements of proven appeal, are the exploitation possibilities of a play adapted from a novel written by Steward Edward White, whose writings have won him high favor with the public, and a cast made up of players so well known for their special talents as Frank Campeau, Jack Conway and Clair Adams in serious roles; Frankie Lee as a boy actor; Frank Haynes and Zack Williams as comedians, and Tod Sloan, the famous jockey who plays a prominent part.

GEORGE D. BAKER, the producer, and M. P. Staulcup, Metro's art director, have commissioned Lucinda Davies Duble, the well-known sculptress, to make a figure of the God of Chance which is to be a feature of the elaborate setting used in Mr. Baker's current production, "Temple Dusk," scheduled for release by Metro.

The figure, known as The Dicer, is a life-size model in clay, which occupies the center of the gambling hall, and is represented in a semi-kneeling posture in the act of throwing dice held in his extended hand. It is before this altar in the temple of chance that Clement Palter, the proprietor of the gambling house, makes his daily genuflection as a ceremony and a rite in the curious religion he holds that later plays such an important part in moulding the destinies of the characters in the story.

Will Rogers in "Boys Will Be Boys"

Goldwyn announces coincident with the release of Will Rogers' current picture, "Guile of Women," based upon a Peter Clark MacFarlane story, the completion at its Culver City studios of the next Rogers starring vehicle, "Boys Will Be Boys," based upon Charles O'Brien Kennedy's dramatization of the famous Irvin S. Cobb story of the same title.

In its play form last year "Boys Will Be Boys" registered an emphatic hit on Broadway, the role of Peep O'Day, acted on the stage by Harry Beresford, being given high praise because of its unusualness and the opportunity which it afforded for human comedy acting. Will Rogers has acted Peep O'Day for the screen. Clarence Badger directed.

To Screen "Black Beauty"

Vitagraph to Show Feature to Trade at Astor on January 5

DURING a period of months, word has filtered from the West Coast that "Black Beauty," the Vitagraph special production, based on Anna Sewell's historic novel, was gradually being rounded into form. The actual film of this special production reached Vitagraph Brooklyn studios the week before last, and Lillian and George Randolph Chester have finally completed its editing and now comes the announcement that the first public showing of this film, which features Jean Paige, and an all-star cast, will be at the Hotel Astor ballroom on Wednesday afternoon, January 5.

A special orchestra has been secured and the big film will be presented under exactly the same auspices and with exactly the same effects as in the big theatres in which it will be shown within the next few weeks. Albert E. Smith, president of the company will be present, as well as Jean Paige, the star of the production, and Lillian and George Randolph Chester, who have been in charge of its editing.

"Black Beauty," in its picture form, was made at Vitagraph's West Coast studio under the direction of David Smith, several months having been spent on the production. Essentially, as written by Anna Sewell, the story was the autobiography of a horse—the dramatic incidents were present, but the human element was slight. Black Beauty, in his story, told only what he saw and knew. Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester have supplied the human story—what the human characters described in the book thought, said and did. Together, the story of the horse by Anna Sewell and the story of the human characters by Mr. and Mrs. Chester, blend into one.

Levey Announces Plans

Educationals Containing Advertising to Be Labeled on Screen

THE HARRY LEVEY SERVICE CORFORATION announces today that the New Year will see the realization of several of their plans.

Mr. Levey states that from the inception of advertising films, he has felt that the theatre-going public did not want to be fed sugar-coated pictures. In other words, they did not want to pay admission to a theatre expecting to see a good comedy or dramatic offering, only to find that a certain amount of advertising had been sandwiched into it.

Therefore, beginning with the first release of 1921, all pictures containing advertising produced by the Harry Levey Service Corporation, will have incorporated in their first title the plain, unvarnished fact that the following film, although made with prominent and experienced players, and the same sort of settings and care in production that is given to all Truth productions, contains a certain amount of advertising appeal incorporated in such a manner that it does not detract in any way from the high entertainment value of the picture. An appeal will also be made to the audience for suggestions and comment on the production.

Mr. Levey says further, that the exhibitor should be paid for his screen; that it is the only fair method of doing this sort of business.

Further, he states, the theatre-going public likes to be informed as to the various ways that things they use in every day life are made.

Fred Quimby Goes to the West Coast

Mr. Fred C. Quimby leaves on Sunday for Los Angeles, to be gone for about a month, and during his stay at the Coast he will complete arrangements for the next Jack Dempsey serial.

Many Hits Credited to Thomas Fallon

Thomas F. Fallon, author of the last three George Walsh hits, co-author of "While New York Sleeps," and co-author with Max Marcin and J. Searle Dawley of Pearl White's latest feature, soon to be released, has found time amid the whirl of writing screen originals and adaptations to write a one act playlet for Amelia Bingham, entitled, "The Mysterious Miss Grayson." Miss Bingham will appear in this Fallon playlet as a headliner at the Palace theatre, New York, early in January.

Mr. Fallon was at one time in charge of the manuscript section of the Fox scenario department. Because of his experience as a playwright, he was deemed admirably suited to judge play technic. But his creative mind was not one to remain at rest by merely reading the efforts of others. So in a short time, Mr. Fallon was writing originals for Fox. From the beginning his stories went big—both as entertainment and box office attractions.

Now there is hardly a writer who can claim the number of big hits on the market at the same time. Chief among Fallon's present hits are: "The Shark," "The Plunger," "While New York Sleeps" and "Bride 13," of which he wrote the adaptations. "Dynamite Allen" and the new Pearl White feature are other Fallon stories scheduled for January release.

MADGE KENNEDY is appearing in four roles on Broadway this week. Two of them are in "Cornered," the play at the Astor, and the other two are in the Goldwyn picture, "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," which is the feature at the Capitol. In the stage play Miss Kennedy is a thief and also a society girl, but the parts are not further apart than those in the picture, where she is a demure Mennonite maid and a slangy telephone operator in a big New York hotel. Unlike the stage play, it is not necessary to have the two girls look alike, and in fact they are said to be quite different—the one with her hair smooth and her gown the quaint garb of her religion, and the other with elaborate coiffure and dressed in the height of fashion.

"The Stealers" Steadily Winning Success

The success won by "The Stealers," the Robertson-Cole super-special directed by William Christy Cabanne, has assumed the proportions of a national triumph, announce the distributors. Since the great trade showing of "The Stealers" in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor to the present the production's career has been one of steadily gaining popularity.

"The Stealers" has an underlying theme which, it is claimed, gives it an appeal to a far wider audience than the average motion picture. It takes up the question of the spiritual life which is behind the daily existence of the race, and asks pointed questions regarding the hereafter which it convincingly answers.

Eastman Executive at Rothacker Plant

George A. Blair, sales manager of the Eastman Film Department, visited the Rothacker Chicago laboratories. John M. Stahl, director for Louis B. Mayer, and W. H. Leahy, of the Mayer Production organization, stopped over at the Rothacker plant on their way to the Coast to go over the continuity of the Mayer super-feature, "The Woman in His House."

"Fantomas' Rings the Bell"

So Says One Critic of Fox Serial; Many Aids Available

"THE new Fox serial, 'Fantomas,' rings the bell," proclaims one critic who viewed the early episodes of this detective story. The daily reports coming into the Fox headquarters indicate that exhibitors who have booked the serial, which was released December 15, also believe "the new Fox serial rings the bell," because their satisfaction with its drawing power is evidently spreading and is bringing in many new contracts from exhibitors in the vicinity of those who opened with it December 15, declares a statement from the Fox headquarters.

For this second serial "Fantomas" Mr. Fox sent to France, and his representative contracted with Marcel Allain for twenty-six volumes of the Fantomas series with which Allain and Pierre Souvestre has written for a public that awaited eagerly each new volume. With these famous detective stories in his possession—stories that he knew would be thrillers with the vast modern motion picture equipment he had placed in his new studios in West Fifty-fifth street, New York, William Fox assigned Edward Sedgwick to write the continuity. This work was done carefully and thoroughly, and Mr. Fox watched each step in the development of the writing, making numerous and valuable suggestions based on his experience as a motion picture showman. Months passed before both Mr. Fox and Mr. Sedgwick were satisfied with the continuity. Anything that savored of old serial stuff was eliminated.

Novelty and daring, combined with an absorbing story carefully built up, were the features they not only strove for, but realized.

In selecting the cast for the serial Mr. Sedgwick reached out into Broadway and selected players who were in big stage productions. Lionel Adams and John Willard and Rena Parker have big reputations in Broadway stage circles. Rena Parker, after a season in "Betty be Good," on Broadway, started on the road as the star of the "hit," but when she was offered a position in the "Fantomas" serial she promptly gave up her prima donna role to return to New York for work in the serial. It is her first time in pictures, too, though she had had many offers to leave the stage.

The speed and the big punch, the daring shown by Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy, and the clever work of the entire company are due to the fine handling of the members by Mr. Sedgwick. His good nature and his knowledge of what he wanted and the way he wanted it done filled the entire company with confidence, and they went through some of the most hazardous scenes without a doubt that they were having a good time, and not "working" for serial effects.

Prints have been shipped abroad, and especially great prosperity for both American and foreign exhibitors is expected in the Marcel Allain and Pierre Souvestre stories. Five episodes have been completed, titled and distributed by Fox branches throughout the world. The preliminary work on five more chapters was completed before "Bride 13," the serial which "Fantomas" succeeds, had finished its last episode.

"Fantomas" has been equipped with an unusual complement of lobby, window and billboard paper and a special campaign book has been issued by the Fox press department carrying details of an extensive exploitation program, together with newspaper advertising and publicity text. The first campaign book is printed on twenty pages, including handsomely lithographed covers done in attractive colors in strikingly effective design.

Proofs of newspaper cuts, in single, double and triple column display, scene cuts, portraits of the principals in the cast, and especially written and designed newspaper advertisements supply the showmen with an extensive selection of attention-arresting illustrations. When and how to use all these aids is covered in full detail of explanation by expert publicity writers who speak from experience.

In the text matter each of the five episodes now ready for exhibition are given in synopsis form, together with an outline of the story these episodes relate as a whole. Then, too, the text carries the cast, advertising catch lines and a detailed list of the "high spots" and thrills in the several chapters.

Goldwyn in Force at Capitol

Six of the Next Seven Features Will Be Goldwyn Films

SIX of the next seven feature photoplays to be screened at the world's largest playhouse, the Capitol, New York City, are Goldwyn productions. The series was begun on Sunday, December 26, with Madge Kennedy's new screen vehicle, "The Girl With the Jazz Heart." Her large screen following turned out in force to see her in the double characterization of a slangy New York telephone girl and a shy Mennonite maid.

For the week of January 2, Reginald Barker's Production of Graham Moffatt's famous Scotch comedy, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," will be the featured photoplay. Leatrice Joy acts the role which made Molly Pearson famous on the spoken stage. Russell Simpson has the role of her father, dour Tammas Biggar. Others in the cast are Raymond Hatton, as Weelum, Bunty's lover; Cullen Landis and Casson Ferguson, as her brothers; Josephine Crowell, Edythe Chapman, etc.

Tom Moore will "hold" the Capitol's screen week of January 16, with his newest release, "Hold Your Horses," taken from Rupert Hughes' Saturday Evening Post story, entitled, "Canavan." Sylvia Ashton, Naomi Childers and Sydney Ainsworth have the principal supporting roles.

Then on January 23 comes the Betty Compson production, "Prisoners of Love." Arthur Rosson directed the picture under Miss Compson's personal supervision. In the supporting cast are Roy Stewart, Emory Johnson, Ralph Lewis, Clara Horton, Claire McDowell and Kate Toncray.

Another Reginald Barker production, "Godless Men," a dramatic tale of the sea founded on Ben Ames Williams' story of "Black Hawk," is next on the Capital's schedule. Russell Simpson has the leading role in this picture, assisted by an all-star cast, including Helene Chadwick, James Mason, John Bowers, Alec B. Francis, Robert Kortman and others.

Then comes a new Will Rogers' picture and one which it is promised will show him to his legion of admirers in an entirely new histrionic light. He has been seen hitherto in comedy roles, through which have often been woven strong dramatic strands, but in "Guile of Women," based upon a story by Peter Clark MacFarlane, he has a dramatic role, a "character" part which is at the same time the "lead" or star part, with his genius for simple, human comedy showing through now and then.

Two more Goldwyn productions are now scheduled for early showing at the Capitol though not in sequence to "Guile of Women." One is the picturization of the comedy, "The Concert," which was one of David Belasco's most pronounced stage successes and in Leo Ditrichstein appeared for two years. It was directed by Victor Schertzinger and boasts a cast headed by Lewis S. Stone, Mabel Julienne Scott, Raymond Hatton and Myrtle Stedman.

The second featured Frank Lloyd Production, "A Voice in the Dark," from Ralph E. Dyar's famous stage mystery melodrama, will follow "The Concert." Irene Rich, Ora Carewe, Ramsey Wallace, Alec B. Francis, Alan Hale, Alice Hollister and others appear in its leading roles.

Jesse Lasky to Reach New York Jan. 1

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has been at the Lasky studio in Hollywood for the past two months, is expected in New York about the first of January. He will probably remain here for several months.

Two dramatic moments and a picturesque shot from Harry Carey's latest Universal picture, "Hearts Up"

Exploitation Used on "Whispering Devils"

The proof of the effectiveness of the exploitation suggested by the Equity staff on its Conway Tearle feature, 'Whispering Devils' is now beginning to appear, states that company. The campaign-book on this production has twenty-eight pages, of which almost one-half is devoted to exploitation. From the information arriving from the state-right buyers of 'Whispering Devils' in to Equity headquarters, the amount of exploitation and advertising being done on that feature exceeds that of any other Equity special production.

The report shows that the smaller houses made most use of the campaigns suggested. The most popular 'stunt' is the masked 'Devil Rider,' wheeling on a bicycle and announcing that 'Whispering Devils' are coming.

Well-Known Author at Metro Studios

John Fleming Wilson, noted author, has driven down from the Southern California ranch on which he produces mutton, beef and intensely human short stories, to join Metro's colony of authors and playwrights at the company's studios in Hollywood.

With Bayard Veiller Mr. Wilson toured the Metro stages where several big special productions are in the making. Of special interest to the author was the preliminary work on his own story, "Uncharted Seas," generally agreed to be the best product of Mr. Wilson's pen.

Al Kelley Made a Full Fledged Director

Al J. Kelley is now a full-fledged Metro director. After four years with Metro as an assistant director, he has been selected by Bayard Veiller, director of production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Cal., to handle the megaphone for Viola Dana's next starring picture, "Home Stuff," an original story by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey.

Big Cast with Mae Marsh

Former Stars Support Robertson-Cole Actress in New Production

THE cast chosen by Robertson-Cole to support Mae Marsh in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," which is based on the Marjorie Benton Cooke novel, "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods," and the production by which Miss Marsh has returned to the screen after an absence of two years contains several actors who have been starred in their own right many times, and who now lend their work to support Miss Marsh.

Preeminent in the cast is Tully Marshall, well known character actor. Mr. Marshall, a member of the older school of acting, won his way to legitimate recognition through a long career of one night stands and stock engagements, during which he supported such notables as John McCullough, Joseph Jefferson, Fanny Davenport, Clara Morris and Lotta Crabtree.

Also in the cast is Gretchen Hartman. Miss Hartman has been a star, and has supported many actors including some of the leading stars of the screen.

Another actor in support is Charles Meredith who is the leading man. Mr. Meredith graduated to screen acting from the narrower circle of the Washington Square players and Oliver Morosco's companies.

Kathleen Kirkham, who has been seen in many pictures of note, is another member of the cast of "The Little 'Fraid Lady." Herbert Prior, who has a leading role in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," is a graduate of Oxford, who was on the stage fifteen years, leaving it to act for the old Biograph company. George Bertholon, Jr., the nephew of Miss Marsh, a child of five, also is seen in "The Little 'Fraid Lady,"

This group of actors move before a broad and diversified background in working out the story of "The Little 'Fraid Lady."

Unusual Indian Expedition

Universal and F. B. O. Cameramen Will Film Official Ceremonies

ARTHUR CLOZENBERG, managing director of the Film Booking Offices, Ltd., of London, who arrived in America last week to study the American film field, has just announced one of the most unusual expeditions ever arranged by a film company. By special tie-up with the British Admiralty, the F. B. O. and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company are sending a complete moving picture outfit with the Duke of Connaught, the uncle of King George of England, on his ceremonial trip to India. U. K. Whipple, an expert film news cameraman is in charge of the unit.

The Duke of Connaught, his staff and entourage, and the film representatives, are now aboard the British warship Malayo, proceeding to India by way of the Suez Canal. Whipple sailed from New York on two days' notice, and caught the warship at Marseilles, France. The Duke is going to India to officiate at the opening of the Government House. He is taking the place of the Prince of Wales, whose visit to India was deferred because of his recent world tour.

It is expected that the ceremonies attending the official function will be the most lavish staged in India since the ascension of King George to the throne of Great Britain.

Once a week, exposed film will be returned to London by the King's messenger, and then to New York by the earliest boat. Whipple plans to have pictures of the Delhi ceremonies on the screens of American theatres before all the Indian princes have had time to journey, elephant-back, to their homes in the Himalayan mountains.

Dorothy Dalton Company Back from Location

After three weeks spent on location in Port Henry, N. Y., for exteriors for the Paramount production of "The Teaser," a Canadian-Northwest story, Dorothy Dalton and a company of principals and extras have returned to New York to complete the interiors at the Long Island City studio. The interiors will be completed in a few days after which Miss Dalton will go to the West Coast to start work on the George Melford production, "The Money Master."

Besides Miss Dalton those who went on the location trip were Edwin August, leading man; Riley Hatch, E. J. Radcliffe, Joe King, Jessie Arnold, Margaret Marsh and Jules Cowles.

Advertising Helps Put Metro Feature Over

Liberal advertising to acquaint the picture-going public with the merits of the attraction was one of the contributing reasons for the popularity enjoyed by the Metro all-star special production, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," when it was shown as the feature attraction during the week beginning December 12, at the Rivoli theatre, one of the leading showhouses of Toledo, Ohio.

Three three-column ads were used, each of them being fifteen inches deep. The amusement of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," containing the reading material and the alluring cuts, covered fully half of each advertisement.

Sumptuous Setting for Pathe Episode

Elaborate and sumptous settings are represented as one of the features of the sixth episode of "Velvet Fingers," the Pathe serial starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot. This episode will be released by Pathe on January 9th, and its title is "Unmasked." An Oriental abode of luxurious character in the heart of New York's Chinatown is the locale. Some unusual lighting effects are said to have been effected.

JOSEPH CONRAD, the prominent British author, has signed a contract in London to write original stories for Paramount Pictures, according to an announcement made this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Conrad's long list of books includes such well-known works as "Lord Jim," "Victory," "Chance," "Heart of Darkness," "Youth" and "The Nigger of the Narcissus." Mr. Conrad, it is announced, will soon go into the Paramount studios and work out one of his famous stories in co-operation with a prominent director and a trained scenario writer.

The other prominent authors recently signed by Paramount to write directly for the screen include Edward Knoblock, Elinor Glyn, Sir Gilbert Parker, Avery Hopwood and Henry Arthur Jones.

Huge Glass Curtain in Fox News No. 22

Exclusive motion pictures of the magnificent new National theatre of Mexico, with its huge glass curtain, weighing 27 tons, are in the current issue of Fox News, No. 22, in the second volume of the reel.

The unique curtain, composed of nearly a million separate pieces of glass, several inches thick and set in concrete, was designed by a New York artist, Harry Stoner, and executed by the Tiffany studios.

"The Furnace" Crowds House at Opening

A telegram from V. C. Bryan to Realart, dated December 21, says: "Arcadia opened to full house in afternoon. S. R. O. in evening. 'The Furnace' fine production and audience well pleased. Believe we could not have selected a better premiere."

"The Furnace" is a William D. Taylor special feature.

"Godless Men" Booked for Xmas Benefit

Christie Comics Compete in Philadelphia

Loew Books "Mark of Zorro"

DEPARTING from his customary policy of booking no picture for more than three or four days, Marcus Loew has arranged to play "The Mark of Zorro," Douglas Fairbanks' current release, at his theatres for a full week. This engagement is regarded by executives of the United Artists' organization as a high tribute to "Doug's" production.

In a letter to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, Nicholas M. Schenck, of the Loew offices, said:

"I have just returned to my office from a screening of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, "The Mark of Zorro," and I cannot refrain from telling you that I think it is really the most wonderful picture he has made.

"We believe the picture is so big that we have decided to play this feature in our theatres a full week instead of our usual policy, which has always been to play everything three or four days.

In the official organ of the Loew Enterprises, which is published weekly, its editor, Nelse Granlund, said that this was the first time in the history of their theatres that this had been done and that "Mr. Loew feels that this Fairbanks picture is so unusual that his patrons will want to see it twice. Also he predicts that every one who wants to see it will be unable to get in if played only three or four days.

The picture is far the greatest Fairbanks ever made, in the opinion of the "Big Four" officials, and it shows him in two roles, the weak-kneed son of wealth in the days of old California, and a daring bandit, who protects the weak and punishes the unjust. He is a master swordsman and leaves his victims with his skilled blade, a "Z" cut in their forehead, which becomes known as "The Mark of Zorro."

The Chicago Herald and Examiner in their review said that "Douglas Fairbanks always comes back with a bang. And he comes back this time with more of a bang than ever before and a much shrewder actor to boot. In the early reels of 'The Mark of Zorro,' where he is pretending to be an idling, spineless don, a weak-hipped lollypop, who yawns and yawns in the presence of his fiery father and his disgusted fiancee, he challenges the best of the film actors, for his facial play is restrained and effective.

"And how he does gape; 'yawn' don't express it. He GAPES. Even when the beautiful Marguerite de la Motte in a Spanish mantilla and sad eyes is before him he gapes.

"But that is his game, and to tell you why he gapes so would be to take a big suspense kick out of your life.

"At any rate, in Reel 3 the inevitable chase begins. That sneering Robert McKim, whose dirty-dog roles are dirtier and doggier than any one else's, and that roistering, vicious but humorous Noah Beery, who can play anything any time anywhere, those two scoundrels whip up a chase and take out after the masked rider, the mad rider, the mysterious rapier-slinging Zorro, terror of the oppressors, champion of the poor; Zorro, who carves a bloody "Z" on the faces of those who do his people wrong.

"Now for it! Up over walls, climbing churches, popping out of clocks, sticking fat enemies a posteriori, kicking them in the slats, jumping over jackasses, swinging on ropes, kissing quick and bounding to the rafter just ahead of a whickering knife. Romance and surprise thrills! Your own Mr. Fairbanks—irresistible!"

Pathe Review Hailed as Leader

IN a statement just received from the headquarters of Pathe Exchange, Inc., Pathe Review, the popular screen magazine, is presented as an important factor in the present movement for better pictures and general progress along lines of human interest, beauty and taste. Pathe Review was founded by Charles Pathe and became an established subject of interest in Europe over a decade ago before it was imported into this country. It has since become a permanent feature on the programs of the better-class motion-picture houses in the United States and Canada, says the Pathe statement, and "is known to be exercising a sensible influence in the direction of improving the quality of picture productions in general." The Pathe statement follows:

"These facts are gathered from the most authentic sources—the exhibitors themselves, which amounts to one of the most reliable signs that are pointing to a highly reassuring future for the whole field of motion picture production and exhibition. The charm of Pathe Color, which continues to maintain its acknowledged superiority, is felt everywhere. The garden spots of the world, even almost inaccessible wilderness nooks, are called upon to contribute their varying tints of Nature—cloud-wrapped mountain summits, isolated valleys and blooming fields of many countries. The time-stained architecture of the Old World, cathedrals, monuments, habitations in streets that have hardly changed their aspect in centuries, native costumes scarcely modified since feudal times, ancient customs, social and religious—all these are given their full significance through the fidelity to nature of Pathe Color, which also stands unrivalled in representations of flowers and foliage.

"As a magazine, Pathe Review adds continually to its status, giving to the picture screen the variety and competent selection of art and literary material expected of the world's best journals distributed in print. In the case of informative material, and of industrial subjects so acceptable to the practical-minded, its descriptive captions, concise and complete make the demonstrations conclusive. What is the process of making a Swiss watch? Of canning fruits and vegetables in great quantities? Of building a warship? Of making lace fabrics of intricate design for milady's gown? Of turning out a score of different products which the world consumes by the ship-load? Pathe Review explains all and clearly. Things that are impossible of analysis for intelligible explanation in print give up all their secrets to the Pathe slow motion picture miracle.
